Sealers Are All Rescued.

Crew of Greenland Were Taken Off Just In Time.

Disabled Ship Goes Down--Was Surrounded By Ice Floes--Vessel Broken at Stern and Full of Water--Men Had Decided to Take to Boats--Rescuers Appeared as the Ship Foundered.

St. John's, Nfld., April 1.—The sealing steamer Greenland, which became disabled on the sealing grounds early this week has sunk. All the members of her crew were rescued by the steamers Newfoundland and Erik.

The news of the loss of the Greenland was brought here Friday by the sealing steamer Algerine, which put in here from the sealing grounds with a broken rudder.

The Greenland, was abandoned on Tuesday. The gale which accompanied the severe blizzard of last Tuesday and the two following days, repeatedly drove her with terrific force against ice floes, with which she was surrounded.

On Monday an attempt was made to give the vessel steerage way in a sheet of open water, but the sails were blown away and the craft again became helpless. The gale dashed the broken propeller and shaft against the hull and forced open the stern, through which the water made its way to the hold.

The men kept the pumps working steadily, but could not free the hold. The decks had been crushed by the heavy pack ice and the crew saw that the steamer could not be kept afloat long.

On Tuesday more ice was encountered, and it was decided to abandon the Greenland and go on the ice floes. The boats which had escape damage were provisioned and the crew was about to leave the vessel when the sealing steamer Newfoundland was sighted.

The Newfoundland bore down upon the sinking steamer and took off the men. The Greenland foundered shortly after the rescue.

MUST DENY CHARGES.

Hon. E. R. Emmerson Will Head Off Bourassa's Onslaught.

Ottawa, April 1.—The attitude which Hon. H. R. Emmerson is likely to adopt towards the Bourassa movement on Wednesday has been a subject of speculation ever since the introduction of the Minister's name into the implications concerning "wine, women and graft" by The Fredericton, N. B., Gleaner.

But it is not probable Mr. Emmerson will wait for Bourassa' speech to make his reply. When the House meets on Wednesday the Minister will be in his place, it is said, and as a question of privilege will refer to The Gleaner's charges, give them a direct denial, and announce that he is about to take action for libel against the proprietors of the paper.

Less than this, indeed, Mr. Emmerson cannot afford to do, as it is the course that alone will satisfy the Prime Minister in view of the state to which public opinion has been wrought up by the late discussion in Parliament.

There would appear to be small prospect of Mr. Hyman's return to Canada before the end of the session. It is said that instead of coming home from Los Angeles, as was promised a week or more ago, Mr. Hyman will return to Colorado to-morrow for a further stay.

It is said that Sir Frederick Borden has canceled his passage by the Empress of Britain, on which he was to have sailed on April 5.

Street Railway Indicted.

Newark, N. J. April 1.—The North Jersey Street Railway Company was indicted by a grand jury on Saturday charged with maintaining dirty and unsanitary cars, providing useless fenders and allowing its cars to be overcrowded.

The indictment was returned to Chief Justice Gummere, who warned the jury a few days ago not to be influenced by public clamor against the company.

In its indictment the jury declared that "The indignation and protests of a long-suffering public, which have been interpreted by the court as 'public clamor', have not influenced the grand jury in its consideration of this question.

Killed In a Runaway.

Lethbridge, April 1.—The body of F. H. Singer, a rancher, has been found on the prairie and the news was brought to the city by Thomas and William Johnson, who found the body. It is probable that Mr. Singer was killed in a runaway.

Successor For Swettenham.

London, April 1.—King Edward has approved the appointment of Sydney Olivier to be Governor of Jamaica to succeed Sir Alexander Swettenham, who recently resigned, giving as the reason his advanced years.

LURED TO A DIVE.

Hamilton Girl Made Victim of White Slave Traffic.

Buffalo, April 1.—A white slave case, the second in a week, is engaging the attention of the district attorney's office of Buffalo. An 18-year-old girl named Annie Mathieson, whose home is in Hamilton, Ont., is the complaining witness. The accused parties are a man called "Soldier Mac" and a Tonawanda saloonkeeper. The prosecuting officials are keeping the whereabouts of the girl a close secret. Whether she is here in jail, or at a hospital somewhere, or confined in Tonawanda, can't be learned.

The girl's story is that she was lured from her home in Hamilton by the man called "Soldier Mac," who told her she could secure a good position at a place in Tonawanda. She was at the place for a time. She finally escaped one night by jumping out of a window with her clothes on her arm. She was taken under the care of the police.

CONVICT'S WIFE SHOOTS JUDGE.

Cheque Book and Pocketbook Turn Bullet Aside.

Ripon; Wis., April 1.—Mrs. W. H. Ogden, following the conviction of her husband for larceny of old iron, Saturday evening shot Justice of the Peace L. E. Nohlin in the court room, but the bullet was deflected by a cheque book and a pocketbook, saving his life.

She fired four other shots, three going wide of the mark, and one striking Charles Kashuba over the heart. He may die.

Mrs. Ogden was arrested.

Three Suicides at Falls.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., April 1.—An open letter found on the Third Sister Island just above the Falls yesterday morning, and signed "Tamai, 17 Concord street, Brooklyn," reads: "I will commit suicide in this fall."

Other letters found are addressed to parties in New York and Indianapolis.

James Liale, of Valleyfield, Que., a visitor here, reports having seen a man go down the upper rapids Saturday morning. He wore a blue jumper, and struggle fiercely to get out, but was swept to death.

If the Brooklyn man carried out his threat to commit suicide this will make the third life lost by going over the Falls since Friday night, a record unprecedented here.

Perishes In Theatre Fire.

Lockport, N.Y., April 1.—Albert Phillips, 21 years of age, operator of a moving picture machine in the Areana Theatre, was burned to death Saturday night. Phillips was in the box of the machine when it burst into flames. In the panic that followed Phillips was forgotten.

Woman Awed Thieves.

Cornwall, April 1.—Three young men broke in the door of A. H. McDonald's house, east of this place, on Friday and threatened to shoot Mrs. McDonald, who was alone, unless she gave them money. She drove them off with an axe.

That night three men stole a horse and rig near Summerstown and drove several miles, until the whole outfit fell into a culvert on the G. T. R.

Chief of Police Smyth sent out an alarm, and Constable Uren of Bainsville yesterday arrested Joseph Paiement, William Pounden and George McGranahan of Montreal as the men wanted.

Laurier Entertains Bryce.

Ottawa, April 1.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier entertained the British Ambassador, Rt. Hon. James Bryce, at luncheon yesterday. Some of the Cabinet Ministers were present, including Sir Richard Cartwright, Hon. A. B. Aylesworth and Hon. W. S. Fielding.

To-night the Ambassador will address the Canadian Club at the Russel House, and there will be a distinguished audience, including the Governor-General and the Premier.

British Income $775,182,290.

London, April 1.—The exchequer's return for the fiscal year ending Saturday night shows the total revenue of the United Kingdom to have been $775,182,290, an increase of $5,276,960 over the previous year.

The surplus balance in the treasury is $9,721,535.

Car Cleaners Stopped.

London, April 1.—The lid was on tight in London yesterday. Even the car cleaners were prevented from pursuing their usual employment, though the oilers were allowed to work.

TIMELY TOPICS.

That was a great April fool joke the weather man played on us this a. m. He handed us a January morning on the 1st of April!

The old story says that, as the wind blows on Easter Sunday, so it will blow for forty days. It came right straight from Bancroft yesterday, and if we're going to have a north wind for forty days the coal men can't reduce the price too suddenly.

Cheer up, though. We'll be longing for a little of that wind when the straw hats get ripe.

This is going to be a very poor season for maple sugar, so the farmers say. But don't you care. There will likely be plenty of new maple sugar and syrup just the same.

Plenty of boys and girls came home for Easter. And every one of 'em went back singing "There's no place like home."

"I say, Miss Bjones," said a young fellow yesterday, as he gazed on a beautiful new Easter creation, "that hat becomes you exceedingly, but I shouldn't care to sit behind it at the Minstrels on Wednesday night."

"Oh, well, you're not obliged to do that," replied the lady briskly, "you may sit beside it!"

N. B.—He got two fine seats at Riggs' this morning.

Yesterday was the finest day for hats and anthems we've seen for at least a year.

A contractor on the Pennsylvania State Capitol has gone the Ottawa grafters one better, having made 4,305 per cent. on his job.

An apparatus called the gyroscope having been invented to prevent ships rolling at sea, there is some hope for the man who has to roll home with a "jag" on.

After all, life holds some compensations for the Englishman who is wedded to a female suffragist. His wife can't houseclean, while she's in jail, anyway.

On chemical analysis WINDSOR TABLE SALT has been proved to contain 30% less impurity than the seven other principal salts on the market.

The conclusion is being reached that all-night banks are not a great success. It seems that the people who stay out all night have no bank accounts anyway.

A prominent physician says a man's hair usually turns gray five years sooner than a woman's. But a woman usually begins to worry about hers five years before the first gray hair appears.

A new fad among society women is to be photographed on the stairs, says an exchange. The stair pictures are artistic and very graceful, and they possess certain points that are novel in the photographic line, and the woman who is going to be photographed in this manner makes a study of certain things in advance. Of course she does. Pretty soon it will be de rigueur for the husband to be photographed on a step ladder, scraping down wall-paper, or out in the yard beating carpets.

Dr. Morley Currie, member for Prince Edward, in a speech before the Legislature favored a system of night schools in the country, giving lessons two nights a week in the urban municipalities. The high school curriculum, he said, could safely be divided so that a student could select a course adaptable to his future career. He advocated qualification for the university through the medium of the commercial faculty.

The Executive Board of the Ontario Lord's Day Alliance, which met the other day, passed the following resolution commending the Whitney Government for its adhesion to principle:

"That the Executive Board of the Lord's Day Alliance of Ontario, composed of representatives from all parts of the province, desires to express to the Honorable Premier of Ontario, the Government, and the Legislature, its sincere and cordial appreciation of the firm stand taken in the Private Bills Committee and in the House in favor of maintaining the Lord's Day as a day of rest and quiet in this province."

It were well and in the interests of temperance if the Alliance would follow suit, instead of foaming over the three-fifths vote. The Liquor Law has never been so rigidly enforced as it is to-day.

When we look at the price of groceries, Easter bonnets and other necessaries of life, we wonder where the W.C.T.U. ever got the idea that polygamy is likely to spread like wildfire.

"Nothing can prevent Parliament from purging itself in this matter except an abject fear of Fowler's 'data.' That fear was evident all through the debate. It is not a pleasant sight for the country to see its high court of Parliament tip-toeing cautiously about in terror of the threats of a fellow member. Yet that Fowler's menace is securing immunity for his 'private business,' is as plain as noon-day. All desire to stir up the animals' which was at first so rampant on the Ministerial benches has entirely disappeared. It is certainly a most fortunate thing for the country that the insurance commissioners were not amenable to this sort of terrorizing."

The Grit press, from the Toronto Globe down to the most insignificant pop-gun of the party, is justifying Sir Wilfrid Laurier for asking his suppliant majority in the Commons to reject Mr. Bourassa's motion for a committee to investigate "wine, women and graft" charges, on the ground that it were mere "gossip and idle rumor." Can a statement boldly made on the floor of Parliament that unless attacks upon a certain member ceased, he would expose the "wine, women and graft" transactions of members of the Government, and that he had the facts, be called "gossip and idle rumor?" The people can judge.

A telegram from Regina of the 28th March, says: "The Legislature this afternoon listened to an argument before the Committee of Privileges and Elections of the northern polls fraud, on the petition of S. J. Donaldson, Provincial Rights candidate, who was robbed of his seat by 141 bogus ballots cast in Bear Lake, Sandy Lake and Pine Point polls for Dr. Tyreman. Witnesses were on hand who proved that outside of a dozen or so of Indians not entitled to vote there were not in all five qualified electors in these three polls. The returning officer, Sinclair, failed to put in an appearance and was telegraphed for."

Sinclair need have no fear of punishment: the fraud was committed for the purpose of securing a seat for the Liberal candidate, for which the present Government will reward him by appointing him to office, as they did his pal.

"I am rather surprised that an institution which exists at present in the Roman Catholic Church has never been introduced into the principles of our Church. It is the only true medium by which a pastor can be to his congregation what he ought to be. I refer to the confessional." Such were the utterances of the Rev. John McKay of Crescent Street Presbyterian church, Montreal, on the 28th March, 1907, in his address at the induction at St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, Westmount. If there is any truth in the doctrine of the materialism of spirits, it is a wonder John Knox did not re-enact the Jenny Geddis episode, and hurl a stool at him.

The overdue debts of the Ontario Bank are now placed at $1,771,739. There are still $138,011 of Ontario Bank notes in circulation.

This seems to be the age of roguery. The State Supreme Court of Minneapolis on the 28th of March decided that Dr. Jacob F. Force must serve three and one-half years in the State prison, he having been convicted of appropriating funds of the Northwestern National Life Insurance Co. while he was its Vice-President.

Public opinion in this city is practically unanimous in favor of the policemen who have asked for more pay, but few uphold them in the rather arbitrary course they took. Ultimatums are unpleasant things, and are apt to antagonize people to whom they are addressed. The constables, we believe would be well advised were they to remain in the city's employ, and trust to the sense of fair play and common sense of the Police Commissioners. No man ever yet lost anything, by taking a moderate view of things in general. The Commissioners, we are told, will deal with the matter soon, but there will probably be no meeting for a few days.

Lawsuits galore. Geo. W. Fowler, M.P., told an interviewer in St. John, N. B., that as soon as he reached Montreal he would enter an action against the Montreal Star for libel, on account of an article which appeared in that journal against him a few days ago.

Reports from Ottawa say the Hon. Mr. Emmerson threatens the Fredericton Gleaner with a libel suit, for saying he and two women were turned out of a hotel in Montreal. Fowler, president of the Gleaner Printing Company, says he has heard nothing of said suit.

Emmerson is to deny the charge when the House meets to-day.

Eye Strain
CAUSES
Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

A Disloyal Judge.

Judge Longley, a disciple of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who for years was a member of the Nova Scotia Liberal Government, has been following in the footsteps of his leader, Sir Wilfrid, on the future of Canada.

It will be remembered by all Canadian political students that the Premier of Canada has upon a number of occasions declared his "day dreams" to be in favor of the independence of Canada, describing it as sure to come as the "ripe apple falls from the tree." This view he enunciated in Boston, Mass., and also on the floor of the House of Commons.

Longley, who by the by, is a literary prig, delights to ape greater men than himself, dabbles in magazine articles occasionally, upon obstruse questions, couched in what is termed "deep writing," which when interpreted means "not understandable by the writer nor by the reader."

This gentleman, though upon the Bench, where none but loyal men should be allowed to sit, has been telling the people of Halifax, in a speech delivered by him at a banquet, where he was a guest, given by the Mining Society of Nova Scotia, that "the time was coming "when Canada would become an in-"dependent nation, declaring that "he looked forward with pride and "hope to see the time when Canada "would become a most potential "factor among the nations of the "world," and then ventured "to "predict that some of those present "would live to see the day." This was too much for the loyal Britons present, and the report of the banquet says "He was shouted down and interrupted by loud cries of 'Never: stick to the Empire,' followed by considerable uproar, causing Longley to bring his remarks to a sudden close, the audience lustily singing 'Rule Britannia.'" A well-deserved snub to the learned Judge.

It is to be hoped Sir Wilfrid will receive the same reception whenever he again airs his "day dream" in Canada. It is time this incipient treason was frowned down.

Conditions In the Gas Department.

Conditions in the local Gas department, according to the chairman of Gas, Ald. Green, are O.K. They have all the men they want at the gas works, and all the gas needed is being made. Nobody need lose any sleep over conditions at the gas works. They are all right.

The Police Force.

This was the day named by the three constables, Messrs. Snider, Naphin and Hawkins, as the date on which their salaries must be boosted $150 per annum or they would be numbered among the missing. It was pointed out to the men that their sudden and peremptory demand did not look well, and that, after due consideration, the Commissioners would be prepared to talk business with them.

This morning Constable Snider did not report for duty, as it was his turn to do, and it was taken for granted that he had "jumped his job."

Constable Hawkins is ill, at his home, and we are told that he and Constable Naphin have consented to remain on the force temporarily, at all events, till some arrangements can be made for the future.

Special Constable Arnott is now on duty.

Test Of Hastings Ore.

Toronto, April 1. — An interesting test is being made with ore from the Silver King gold and copper mine of Hastings County at the Cobalt Concentrators' plant at 75 West Adelaide street. The test will be conducted up till Thursday next, and anyone interested is invited to witness the process. If the concentrating process is successful it will mean a big saving in shipping the output from the Hastings properties, and will materially add to the revenue from the producing mines in that district.

A Slight Blaze.

At 5.30 on Saturday afternoon the fire brigade was called out. A slight blaze upon the roof of the gas-house was the cause of alarm. The damage done was small, and the loss sustained is covered by insurance.

River Gives Up Body of Little Myrtle McCune's Alleged Assaulter.

Dead Body Found in Harbor This Afternoon--Papers Found Point to Confirmation of Report That Little Myrtie McCune's Would-be Assaulter Was a Lindsay Man--Great Excitement Caused by Incident.

Considerable excitement was caused upon the street about 1 o'clock to-day when it became rumored about that the body of a man had been found in the harbor, and that the said body was the mortal remains of "Jack the Hugger," who, last fall, was about the city and upon more than one occasion frightened young ladies and girls.

Whilst the theory may not be absolutely true, it is a fact that a body was recovered.

At about 12.30, Mr. Thomas Carter, of this city was upon Victoria Park, and whilst walking along on the west side, not many yards from the second culvert, noticed the body of a man floating near the embankment.

Mr. Carter secured a boat and then went and secured the body.

In the meantime the news had spread and in an incredibly short time many people were out upon the park.

The body was taken out of the water and laid upon the ground.

It was then seen that for weeks, if not months, the body had been in the water, as the flesh was peeling from off the hands and the countenance was unrecognizable.

After inspecting the clothing upon the "floater," some of the onlookers were positive that they had seen the party about the city last fall.

There was no overcoat about the body, but a large black sweater, beneath which was a vest and heavy underwear. The trousers were black and upon the feet were a pair of laced boots and new pair of lined rubbers.

Police Officer Arnott, who had in the meantime arrived upon the scene, made a hasty examination of the pockets and secured some papers. Amongst the latter was the stub of a post office order issued here on November 22nd, 1906, to Mrs. J. P. Berry, of Lindsay, and sent by J. Berry, of Belleville. No such party is known in this city. There was also a soiled letter, which bore a Lindsay post mark.

It will be remembered that, on the occasion of the assault on the little McCune girl last fall, a Lindsay party was suspected.

In the vest pocket was a watch, and attached to the same was a chain. Some $10 in money was found in another pocket.

Dr. Yeomans, coroner, who was present, ordered the body to be removed, and it was taken to Tickell & Sons undertaking.

As above stated, the general supposition is that the remains are those of the man who on Thursday evening, November 22nd last, made a daring attempt to assault the little girl Myrtle McCune near the residence of her grandmother on the river bank just north of the lower bridge. It will be remembered that the miscreant picked the child up in his arms and was taking her towards the bank of the river, which is only a few feet from her home. The outcry of the little one brought Mrs. McCune to her assistance, and just as she got up to where they were the man let go of the child and ran to the river. Other parties by that time were attracted to the scene by hearing the outcry, and an effort was made to find the wretch, but he managed to elude the pursuers. He was seen in the river by two or three persons, but owing to it being very dark his movements could not be detected.

The general supposition at the time was that the man went along in the river by the bank to the lower bridge, where he made his escape.

At the time of the affair the only clue the authorities had as to who committed the act was his hat, which was picked up near where little Myrtle was taken hold of. The hat is a stiff one, and nearly new, and bore the name of the maker, namely, Barrington & Co., Regent street, London.

This hat is still in the possession of the police, and a valise, which was about the same time left at the G.T.R. baggage room here, is still unclaimed.

These circumstances are a strong indication that the body is that of the party who committed the act. It is probable that, after taking to the river in the darkness, and not knowing the lay of the river he was drowned.

At the inquest no doubt some light will be shed, and the probability is that the identification will be complete.

Chief of Police Says "That's the Man we Were Looking For"

The Chief of Police was asked by The Intelligencer this afternoon:

"What was the name of the Lindsay man you were looking for last fall, who was believed to have committed the assault on the little McCune girl?"

He went by the name of J. Berry," said the Chief.

Then he added: "That's the man whose body was found in the harbor this afternoon."

Such would appear to be the end of one mystery.

Eastertide And Its Lessons For Mankind

OUR FRIEND THE PROFESSOR CONTRIBUTES ONE OF HIS POLISHED HOMILIES— "FOOD AND FUN," HE THINKS, CAN ONLY BE OBTAINED BY THOSE WHO EARN THEM.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Mr. Editor, — In this glad, glorious Easter week — glad for many, yet not without sorrow for those who are still weeping over departed friends—pulses beat a little faster, hearts warm to one another, and the mind—man's proudest attribute—insensibly glides into restful reflection. In the olden times "panem et circenses" was a cry very much in evidence and, to pagan Rome, seemed to have sufficed, but, in this age of strenuous struggle for existence "food and fun" will not long come in concert for the mere asking. This being a fact, and knowing the importance of striving for mental power as well as physical, so the battle of life may be fought and won, I have repeatedly wondered how it is that men seemingly intelligent, should, as you so often and so picturesquely put it "do the statue act" from dawn to dark, and this with every recurrent sun! You could excuse a knot of sad-eyed, indolent Bedouins in a desert, with not an incentive to action, but in this broad light and life, with every one astir around you, those parasites on the body social at a time when growing industry clamors for workers of all kinds—almost defy comprehension. The trouble may arise from a mistaken conception of the real aims of life. There may also be a plausible excuse in the fact that now-a-days "a good time" seems the one great desideratum. Add to this the spreading passion for sport of diverse description, and you will have the secret, with some, at least, of their indifference as regards learning. It was, therefore, with not a little pleasure I saw the other day the "little sermon" you preached to young men, calling upon them to fill full the place they are in; to fit themselves for higher usefulness, adding that there was something else to do besides play." But why delve into the mysteries of science and fix their eyes upon higher goals, where a baseball pitcher will receive more salary than the best bank manager or the most erudite editor? Not long ago a Senator and a pugilist died the same day in the same town. By a coincidence both funerals took place at the identical hour. Behind the sluggard there marched, with castdown countenances, an almost endless procession of the people: as to the lover of his country it was found difficult to secure a cab for his family, whilst other mourners could have been counted on your fingers. Now, that's a sad perversion of standards! You have no doubt read, Mr. Editor, about the lad who, on returning from college, was asked by his anxious father, who, of course, defrayed the bills, how he was in rhetoric, mathematics and social science. "Well, pa," said George, "I'll be frank with you; I am not much in any of these, but wait till you see me at football, and if I don't kick that wind bag out of sight into ether, then I am not your boy!" No doubt play, plenty of it, is good. "Mens sana in corpore sano" will long remain a commendable maxim, but it were well to remember that we, all of us, were born for something else besides fun and that life's chief purpose is not of the passing moment. I once knew a physician who, whatever the ailment, bled the patient, a method having its uses as likewise play when not carried too far. How different with the lad that hungers after priceless knowledge. Longfellow, when nine years old, was asked by his teacher, Mr. Finney, to go out and write a composition on anything he liked. Finding a turnip growing behind the barn, the lad who was to shine forth in the land wrote as follows:

Mr. Finney had a turnip
And it grew behind the barn,
And it grew, and it grew,
And the turnip did no harm.

And it grew, and it grew,
Till it could grow no taller,
Then Mr. Finney took it up
And put it in the cellar.

Simple, this first flap of the wing of genius! But it reveals the spirit that later was to rise to masterly wrought productions. There are in all latent possibilities of one sort or another, which with toil and a proper direction should mark a new era in our history. Right thinking will then be so apparent and brain storms so rare that no man's race or religion shall be accounted a bar to advancement in this fair land of Canada, which we all love, and, to the best of our ability, endeavor to serve.

At the risk of trespassing, I would fain submit one further word. Oh! how yesterday's spirit of "allegresse" song and festivity appealed to us, and how the words of the gifted pastor of St. Michael's moved and thrilled us as he, in peerless periods, recalled the deicide drama of Calvary and then painted in colors so vivid the triumph over death of the Son of Man and the all-important doctrine regarding the resurrection. Not forgetting those whose hearts were still bleeding by reason of recent bereavements, his thoughtful, kindly assurances must have proved very consoling, indeed.

PAUL DENYS.

Belleville, 1st April, 1907.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

has Borne our Griefs" ("Messiah") Handel; baritone solo, Granier's "Hosannah," sung by Mr. J. S. Dyer; concluding voluntary, "Hallelujah Chorus" ("Messiah") Handel. Evening: Organ prelude, "Sanctus," from St. Cecilia's Mass (Gounod); anthem, "Oh, Sacred Head" (Shepherd); offertory, "Comfort ye, My People" ("Messiah"), Handel; Mr. Dyer again sang, by request, "Hosannah"; organ postlude, "The Arm of the Lord," Haydn. The services throughout were very bright and inspiring, and the sermons told, in a masterly way, the old but ever new story of the Resurrection.

St. John's.

The services yesterday were throughout in keeping with Eastertide. The hymns sung and the lessons for the day were bearing upon the resurrection of the Saviour. Rev. Canon Bogert, the rector, preached two appropriate and thoughtful sermons.

St. Andrew's.

All the traditions of glorious Easter were yesterday observed in St. Andrew's, and the sermons by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Laidlaw, were thought-compelling and timely. At the evening service he preached to a large congregation from 1st Corinthians, 15th chapter. The idea of the resurrection was most wonderful, but so were nature's miracles wonderful, as was pointed out by the Saviour Himself, when He said, "Consider the lilies, how they grow. They toil not, neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." The choir, in splendid form, sang two anthems, "Victorious King" and "King All Glorious," the solos being finely taken by Miss Norah Lazier and Mr. James Brown.

The McMaster Band.

The mass meeting for men held in the opera house on Sunday afternoon and conducted by the McMaster Evangelistic Band, was well attended. A special feature of the service was the singing, by Mr. Williamson, of "The Pilot Song" and the negro slave song, "Steal Away," by the quartette. The singing certainly had much effect, as both selections were beautifully rendered. Rev. C. H. Emerson, pastor of the Baptist Church, took part in the service by reading the 2nd Psalm. Mr. Edwards, a member of the band, was the principal speaker and he gave an address that appealed to all. It was in relation to the life beyond and the necessity there was of preparing for that life. In the course of his remarks he said that the inevitable hour was coming to all. Death was an episode which would happen to all. It was the closing chapter of this life, but there was an everlasting life beyond. After the sleep of death there was an endless life. Mr. Cameron also gave a brief address upon two facts, namely, that sin was in our life and that Jesus Christ came upon earth to take away sin. The religion of the Lord Jesus Christ takes sin out of a man's nature. The speaker made an earnest appeal to all to accept Christ as the remedy for sin.

At the close a number of those present signified their intention of leading a better life.

The services in the Baptist Church yesterday were all under the auspices of the McMaster Band, and were very hearty and inspiring, the musical features being much admired.

Old Lady Dead.

Mrs. Almira Robinson, widow of the late Mr. Stephen Robinson, died this morning at the residence of her sister, Mrs. R. Lansing, south Charles street. Deceased, who was 72 years of age, had lived here for some time. She had been for years a member of the Methodist church. No family survives. In addition to the sister, here, another sister resides in Detroit, and a brother, Mr. Sylvester Purdy, lives in Tyendinaga.

EUREKA!

Yes, I Have Found it at Last.

Found what? Why that Chamberlain's Salve cures eczema and all manner of itching of the skin. I have been afflicted for many years with skin disease. I had to get up three or four times every night and wash with cold water to allay the terrible itching, but since using this salve in December, 1905, the itching has stopped and has not troubled me — ELDER JOHN T. Every hatchet-faced gossip is in her glory when it comes to wielding a hammer.

A QUESTION

WHEN EATING AN ORANGE WHY DO YOU THROW THE SKIN AWAY?

You immediately answer, because the skin is indigestible, unpalatable, useless.

This delicious and nutritious fruit has a parallel in cod liver oil. Over fifty medicinal alkaloids or curative elements are to be found in the cod's liver, and for centuries people have been swallowing the greasy, indigestible, nauseating oil, either in its raw form or in an emulsion, to get the benefit of these medicinal elements.

Now it has been proven by two celebrated French chemists that the oil which envelopes the curative properties found in the cod's liver is just as useless as the skin of an orange, and have discovered a way to separate all of these medicinal elements from the oil, retaining all that is good and eliminating the bad, and thus make Vinol.

This will explain what a valuable medicine Vinol is, and why it is superseding old-fashioned cod liver oil and emulsions, and why it has been so successful in curing stomach troubles, giving strength and renewed vitality to the weak, rundown and aged, and curing chronic coughs, colds and building up the convalescent, and it is because we know so well of what Vinol is made that we unhesitatingly offer to return money in every case where it fails. THE FIRST MARLBOROUGH.

His Was a Curious Combination of Contradictory Traits.

Herbert Paul in his book on Queen Anne of England paints a queer picture of the great Duke of Marlborough.

He was not truthful. He was not straightforward. He was not honest. In his love of money and his capacity for hoarding it he rivaled those wretched misers who have done no more than contemplate their gains. And yet, such are the strange freaks in which nature indulges, this mean and selfish intriguer was endowed with perfect courage, with an irresistible charm of manner, with a temper which even his wife failed to disturb, with a brain that no sophistry could obscure and with a military genius before which criticism is humbly silent.

He was treacherous even in a treacherous age. Wholly devoid of cruelty and by nature humane, he is said never to have sacrificed an unnecessary life. He used his fellow creatures for his own purposes, and when he had no further use for them he forgot their existence. He made his plans and carried them out with the absolute efficiency of sheer intelligence and the serene implacability of impersonal fate.

THE SULTAN'S SCREEN.

It Is Made of Tanned Human Skin Elaborately Decorated.

There is a story told of a famous and curious screen which occupies a prominent place in the menage of the sultan of Turkey. It is made, so rumor hath it, of human skin, perfectly tanned and elaborately tooled and embossed, and it has been in the royal quarters for more than two centuries. This remarkable screen is not an evidence of cruelty or barbarity on the part of Turkey's ruler 200 years ago, but is a memorial to twelve faithful servants of a former sultan. At one time during the sultan's reign 200 years ago a wing of the palace caught fire, and during the conflagration a much loved member of the sultan's family was rescued by twelve servants. The twelve servants perished, some of them dying later of their wounds and burns, so his majesty had their skins removed by an expert and had them preserved in this touching though remarkable manner. The screen is now looked upon as a part of the ruler's inheritance, and it is said that every sultan cherishes it almost as he would his own royal skin.

THE AGE OF FISHES.

Both Ear Stones and Scales Carry the Annual Tally.

It has been found by ichthyologists that the age of a fish may be read from its scales. These increase in size by annular growths, two rings being formed each year. The "otoliths" or ear stones, which lie in two sacs on either side of the base of the cranial cavity, afford another means of determination.

Like the scales, the otoliths increase by two rings annually. Each spring—that is, from February to June—a white ring is formed, and each autumn—that is, from July to October—a black one. Thus the number of either white or black rings in an otolith gives the age of the fish in years. In the case of flatfish the latter method has been found more reliable, whereas in the case of the cod the scales give a better result. Although varying much in size and shape in different species, the otoliths show a remarkable constancy in the same species; hence they are of considerable value in the diagnosis of a species.—London Globe.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE PULSE OF CHANGE.

The old order changeth, yielding place to new,
Especially with us,
The eager crowds that "Parsifal" once drew
"Salome" now discuss,
"Dearie" usurps the place of "Nancy Brown."
Change upon change we see.
The clarion cry, "Go 'way back and sit down,"
Is lost in "Twenty-three."
So from the first eternal order ran,
From Pigs in Clover to the Age of Ann.

The poet finds the compass out of line,
Another guide more true,
"True as the gyroscope my heart to thine,"
Such in his figure new.
And lovesick swains of "plant creations" speak,
That Burbank did devise.
"Soft as a cactus is thy mantling cheek,"
The modern lover sighs.
Irate indeed is gone with all his rose,
Like balloon sleeves. And elbow gloves, who knows?

From shops where once rhymed valentines we bought
The picture post-card stares;
Little toy dogs, with rust and pathos fraught,
Give way to Teddy bears.
And so we see how rolls this mundane ball,
Why for a purpose quest?
How doubt that this will soon become of all
Possible worlds the best,
When very children broaden slowly down
From little Fauntleroy to Buster Brown?

If Canadians join, it will be a ceremonial celebration not of the thousand wars of old but of the thousand years of peace of which the first hundred is well-nigh complete—a burial of the hatchet which has long been a mere traditional curiosity, for the two peoples have long dwelt together without bitterness. Everybody knows, paradoxical as it may seem, that the chief cause of the recent great financial decline in the security markets was universal prosperity. It was not the result of the exposures set on foot by Mr. Roosevelt, whose action was not needed to inform Wall Street of what it pretty well knew, but was needed to put a stop to such proceedings as those of Mr. Harriman. "Too much prosperity," too many enterprises calling for funds, are expressions heard on all sides, and Canada has suffered almost as much pro rata to population and working resources as has the great country across the international boundary.

ARMAMENT LIMITATION.

Great Britain Demands Subject Be Discussed at Hague Conference.

London, April 1.—Great Britain has made a formal and official request upon Russia to include in the program of the next Hague conference the question of the limitation of the expenditure on armaments, and through her ambassadors and Ministers she has notified the powers of this action.

This was done some days ago and up to the present time the Foreign Office has not been advised of any opposition to Great Britain's proposal.

Neither has Great Britain learned the nature of the negotiations that have been going on in St. Petersburg between the ambassadors of Germany and Austria and Emperor Nicholas, but it is believed the exchanges have had to do with the form in which the subject of disarmament should be introduced, and that they have not been aimed at keeping it off the program.

The reports emanating from the continent that Great Britain and the United States would withdraw from the conference if their wishes to discuss the limitation of armaments were not complied with, and that Germany and Austria would follow a similar course if Russia included this question in the program, are stigmatized by officials of the Foreign Office here as pure inventions.

"That any power would thus break up the conference, which doubtless will render much good to the cause of humanity, because all its wishes do not meet with favor, is incredible," said a foreign official Saturday.

Great Britain, supported by America, Japan and Italy, will continue to press her point, with every confidence in a successful outcome.

GOT LABOR FROM CANADA.

Judgment In Suit of International Iron Moulders Union.

Cleveland, April 1.—Action against the Altman Manufacturing Company, of Canton, Ohio, charged with importing alien contract labor into the United States for the purpose of breaking a strike, was dismissed by Judge Taylor in the Federal Court. The case has been in court three years. The counts were nulled on recommendation of the Department of Justice at Washington.

The suit was instituted by the organization of the International Iron Moulders of America. It was alleged that when the moulders were on strike at Canton the employers imported several hundred foreigners from Canada to take the places of the strikers. The ground on which the nolle was based was that while the men came here from Canada, and although they had not taken out naturalization papers they had been employed previously in the United States.

ENGLAND'S GLOOMY OUTLOOK.

Irish Priest Says All Big Towns Are On Down Grade.

London, Eng., April 1.—Father Bernard Vaughan was exceedingly bitter in his condemnation of society Saturday in the fourth of the Lenten discourses, which he is delivering at the beautiful Church of the Immaculate Conception in Farm Street.

"Is it true," declared the preacher, "that, with the exception of certain towns in Ireland, all the big towns in the United Kingdom are on the down grade? Ireland still gives the Empire pure women and brave men.

"If England and Ireland were weighed in the balance before God, it would be a bad day for England.

"England and France, in this entente cordiale embrace, are slipping down a slimy incline, and the end, if we do not rouse ourselves, must be the bottomless pit."

ALASKA SALMON.

Procession of the Four Varieties of This Superb Fish.

"There is nothing more curious connected with the finny tribe than to watch the doings of the salmon family in Alaska," said an Alaskan dealer.

"The most singular thing of all is that after the females deposit their spawn their earthly career terminates, and I have seen the bottoms of creeks covered with their dead bodies. They give birth to thousands of their kind and immediately die. The young ones are then taken care of by the male salmon, and it is a well known fact that in three years from their birth the offspring reappear on the very ground of their origin. There are four varieties of this superb fish which make their appearance in regular order of succession.

"In the spring the first to arrive is the magnificent king salmon, which weighs all the way from fifteen to ninety pounds. About June 1 comes the sookey or red salmon, which visits our shores in enormous numbers and which is the common canning variety. A little later appears the log salmon, which only the Indians will eat, and finally, in August and September, the beautiful silver salmon arrives, the prettiest fish in all the world and one of the most palatable.

"When the salmon enter the fresh water by a curious trick of nature their skin becomes red, but this pink hue does not affect the whiteness of their flesh. It is seldom that salmon will journey up a glacier stream, but the streams that have lakes at their heads literally swarm with them."

ATTACKING A SYSTEM.

It Involves Attacking the Men That Uphold the System.

On every side I hear strange insistence upon the fact that it is only the system that is wrong. I hear people utter the following extraordinary words: "We do not attack individuals."

What, in the name of the seven planets, can you attack except individuals? How can one fight a system? If a system came into this room, what would you do to it? Would you take a gun or a fencing foil or a butterfly net or a horsewhip or a disinfectant?

A system only exists in the minds of men, and if there is a very vile system in the minds of men there must be something very vile about their minds.

I do not say that they may not have other virtues along with the qualities that make the bad system. I do not say that the upholders of any bad system are without any moral merits. I do not say that Italian brigands are without any moral merits. But, however good or evil may be mingled in the character of an Italian brigand, nobody ever said that in dealing with persons of that profession you were not to attack individuals.

You do not, in dealing with brigands, say that you merely attack the system. You attack the brigands—that is, supposing that you are in possession of the adequate bodily courage.—G. K. Chesterton in Illustrated London News.

Thackeray's Pantomime.

William Makepeace Thackeray was always too genial, too generous, too open handed, to be an accumulator of this world's goods, and in spite of the large earnings of his pen he died a poor man. Shortly before his death his friend, John Leech, the cartoonist, called upon him and found him in his study writing—writing and sighing at the monotony of his work.

"Why don't you have a holiday," said Leech, "and take your girls to the seaside?"

The great novelist made no verbal answer, but, rising slowly, plunged his hands to the very bottom of his pockets, brought these receptacles out, shook them vigorously without eliciting a rattle of coin, replaced them and then resumed his seat.

Strength of the Condor.

The enormous strength of the condor is only equaled by his voracity and boldness. This immense bird often pounces upon small animals, but from the shape and bluntness of his claws he is unable to carry anything very heavy, so he contents himself with fixing it against the ground with one of his claws, while with the other and his powerful beak he rends it to pieces. Gorged with food, the bird then becomes incapable of flight and may be approached, but any attempt at capture is furiously resisted.

Cure For a "Nagging" Woman.

Having advertised as a widower in search of wife No. 2, a man of St. Gall, Switzerland, showed the fifty replies and photographs which he had received to his wife, and, stating that if she did not want him there were others who did, he effectively cured her of her "nagging" habits.

He Read the Signs.

"And now, little boys," said the pretty Sunday school teacher, "we have seen that it is ordained that every human being must some day come to his death. And what comes after dying?"

"Cleaning and pressing," yelped a boy, who was familiar with window signs.

Influence of Scotchwomen.

It is not surprising to find that those qualities—intellect, grit and strenuous endeavor—that have brought the manhood of Scotland to the front should also be a marked characteristic of Scotchwoman. — Englishwoman's Review.

When we read, we fancy we could be martyrs; when we come to act, we cannot bear a provoking word.—Hannah More.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

[There was a real "No. 101." Unpublished M.S. despatches now in the Record Office of the British Museum reveal the interesting fact that on more than one occasion the British Government obtained important French state secrets through an agent known to the British Ministers as "No. 101." Who this mysterious agent was, whether it was a man or a woman, why and how he or she so successfully played the part of a traitor, have not, so far as is known to the present writer, been discovered by historians or archivists. The references in the confidential correspondence supply no answer to such questions. If the British Ministers knew all the truth they kept it to themselves and it perished with them. Doubtless there were good reasons for strict secrecy. But it is more than possible that they themselves did not know, that throughout they simply dealt with a cipher, whose secret they never penetrated. It is, however, clear that "No. 101" was in a position to discover some of the most intricate designs in the policy of the French Court, and that the British Government, through agents, was satisfied of the genuineness of the secrets for which it paid handsomely.—W. C.]

CHAPTER I.

One evening in the January of 1745, the critical year of Fontenoy and of the great Jacobite rising, a middle-aged gentleman, the private secretary of a Secretary of State, was working as usual in the room of a house in Cleveland Row. The table at which he sat was littered with papers, but at this precise moment he had leaned back in his chair with a puzzled expression and his left hand in perplexity pushed his wig awry.

"Extraordinary," he muttered, "most extraordinary." The remark was apparently caused by an official letter in his other hand—a letter marked "Most Private," which came from The Hague, and the passage which he had just read ran:

"I have the honor to submit to you the following important communication in cipher, received, through our agent at Paris, from 'No. 101,'" etc.

On the table lay the cipher communication together with a decoded version which the secretary now studied for the third time. In explicit language the despatch supplied detailed information as to certain recent highly confidential negotiations between the Jacobite party in Paris and the French King, Louis XV., a revelation in short of the most weighty state secrets of the French Government.

"'No. 101,'" the secretary murmured, scratching his head, "always 'No. 101.' It is marvellous, incredible. How the devil can it be done?"

But there was no answer to this question, save the fact which provoked it—that closely ciphered paper with its disquieting information so curiously and mysteriously obtained.

"Ah." He jumped up and hurriedly straightened his wig. "Good evening to you."

The new-comer was a man of about five-and-thirty, tall, finely built, and of a muscular physique, with a face of considerable power. Most noticeable, perhaps, in his appearance was his air of disciplined reserve, emphasized in his strong mouth and chin, but almost belied by the glow in his large, dark eyes, which looked you through and through with a strangely watchful innocence.

"There is work to be done, sir?" he asked as he took the chair offered.

"Exactly. To-day we have received most gratifying and surprising information from our friend 'No. 101'—and we have the promise of more."

"Yes." The brief monosyllable was spoken almost softly, but the dark eyes gleamed, as they roamed over the room.

"The communications from 'No. 101' have begun again," the secretary pursued; "that in itself is interesting. The Secretary of State therefore desired me to send at once for you, the most trustworthy secret agent we have. In a very few minutes Captain Statham of the First Foot Guards will be here—"

"Sent, I think, from the Low Countries at the request of our agents at The Hague?"

"Ah, I see you are as well informed as usual. You are quite right. Are you," he laughed, "ever wrong?"

The spy paused. "The communications then from 'No. 101' concern the military operations?" was all he said.

"Not yet. But," he almost laughed, "we have a promise they will. You know the situation. This will be a critical year in Flanders. Great Britain and her allies propose to make a great, an unprecedented effort; his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland will have the supreme command. Unhappily the French under the Marechal de Saxe apparently propose to make even greater efforts. With such a general as the Marechal against us we cannot afford to neglect any means, fair or foul, by which his Royal Highness can defeat the enemy."

"Then you wish me to assist 'No 101' in betraying the French plans to our army under the Duke of Cumberland?"

"Not quite," the other replied; "we cannot spare you as yet. But you have had dealings with this mysterious cipher, and we ask you to place all your experience at the disposal of Captain Statham."

"I agree most willingly," was the prompt answer.

"This curious 'No. 101,'" continued the secretary slowly, "you do not know personally, I believe?"

The other was looking at him carefully but with a puzzled air.

"I ask because—because I am deeply curious."

"I am as curious as yourself, sir. 'No. 101' is to me simply a cipher number,—nothing more, nothing less."

"I feared so," said the secretary. "But is it not incredible? The information sent always proves to be accurate, but there is never a trace of how, why, or by whom it is obtained."

"That is so. Secrecy is the condition on which alone we get it. We pay handsomely—we obtain the truth—and we are left in the dark."

"Shall we ever discover the secret, think you?"

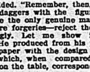
"I am sure not." The tone was conviction itself.

At this moment Capt. Statham was ushered in, a typical English gentleman and officer, ruddy of countenance, blue-eyed, frankness and courage in every line of his handsome face and of his athletic figure.

"Captain Statham—Mr. George Onslow of the Secret Service—" the secretary began promptly, adding with a laugh as the two shook hands: "Ah, I see you have met before. I am not surprised. Mr. Onslow knows everybody and everything worth knowing." He gathered up a bundle of papers. "That is the communication from 'No. 101' and the covering letter. And now, gentlemen, I will leave you to your business." He bowed and left the room.

Onslow took the chair he had vacated and for a quarter of an hour Captain Statham and he chatted earnestly on the position of affairs in the Low Countries, and the war then raging from the Mediterranean to the North Sea, on the vast efforts being made by the French for a great campaign in the coming spring, the military genius of the famous Marechal de Saxe, the Austrian and Dutch allies of Great Britain, and the new English royal commander-in-chief who was shortly to leave to take over the work of saving Flanders from the arms of Louis XV. Onslow then briefly explained what the Secret Service agents of the Duke of Cumberland were to expect and why.

"Communications," he wound up, "from this mysterious spy and traitor, 'No. 101,' invariably come like bolts from the blue. They are, of course, always in cipher and they will reach you by the most innocent hands—a peasant, a lackey, a tavern wench—sometimes you will simply find them, say, under your pillow, or in your boots. No one can tell how they get there. But never neglect them, however strange or unusual their contents may be, for they are never wrong—never! The genuine ones you will recognize by this mark—" he took up the ciphered paper and put his fingers on a sign— "two crossed daggers and the figures 101 written in blood—you see—so":



Captain Statham stared at the sign, entranced.

"A soldier," Onslow remarked with his slow smile, "can always distinguish blood from red ink—is it not so?" Statham nodded. "Remember, then, those crossed daggers with the figures in blood are the only genuine mark. All others are forgeries—reject them unhesitatingly. Let me show it you again." He produced from his pocket-book a paper with the design in the corner, which, when compared with the one on the table, corresponded exactly.

"I warn you," Onslow added, "because the existence of this 'No. 101' is becoming known to the French—they suspect treachery—their Secret Service is clever and they may attempt to deceive you. As they do not know the countersign, though they may have guessed at the treachery of 'No. 101' they cannot really hoodwink you. Cipher papers which come in the name of '101' without that remarkable signature are simply a nom de guerre, of politics, of love, of anything you like, but they are either a forgery or a trap; so put them in the fire."

Statham sat pondering, his eyes riveted on the crossed daggers. "You, sir," he began, "have had dealings with this mysterious person. Is it a man or a woman?"

"Ah!" Onslow laughed gently. "Every one asks that, every man at least. I cannot answer; no one, indeed, can. My opinion? Well, I change it every month. But these are the facts: It is absolutely certain that the traitor insists on high, very high pay; absolutely certain that he or she has access to the very best society in Paris and at the Court, and is at home in the most confidential circles of the King and his ministers. We have even had documents from the private cabinet of Louis XV. Furthermore, the traitor can convey the information in such a way as to baffle detection. If it is a woman she is a very remarkable one; if it be a man he is one who controls important women. Perhaps it is both. Such knowledge, so peculiar, so accurate, so extensive, such skill and such ingenuity scarcely seem to be within the powers of any individual man or woman."

"Every word you say sharpens my surprise and my curiosity."

"Yes, and every transaction you will have with the cipher will sharpen it more and more. I have been fifteen years in the Secret Service, but this business is to-day as much a puzzle as it ever was, for 'No. 101' has taught me a very important secret, one unknown even to the French King's ministers, which, so jealously guarded as it is, may never be discovered in the King's lifetime or at all. Can you really believe that Louis, while professing to act through his ministers, has stealthily built up a little secret service of his own whose work is to spy on those ministers, on his ambassadors, generals, and their agents, to receive privately instructions wholly different from what the King has officially sanctioned, and frequently directly to thwart, check, annul, and defeat by intrigue and diplomacy the official policy of their sovereign?"

"Is it possible?"

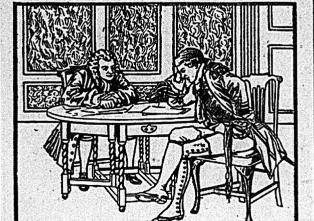
"It is a fact," Onslow said emphatically. "But the King, 'No. 101,' you and I and one or two others alone know it. Let me give you a proof. To-day officially Louis through his ministers has disavowed the Jacobites. The ministers believe their master is sincere; many of them regret it, but their instructions are explicit. In truth, through those private agents I spoke of, the King is encouraging the Jacobites in every way and is actually thwarting the steps and the policy which he has officially and publicly commanded."

"And the ministers are ignorant of this?"

"Absolutely. But mark you, unless the King is very careful, some day there will come an awkward crisis. His Majesty will be threatened with the disclosure of this secret policy which has his royal authority, but which gives the lie to his public policy, equally authenic. And unless he can suppress the first he must be shown to be doubly a royal liar—not to dwell on the consequences to France."

"What a curious king!" Statham ejaculated.

"Curious!" Onslow laughed softly; "more than curious, because no one knows the real Louis. The world says he is an ignorant, superstitious, indolent, extravagant, heartless dullard in a crown who has only two passions—hunting and women. It is true; he is the prince of hunters and the emperor of rakes. But he is also a worker, cunning, impenetrable, obstinate, remorseless."



Statham sat pondering, his eyes riveted on the crossed daggers.

"But why does he play such a dangerous game?"

"God knows. The real Louis no man has discovered, or woman either; he is known to the Almighty or the devil. But you observe what chances this double life gives to our friend 'No. 101.'"

Statham began to pace up and down. "What are the traitor's motives?" he demanded, abruptly.

"Ah, there you beat me." Onslow rose and confronted him. "My dear sir, a traitor's motives may be gold, or madness, ambition, love, jealousy, revenge, singly or together, but above all love and revenge."

Statham made an impatient gesture. "I would give my commission," he exclaimed "to know the meaning of this mystery."

A sympathetic gleam lingered in Onslow's eyes as he calmly scrutinized the young officer. "Ah," he said, almost pityingly, "you begin to feel the spell of this mystery wrapped in a number, the spell of 'No. 101,' the fatal spell."

"Fatal?" Statham took him up sharply.

"Yes, I must warn you. Every single person who, in his dealings with this cipher, has got near to the heart of the truth has so far met with a violent end. It is not pleasant, but it is a fact. And the explanation is easy. Those who might betray the truth are removed by accident or design, some by this method, some by that. They pass into the silence of the grave, perhaps just when they could have revealed what they had discovered." He paused, for Statham was visibly impressed. "Really there is no danger," he added; "but I say as earnestly as I can, because you are young, and life is sweet for the young, for God's sake stifle your curiosity, resist the spell—that fatal spell. Take the information as it comes, and ask no questions, push no inquiries, however tempting and easy the path to success seems, or, as sure as I stand here, His Majesty King George the Second will lose a promising and gallant officer."

Statham walked away and resumed his seat. "And you, Mr. Onslow?" he demanded, looking up with the profoundest interest.

"Do I practice what I preach? Well, I am a spy by profession: to some men such a life is everything—it is, at least, to me. But I do not conceal from myself that if my curiosity overpowers me my hour for silence, too, will come—the silence of the unknown grave in an unknown land."

"Then is no one ever to know?" Statham muttered with childish petulance.

"Probably not. A hundred years hence the secret that baffles you and me will baffle our successors."

Statham's heels tapped on the floor. "Perhaps," he pronounced, slowly, "perhaps the truth is well worth the price that is paid for it—death and the silence of the grave."

Onslow stared at him. His eyes gleamed curiously as if they were fixed on visions known only to the inner mind. "Perhaps," he repeated gravely. "But really," he added, with a sudden lightness, "there is no one to persuade us it is so. Come, Captain Statham, you have not forgotten supper, I hope, and that I propose to introduce you to-night to the most seductive enchantress in London?"

"No, indeed. All day I have been hungering for that supper. In the Low Countries we do not get suppers presided over by ladies as you have described to me."

"In the French army they have both the ladies and the suppers," Onslow replied, laughing. "And, my dear Captain, to the victors of the spring will fall the spoils. To-night shall be a foretaste, and if my enchantress does not make you forget 'No. 101,' I despair of the gallantry of British officers."

He locked up the papers, chatting all the time, and then the two gentlemen went out together.

CHAPTER II.

For some minutes the pair walked in silence, as if each was still brooding on the mysterious cipher whose treachery to France had brought them together. But presently Statham touched Onslow on the arm. "Tell me," he said, "something of this enchantress. I am equally curious about her."

"And I know very little," Onslow replied. "Her mother, if you believe scandal, was a famous Paris flower girl, who was mistress in turn to half the young rakes of the noblesse; her father is supposed to have been an English gentleman. Your eyes will tell you she is gifted with a singular beauty, which is her only dowry. Gossip says that she makes that dowry go a long way, for she has two passions, flowers and jewels."

"And she resides in London?"

"She resides nowhere," Onslow answered with his slow smile; "she is here to-day and away to-morrow. I have met her in Paris, in Brussels, Vienna, Rome. She talks French as easily as she talks English, and wherever she is her apartments are always haunted by the men of pleasure, and by the grand monde. Women you never meet there, for she is not a favorite with her own sex, which is not surprising."

"Pardon," Statham asked, "but is she—is she, too, in the Secret Service?"

"God bless my soul! No; we don't employ ladies with a passion for jewels. It would expose them and us to too many temptations. And, besides, politics are the one thing this goddess abhors. Eating, drinking, the pleasures of the body, poetry, philosophy, romance, the arts, and the pleasures of the mind she adores; luxury and jewels she covets, but politics, no! They are a forbidden topic. For me her friendship is convenient, for the politicians are always in her company. When will statesmen learn," he added, "that making love to a lady such as she is is more powerful in unlocking the heart and unsealing the lips than wine?" "And her name?"

"She has not got one. 'Princess' we call her and she deserves it, for she is fit to adorn the Palace of Versailles."

"Perhaps," said Statham, "she will some day."

"Not a doubt of it—if Louis will only pay enough."

They had reached the house. Statham noticed that Onslow neither gave his own nor asked for his hostess's name. He showed the footman a card, which was returned, and immediately they were ushered into two handsome apartments with door leading the one into the other, and in the inner of the two they found some half-dozen gentlemen talking. Three of them wore stars and ribbons, but all unmistakably belonged to that grand monde of which Onslow had spoken. From behind the group the lady quietly walked forward and curtsied deferentially to Statham, who felt her eyes resting on his with no small interest as his companion kissed her hand. The secret agent had not exaggerated. This woman was indeed strikingly impressive. About the middle height, with a slight but exquisitely shaped figure, at first sight she seemed to flash on you a vision composed of dark masses of black hair, large and liquid blue eyes, and a dazzling skin, cream tinted. Dressed in a flowing robe of dark-red, she wore in her hair blood-red roses, while blood-red roses twined along her corsage, which was cut, not without justification, daringly open. Her bare arms, her theatrical manner, and the profusion of jewels which glittered in the candlelight suggested a curious vulgarity, which was emphasized by her speech, for her English, spoken with the ease of a native, betrayed in its accent rather than its words evidence of low birth. Yet all this was forgotten in the mysterious charm which clung about her like a subtle and intoxicating perfume, and as Statham in turn kissed her jewelled hand, a fleeting something in her eyes, at once pathetic and vindictive, shot with a thrill through him.

"An English officer and a friend of Mr. Onslow," she remarked, "is always amongst my most welcome guests," and then she turned to the elderly fop in the star and ribbon and resumed her conversation.

Statham studied her carefully. Superb health, a superb body, and a reckless disregard of convention she certainly had, but the more he observed her the more certain he felt that that wonderful skin as well as those lustrous blue eyes and alluring eyebrows owed more to art than to nature. In fact every pose of her head, every line in her figure, the scandalous freedom of her attire were obviously intended to puzzle as much as to attract—and they succeeded. She was the incarnation of a fascination and of a puzzle.

Two more gentlemen had arrived, and Statham was an interested spectator of what followed.

"Princess," the new-comer said, "I present to you my very good friend the Vicomte de Nerac."

The lady turned sharply. Was it the visitor's name or face which for the moment disturbed her equanimity?—yet apparently neither the Vicomte nor she had met before.

"Welcome, Vicomte," she said, so swiftly recovering herself that Statham alone noticed her surprise, if it was surprise. "And may I ask how a Capitaine-Lieutenant of the Chevau-legers de la Garde de la Maison du Roi happens to be in England when his country is at war?"

"You know me, Madame!" the Vicomte stammered looking at her in a confusion he could not conceal.

The lady laughed. "Every one who has been in Paris," she retorted, "knows the Chevau-legers de la Garde, and the most famous of their officers is Monsieur the Vicomte de Nerac, famous, I would have these gentlemen be aware, for his swordsmanship, for his gallantries—and for his military exploits which won him the Croix de St. Lous."

"You do me too much honor, Madame," the Vicomte replied.

"As a woman I fear you, as a lover of gallant deeds and as a fencer myself I adore you, as do all the ladies whether at Versailles or in Les Halles," she laughed again. "But you have not answered my question. Why are you in England, Monsieur le Vicomte?"

"Nine months ago I had the misfortune to be taken prisoner, Madame, but in three weeks I return to my duty as a soldier and a noble of France." He bowed to the company with that incomparable air of self-confidence tempered by the dulcet courtesy which was the pride of Versailles and the despair of the rest of the world.

"And here," the lady answered, "is another gentleman who also shortly returns to his duty. Captain Statham of the First Foot Guards, Monsieur le Vicomte de Nerac of the Chevau-legers de la Garde. Perhaps before long you will meet again, and this time not in a woman's salon."

"When Captain Statham is taken prisoner," the Vicomte remarked, smiling, "I can assure him Paris is not less pleasant than London, but till then he and I must agree to cross swords in a friendly manner for the favors of yourself, Princess."

"And you think you will win, Vicomte?"

"It is impossible we can lose," the Vicomte replied. "Not even the gallantry of the First Foot Guards can save the allies from the genius of Monseigneur the Marechal de Saxe."

"We will see," Statham responded gruffly.

"Without a doubt, sir." The Vicomte bowed.

Statham stared at him stolidly. He could hardly have guessed that this exquisitely dressed gentleman with the slight figure and the innocently grand air was really a soldier, and above all an officer in perhaps the most famous cavalry regiment of all Europe, every trooper in which, like the Vicomte himself, was a noble of at least a hundred years' standing, but he was reluctantly compelled to confess that the stranger was undeniably handsome, and his manner spoke of an ease and a distinction beyond criticism. His smile, too, was singularly seductive in its sweetness and strength, and his brown eyes could glitter with marvellous and unspeakable thoughts. From that minute he seemed to imagine that his hostess belong to him: he placed himself next her at supper, he absorbed her conversation, and still more annoying, she willingly consented. Statham in high dudgeon had to listen to the polite small talk of his English neighbor, conscious all the while that at his elbow the Vicomte was chattering away to "the princess" in the gayest French. And after supper he along with the others was driven off to play cards while the pair sat in the other room alone and babbled ceaselessly in that infernal foreign tongue.

"The Vicomte," Onslow said coolly, "has made another conquest."

"Is it true, then, that he is a fine swordsman as well as a rake?"

"Quite true. His victims amongst the ladies are as numerous as his victims of the sword. It is almost as great an honor for a man to be run through by Andre de Nerac as it is for a woman to succumb to his wooing. Do not forget he is a Chevau-leger de la Garde and a Croix de St. Louis."

Statham grunted.

"It is not fair," Onslow pursued, throwing down the dice box. "You are not enjoying yourself," and he rose and went into the other room. "Gentlemen," he said, on his return, "I have persuaded our princess to add to our pleasure by dancing. In ten minutes she will be at your service."

The cards were instantly abandoned and while they waited the Vicomte strolled in and walked up to Onslow.

"That is a strange lady," he remarked, "a very strange lady. She knows Paris and all my friends as well as I do; yet I have never so much as seen her there."

"Yes," Onslow answered, looking him all over, "she is very strange."

"And the English of Madame is, I think, not the English of the quality?" Onslow nodded. "That, too, is curious, for her French is our French, the French of the noblesse. She says her father was an English gentleman, and her mother a Paris flower girl, which is still more curious, for the flower girls of Paris do not talk as we talk on the staircase Des Arbassadeurs at Versailles, or as my mother and the women of my race talk. Mon Dieu!" he broke off suddenly, for the princess had tripped into the room, turning it by the magic of her saucy costume into a flower booth in the market of Paris, and without ado she began to sing a gay chansonnette, waving gently to and fro her basket of flowers:

"Quand on a su toucher
Le coeur d'une bergere
On peut bien s'assurer
Du plaisir de lui faire.
Et zon, zon, zon,
Lisette, ma Lisette;
Et zon, zon, zon,
Lisette, ma Lison."

And the dance into which without a word of warning she broke was something to stir the blood of both English and French by its invincible mixture of coquetry, lithe grace, and audacious abandon, its swift transitions from a mocking stateliness and a tempting reserve to its intoxicating, almost devilish revelation of uncontrolled passion; and all the while that heartless, airy song twined itself into every pirouette, every pose, and was translated into the wickedest provocation by the twinkling flutter of her short skirt and the flashes of the jewelled buckles in her saucy shoes. To Statham as to Andre de Nerac the princess had vanished, and all that remained was a witch in woman's form, a witch with black hair crowned with crimson roses and a cream-tinted skin gleaming white against those roses at her breast.

"To the victor," she cried, picking a nosegay from her basket, and kissing it, "to the victor of the spring!" and Andre and Statham found themselves hit in the face by the flowers. The salon rang with "Bravos" and "Huzzas" until every one woke to the discovery that the dancer had disappeared.

When she returned she was once more in her splendid robes and frigidly cynical as before.

"I am tired, gentlemen," she said; "I must beg you to say good-night." She held out her hand to the Vicomte. "Au revoir!" she said, permitting her eyes to study his olive-tinted cheeks and the homage of his gaze.

"Your prisoner, Madame," he said, "your prisoner for always!"

"Or I yours?" she flashed back, swiftly.

And now she was speaking to Statham. "We shall meet again," she said. "Yes, we shall meet again, Captain."

"Not in London, Madame," he answered.

"Oh, no! But I trust our meeting will be as pleasant for you as to-night has been for me."

"It cannot fail to be."

"Ah, you never know. Women are ever fickle and cruel," she answered, and once again as he kissed the jewelled fingers Statham was conscious of that pathetic, pantherish light in her great eyes, which made him at once joyous, sad, and fearful.

When they had all gone the woman stood gazing at her bare shoulders in the long mirror. "Fi, donc!" she muttered with a shrug of disgust, and she tore in two one of the cards with which the gamblers had been playing, allowing the fragments to trickle carelessly down as though the gust of passion which had moved her was already spent. Then she drew the curtains across the door between the two rooms, and remained staring into space. "Andre Pierre Auguste Marie, Vicomte de Nerac," she murmured, "Seigneur des Fleurs de Lys, Vicomte de—" she smelled one of her roses, the fingers of her other hand tapping contemplatively on her breast. A faint sigh crept into the stillness of the empty, glittering room.

Then she flung herself on the low divan, put her arms behind her head, and lay gazing in front of her. The door was opening gently, but she did not stir. A man walked in noiselessly, halted on the threshold, and looked at her for fully two minutes. She never moved. It was George Onslow. He walked forward and stood beside her. She let her eyes rest on him with absolute indifference.

"There is your pass," he said, in a low voice in which emotion vibrated.

"I thank you." She made no effort to take it, but simply turned her head as if to see him the better.

"Is that all my reward?" he demanded. "It was not easy to get that pass."

"No?" She pulled a rose from her breast and sniffed it. "I believe you. I can only thank you again."

He dropped the paper into her lap, where she let it lie.

"By God!" he broke out, "I wish I knew whether you are more adorable as you are now on that sofa, or as you were dancing in that flower girl's costume."

"Most men in London prefer the short petticoats," she remarked, moving the diamond buckle on her shoe into the light, "but in Paris they have better taste, for only a real woman can make herself adorable in this,"—she gave a little kick to indicate the long, full robe. "Think about it, mon ami, and let me know to-morrow which you really like the better."

"And to-night?"

She stooped forward to adjust her slipper. "To-night," she repeated, "I must decide whether I dislike you more as the lover of this afternoon, the man of pleasure of this evening, or the spy of to-morrow."

He put a strong hand on her shoulder. In an instant she had sprung to her feet.

"No!" she cried, imperiously, "I have had enough for one day of men who would storm a citadel by insolence. Leave me!"

"You are expecting some one?"

"And if I am?"

"Don't torture me. Tell me who it is."

"Perhaps you will have to wait till dawn or longer before you see him."

"I will kill him, that is all,—kill him when he leaves this house."

"I have no objection to that," was the smiling answer. "One rake less in the world is a blessing for all women, honest or—" she fingered her rose caressingly.

"Is it one of those who were here to-night!" he demanded. "Perhaps that infernal libertine of a Vicomte de——"

"Pray, what have my secrets to do with you?" She faced him scornfully.

"This." He came close to her. "You flatter yourself, ma mignonne, that you guard your secrets very well. So you do from all men but me. But I take leave to tell you that three-fourths of those secrets are already mine." She sniffed at the rose in the most provoking way. "Yes, I have discovered three-fourths, and——"

"The one-fourth that remains you will never discover until I choose."

"Do not be too sure."

"And then——?"

"You, ma mignonne, you the guest of many men, will be in my power, and you will be glad to do what I wish. Oh, I will not be your cur, your lackey, then, but you will——"

She dropped him a curtsey, and walked away to an escritoire, from a drawer in which she took out a piece of paper.

"The one-fourth that remains," she said, holding it up, and offering it to him, "I give it to you, my cur and lackey."

She watched him take it, unfold it, read it. His hand shook, the paper dropped from his fingers, and while he passed his handkerchief over his forehead she put the fragment in the fire.

They faced each other in dead silence. She was perfectly calm, but his mouth twitched and his eyes gleamed with an unhallowed fire and with fear.

"Are you mad?" he asked at last, "that you confess such a thing to me—me?"

"Better to you," she retorted, "than to that infernal libertine, the Vicomte de Nerac, or that infernal simpleton, Captain Statham, eh? No, mon ami, my reason is this: Now, you, George Onslow, who profess to love me, who would make me your slave, are in my power, and the proof is that I order you to leave this room at once."

"I shall return."

"Then you certainly will be mad."

"Ah!" He sprang forward. "Can you not believe that I love you more than ever? I——"

"Pshaw!"

The door had slammed. Onslow was alone.

For a minute he stood, clenching his hands, frustrated passion glowing in his eyes. "Ah!" he exclaimed in a cry of pent-up anguish, and then the door slammed again as he strode out.

CHAPTER III.

Two months later Andre, Vicomte de Nerac, was riding in the woods around Versailles, and, poverty-stricken, debt-loaded noble as he might be, his heart was gay, for was he not a Capitaine-Lieutenant in the Chevau-legers de la Garde, and a Croix de St. Louis: was he not presently about to fight again for honor and France, and was he not once more a free man and in his native land with Paris at his back? The leafless trees were just beginning to bud, though winter was still here, but the breath of spring was in the air and the gladness of summer shone in the March sun. Yes, the world bid fair to be kind and good, and Andre's heart beat responsive to its call. Love and honor and France were his, and what more could a noble wish?

He let the reins drop and breathed with contentment the bracing breeze, while his eyes roamed to and fro. Clearly he was waiting for some one who, his anxious gaze up the road showed, might be expected to come from that quarter—the quarter of the Palace of Versailles.

Along the path walked a peasant girl driving a splendid spotted cow. The bell at its fat throat tinkled merrily, the sun gleamed on its glossy spotted hide. The girl dropped a curtsey to the noble gentleman sitting there on his fine horse and himself so handsome a cavalier, and Andre nodded a smiling reply. She was not pretty, this peasant wench, with her shock of tumbled flaxen hair tossed over her smutty face, and her bodice and short skirt were soiled and tattered, but Andre, to whom all young women were interesting, in the sheer gaiety of his heart tossed her a coin and smiled again his captivating smile.

MOTHERHOOD

The first requisite of a good mother is good health, and the experience of maternity should not be approached without careful physical preparation, as a woman who is in good physical condition transmits to her children the blessings of a good constitution.

Preparation for healthy maternity is accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from native roots and herbs, more successfully than by any other medicine because it gives tone and strength to the entire feminine organism, curing displacements, ulceration and inflammation, and the result is less suffering and more children healthy at birth. For more than thirty years has been the standby of American mothers in preparing for childbirth.

Note what Mrs. James Chester, of 437 W. 35th St., New York says in this letter:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"I wish every expectant mother knew about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A neighbor who had learned of its great value at this trying period of a woman's life urged me to try it and I did so, and I cannot say enough in regard to the good it did me. I recovered quickly and am in the best of health now."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is certainly a successful remedy for the peculiar weaknesses and ailments of women.

It has cured almost every form of Female Complaints, Dragging Sensations, Weak Back, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation, Ulcerations and Organic Diseases of Women and is invaluable in preparing for Childbirth and during the Change of Life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free.

SPONGE FISHERS.

The Greek Girl Divers of the Island of Himla.

"We were cruising in the Mediterranean in the late fall," said a globe trotter, "and on a golden afternoon we stopped beside a little fleet of sponge divers. Nearly nude, the divers sat on the edge of the boat. They held big stones that would help them descend. One at a time they inhaled three or four long breaths and then plunged with their great stones into the blue water.

"One boat interested us. Its divers seemed so graceful and young. We drew nearer, and, by Jove, the divers were all girls. They were young Greek girls from Himia, an island near Rhodes. It seems that in Himia the sponge diving is carried on by girls altogether. These girls seemed very expert. Their dark hair knotted on their shapely heads, they reclined on the sun warmed deck till their turn came. Then, graceful as stage dancers, they leaped overboard and in the sea's dim green depths tugged at the black sponge growths.

"The captain said the Himia girls were not permitted to marry till they had brought a certain quantity of sponges from a certain specified depth."

TEMPTATION IS NOT SIN

CHRIST IS ABLE TO KEEP HIS PEOPLE FROM FALLING.

PROVIDES A WAY OF ESCAPE

St. Paul's Great Natural Law—Trial Is the Lot of Everybody—None Are Exempt—Companionship In Sin—Color Blindness Typical Illustration — Faith In Jesus Christ the Only Antidote.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 31.—That temptation is the lot of all; that not in being tempted, but in inviting and yielding to temptation is sin, and that if we trust in God and seek to do right we will always find a way out is the lesson of this sermon. The text is I. Corinthians x, 13, "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man."

The scientists teach us that anthropology, or the science of man, is the crown of all the natural sciences, but subsidiary to it and contributory to its proper comprehension are the other natural sciences. Nature has the same method of working in all, and if we learn what she does in the lower spheres we shall know what she does in the higher. If we learn how the plants and the animals grow and thrive, we may infer that in a similar way man will grow and thrive. No man is absolutely unique. He is one of a species the members of which prosper under like conditions or degenerate under the opposite conditions. Nature is a unit in this. In other words, the same inexorable natural laws which cause a rose or a lily or a heliotrope or a horse or a cow or a sheep or a robin or a bluebird or a trout or a black bass to do and to be what it is under certain conditions are the same inexorable biological laws which will compel man under certain conditions to do certain things. When we study the characteristics of a species we study in a broad sense the characteristics of all the individuals of that species, and there is no exception to the rule.

Now, Paul in the words of my text is enunciating a great natural law. He comes to us and says: "My brother, in your egotism you believe you are different from the rest of mankind. You may think that no man ever faced just the same trials and temptations and sorrows and bitter disappointments which you have. But in your loves, your hates, your sorrows and your temptations you are just like the generality of mankind. You are under the common law. You must eat as they eat. You will laugh as they laugh. You sleep as they sleep. You suffer from the cold and the heat as they suffer. You cry as they cry. You are tempted as they are tempted. You sin as they sin. Furthermore, you can be saved from your sins by the atoning blood of Jesus Christ as they can be saved. You are part of a great species of living creatures which is called the human family." Then Paul seems to generalize all his thoughts into these words of my text: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man, but God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will, with the temptation, also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

My friends, as there are thousands of men and women in the past who have been tempted just as we are tempted and God has found a way by which they may escape from their temptations, so if we let Jesus come into our lives and accept his offer of a way of escape we may overcome our present temptations. We all have many temptations. There is no doubt about that. The next question is, Do we apply the gospel weapon against these temptations?

There are, in the first place, physical temptations. There are temptations of the blood, of the nerves, the muscles of the stomach and of the heart. There are the temptations which appeal to the physical organism which we have inherited from our ancestors and which may have been weakened by disease or by abuse. These temptations of the physical organism are among the very fiercest of all temptations to battle against. Paul was speaking literally as well as figuratively when he described himself as an armed sentinel standing guard over his body or as an armed foe in mortal combat with the passions of his flesh. He knew, as every true Christian ought to know, that unless he was continually warring against the evil desires of his flesh he would become their slave. He said, "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection lest by any means when I have preached to others I myself should be a castaway." Oh, my brother, do you know that with the help of the Holy Spirit you may overcome your physical temptations?

One of the most common of those physical temptations is the craving of the stomach and the nerves for a stimulant or a soothing narcotic. You are not a lazy, good for nothing drunken loafer. You are an intense, ambitious,, energetic man. You perhaps started with nothing, and everything, to use a slang expression, "seems to be coming your way." Your business has been going ahead by leaps and strides. The orders have been tumbling in on you as an avalanche. If you had ten hands and ten feet and ten eyes and ten brains, you could work them all to their limit. The result is you have been overworking that body. You cannot sleep at night. When you arise for breakfast in the morning you are more tired than when you went to bed. About two years ago you began to use stimulants. You did it to arouse your depleted faculties. Then at night you commenced to take some sedative. You said to yourself: "I must sleep. I must sleep or I shall die." Then you did not like liquor. You did not in the beginning crave that sedative. But now every nerve and muscle and sinew of your body is crying: "Give me drink! Give me that sleeping potion! I must have them or I shall go mad!" Under these temptations of the flesh you are going down and down. You are heading straight for a premature grave. Do you not realize now what Paul means when he says, "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection lest by any means when I have preached to others I myself shall be a castaway."

Or perhaps we have broken the moral code. Perhaps we have inherited the inflamed proclivities of some dissolute ancestor. When we try to govern ourselves, we find that we are like a mettlesome, high strung horse, ready at a moment's notice to take the bit in his teeth and rush madly away. The cold-blooded man of phlegmatic temperament cannot understand why the quick-tempered, high strung, nervous, passionate nature can so easily kick over the traces and do what it ought not to do. The phlegmatic man is a mound of wet sand slowly being dried by the rising sun. The passionate man is a gunpowder magazine, ready to be exploded by a spark. And yet the power of God can come in and make it possible for a weak man to overcome the temptations of drink and all the unspeakable temptations of the flesh. Yes, the power of God has been able to help thousands of men in the past to triumph over the cup and over the morphine habit and over libertinism. The power of God can help you now to triumph over your evil desires of the flesh. Your temptation is not an extraordinary case. There have been many men of the past even more dissolute than you who have been saved from the sins of the flesh. Have you forgotten Paul's statement? "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to men, but God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will, with the temptation, also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

But there are mental temptations as well as physical. Just the same as a man may have a malformed body he can have a malformed mind. His thinking apparatus may be all askew. In Bulgaria a short time ago there died a young woman of thirty years of age. She had the mind of a matured, developed woman. She could talk as a woman, but she had the body of a little six-months-old baby. She never grew physically after she was a few months old. She had to sleep in a cradle. She had the mind of a woman, yet the body of a little child. In direct antithesis to this we often find men of fully matured physical bodies who are worse than children in intellect. Their minds are warped and twisted out of form. They have such malformed intellects that they cannot think aright. They cannot tell the difference between right and wrong. In their own strength they are intellectually color blind.

You know what I mean by a man having defective color sight. When the applicant for a locomotive engineer's position applies to the railroad, what is the first and the chief rule by which the official tests the applicant? He takes him into a room where there are a lot of worsted yarns all jumbled up together. "Now, you go and pick me out the blue skeins," says the examiner. "Now pick me out the red." The difference between the colors of red and white may involve the safety of hundreds of passengers which an engineer may have in his charge. Some of you may be surprised to learn that hundreds of would be engineers have been rejected because the optic nerves which connect their eyes and their brains could not carry their messages aright. So there are hundreds and thousands of men whose brains are deformed. They cannot think aright. They cannot tell right from wrong when they see it. These men have malformed intellects, just the same as others have malformed bodies. Of course I am here using the brain in the broad moral sense and not in the narrow.

I was never more impressed with this thought than some time ago when I was reading the most marvelous sermon, I think, Henry Ward Beecher ever preached. It is called "The Courtesy of Conscience." In this discourse Mr. Beecher shows how each man by education as well as by hereditary law becomes an entity to himself or an individual different from all other individuals. Each man to a great extent judges the world by giving voice to the predominant characteristics of his own heart and mind and life. "Now," says Mr. Beecher, "take a man of large benevolence. That is the predominating quality of his mind. It overshadows everything else. As he goes through the Bible everything that magnifies the goodness of God and the mercy of God will come after his magnet. Whenever he comes to a fissure where there is smoke or wrath he jumps it and will not touch it, while, on the other hand, the man who has not such benevolence, but has a good deal of the sense of justice of government and of rules and regulations, goes through the Bible, and when he returns he has on his back a pack filled with the texts of fire."

Mr. Beecher was showing that every man's mind is a law unto itself. It that mind is a malformed or one sided mind in its color blindness, it will cover with false colors every moral object its eyes focus, just the same as the locomotive engineer with color blindness may think the red light of warning is the white light of safety.

Now, the power of the Holy Spirit may come into our lives and teach us to think aright. Through the Holy Spirit we can get a revelation of what the divine sacrifice means. Through him we can truly get an infinite grasp of what the words "Jesus Christ our Saviour" mean to the troubled, sinful heart. Oh, the sins of the mind! Oh, the awful results of wrong thinking to the human heart! This mental fog is like any other kind of darkening mist. If you have ever crossed the Atlantic, you know well what I mean. When you come to the banks of Newfoundland, the fogs settle about you so thick that you cannot see the prow of the ship from the stern. Then the boat slows up, and the deep throated fog horn begins to call. Every time that hoarse note goes rolling over the waters it seems to be calling, "Oh, ships and fishing smacks, where are you?" Then off in the distance you will hear a faint answer calling: "Here am I! Beware! Beware! Beware!" So in the mental fogs of doubt and mysticism, in the fogs of skepticism which envelop every human heart, there is but one right course. Slow up. Send forth thy cry for guidance. Call and keep calling: "Jesus, where art thou? Jesus, where art thou?" Then amid the deepest, densest gloom of life thou wilt hear the Saviour's answer: "Here am I! Come to me! Come to me!" Oh, may the mental fogs which have enveloped so many of us to-day be lifted by the sunshine of God's love. Our mental doubts and skepticism are no worse than those which have been lifted from hundreds of beclouded minds. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man."

But there are temptations from without as well as temptations from within. There are temptations which come to us from other men, as well as temptations welling up in our own hearts. There are temptations social and commercial as well as spiritual. The prophet of old described himself as a little terror stricken bird, with a great flock of angry sparrows encircling it trying to peck it to death. Thus, when we see all the temptations which swoop down upon us from without, can we not cry out: "Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird. The birds about are against her. Come ye, assemble all the beasts of the field, come to devour?" For truly wherever we go into the outside world Satan is ready to greet us with fierce temptations.

Don't you remember the old nursery fable where the spider stands at the door of his palace trying to get the fly to come in and banquet with him? Well, that is the way Satan stands at the door of the commercial and the social world begging his victims to come in and sup with him. He looks at us and smiles and says: "Come, join our social club! Come and learn how to drink wine and to gamble with us! Come and join our dancing cotillon! Of course many of these entertainments may conflict with your old-fashioned ideas, but never mind; you can still be a member of the church and be just like hundreds and thousands of Christians who profess their religion and do not practice it." Or Satan sends acquaintances, who say, "Come, let us use in wildcat speculations some of the moneys which have been left us in trust for the widow and the orphan." And, though the average man would not be dishonest if left to himself, yet when some of these worldly temptations come to him from without he yields because other men about him are accustomed to sin in the same way.

I always look upon the infectiousness of sin a great deal as I do upon the transmitting power of an electric current. When we were young I had a classmate who owned an electric battery. Then he used to stand us boys around in a circle. We would all clasp hands, and the end men would take hold of the handles of the electric battery. Then my classmate would turn on the current, and this current would go running from hand to hand until it had made the complete circuit. If two of those men would unclasp their hands, instantly the circuit would be broken and the current stopped. So I believe Satan sends the currents of temptations through the hearts and the minds and the souls of men. He arranges us about in circles. Then he gets us all to clasp hands. Then because men by our side sin we sin, and because we sin other men sin.

But, though there is a pernicious companionship of sin, there is a saving companionship in Jesus Christ. When you clasp hands with loose men, with evil men, with sinful men, the currents of spiritual death leap through your soul. When you clasp hands with good men, with God fearing men, with Christian men, the currents of spiritual life will go coursing through your minds and hearts and souls.

Now, my brother, the question for you to decide to-day is not whether you are tempted worse than any other man has been tempted. Your spiritual temptations are such as have always been common to man. The great question for you to decide is whether you are willing to clasp hands with Jesus Christ and with good men who are struggling to save a sinful world and let the divine currents of redemption leap through your mind and hearts and souls as the electric current goes coursing over the wires. In other words, to-day are you going to break the divine currents which want to save and redeem you and give yourselves up to the evil currents which will be the means of your eternal overthrow?

If we clasp hands with Jesus Christ, if we clasp hands with Christian men, if we get in touch with the divine life, we shall ourselves become divine. Now, my friends, the question for you and me to decide is this: With whom shall we clasp hands? Shall we clasp hands with Satan? Shall we clasp hands with Christ? If you clasp hands with Satan, you must be destroyed by Satan. If you clasp hands with Jesus Christ, you shall by the promises of God be filled with eternal life. Which current will you seek to-day, the divine current of spiritual power which comes straight from the throne of God or the current of evil by which you will be forever destroyed? In God's name which current will you choose? Hear you not God's promise, "There hath no temptations taken you but such as is common to man, but God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will, with the temptation, also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it?"

Milk Supply.

It is computed that there are about 3,700,000 cows kept for milking purposes. The average yield of each animal is 440 gallons of milk during the year, which gives a total of 1,628,000,000 gallons, 725,000,000 gallons (or nearly two million gallons daily) is consumed as milk, leaving about 900,000,000 gallons to be converted into butter and cheese. This produces 89,825 tons of butter, and 126,000 tons of cheese. It was estimated in 1883 by the Public Analysts' Society that the milk consumers of England were paying at least £1,500,000 per annum for water sold as milk.

THE ARCTIC OUTLETS.

What Would Happen if These Ice Channels Were Closed.

It is well that there are the water gaps between the continents whose headlands form the boundaries of the Arctic ocean. Through Bering strait, Baffin's bay and the huge opening between Greenland and western Europe thousands of cubic miles of ice are annually discharged which if landlocked would long ago have so accumulated as to have impelled cataclysms that would probably have so swept life from the earth that the evolution of man would have been deferred indefinitely into the far future centuries.

Both poles are located with singular adaptation to ease off the otherwise inevitably too great accumulation of local avoirdupois, which would as surely change the earth's center of gravity as would the hanging of an immense weight at some local point on the periphery of a balance wheel.

It is to this good fortune in present polar locations that the world owes its immunity of cataclysmal inundations and reorganizations which otherwise must have laid down other strata to the mausoleums that mark the resting places of the forms that once sported beneath us.

THE HOTEL CLERK.

According to This View His Lot Is Not a Happy One.

Who is the most envied and bediamonded among men? The hotel clerk. Who runs away with our heiresses? The hotel clerk. Who gets the straightest tips on the stock market? The hotel clerk. Whose pride goeth not before destruction and whose glory is never dimmed? The hotel clerk's. So runs the accepted catechism.

Now a truth seeker in Chicago rises to say that the average hotel clerk's chance in life is a trifle less than nothing. He can't marry, for he is compelled to live in the hotel, and his wages won't pay his wife's board. Even as a bachelor he finds it hard to save money. When he reaches the age limit—not a high one—he is displaced by a young man.

There are then three things for him. He may become night clerk in a country hotel, a job that he rose from years before; he may be put in charge of a cloakroom and look to tips for most of his pay or he may try to get other work, using up his savings meanwhile, and end his life in the almshouse. Not a cheering conception and practically useless to the humorist.

KEEP YOURSELF YOUNG.

Exercise Every Day Even Though You Steal the Time to Do It.

It is futile to try to lay down general age limits for the different kinds of athletic sports.

The limits vary individually within very wide marks, and if observations made on a number of individuals of the present generation put them very low this does not mean that they would be the true and desirable limits if we had a generation whose physical education from the beginning had been undertaken and carried out upon a plan only one-fourth or even one-tenth as elaborate as the plan for its mental education, not only as far as exercise and sport are concerned, but also in regard to eating, drinking, clothing, sleeping, pleasures, stimulants, etc., and whose individuals were willing to continue to live upon a similar plan after growing out of the hands of their educators.

Live a simple, natural life, take strenuous exercise every day of your life, even should you steal the time to do so, and see what will become of your personal limit for the various kinds of sports.

Indian Punishment.

Some idea of what Baroda, India, was in times comparatively recent may be gathered from the following: A hundred elephants were kept at the expense of the state, and criminals were executed in a most horrible manner. The poor wretch, tied hand and foot, was fastened by a long rope round the waist to the elephant's hind leg. Then the animal was made to trot through the city, and the man, at almost every step rebounding against stones and obstacles, soon became a mass of bruises and wounds and a ghastly spectacle. If he survived this, his head was placed on a block, and the elephant crushed it with his foot.—Exchange.

Sun Spots.

Astronomers have no generally accepted theory as to the cause and nature of sun spots, but some connection with terrestrial phenomena surely exists, because the curves representing the frequency of magnetic storms and of the aurora borealis are practically identical with the curve of sun spot frequency.

Real Sinkers.

"How did they catch the thief that robbed the railroad eating house?"

"He was so weighted down with plunder he couldn't run."

"Money and silverware, I suppose?"

"No; doughnuts."

APRIL CANADIAN MAGAZINE.

Goldwin Smith, writing in the April number of The Canadian Magazine on the housing problem in a large city, says, "Proclaim that you are going to provide housing cheap for all who call themselves working men, and you will have a rush into the city which will aggravate the congestion. The municipality cannot go into the business of building and letting houses without manifest danger and abuse. London has pronounced its verdict on policy of this kind. A wiser plan was that endorsed by the Associated Charities, providing the best models and letting trade take its course." It is worthy of note that The Canadian Magazine is attracting to its pages the best writers in the Dominion.

QUEEN OF FESTIVALS WAS FITTINGLY CELEBRATED.

Glorious Theme Of Resurrection Dwelt on By Different Preachers In Different Ways--Music Was Grand--Incidents and Features In Various Local Churches.

Easter Sunday dawned bright and beautiful, though the brisk north wind brought a chill in the air, which, though seasonable, was not at all welcome to those who had donned new suits and spring head-coverings. As is generally the case in this city on Easter day, the churches were largely attended, and the beautiful "Queen of Festivals" was celebrated in an appropriate way in all of them.

Bridge St.

At Belleville's premier Methodist church a splendid programme of music had been prepared, and those who attended had the pleasure of listening to two exceedingly bright and interesting sermons. At the morning service the pulpit was seen to be beautifully decorated with flowers, and the Boys' choir had the centre of the choir loft, and also occupied part of the platform with the minister. The beautiful Easter hymns were sung with great beautiness, and the voluntaries by Prof. Hunt particularly the perennial "Spring Song," were played in a way that was altogether charming. In the anthem, "Awake, thou that Sleepest," the choir was in fine form, and the balance was good and volume inspiring. The Boys' choir intoned "The Apostles' Creed" in a way that almost made one fancy he were in an Anglican church. Later, the little chaps sang an Easter carol, "O, Bells in the Steeple," in a very pleasing way. Mrs. A. P. Allen sang Rodney's splendid Easter song, "The Resurrection Morn," in excellent voice and with beautiful expression. The preacher, Rev. J. P. Wilson, B. A., the pastor, preached an ideal Easter discourse from the first six verses of the 16th chapter of St. Mark. The lessons of the Resurrection were clearly and forcefully pointed out. Men must feel a sense of exaltation on Easter Sunday, he said, for the lessons of that day taught them they were immortal. As Christ slept, so shall every one of us sleep, and as He rose from the dead, even so shall we rise. He was victor over death, even so shall we be. Twenty centuries had passed since the Saviour walked this earth, and in that time the churches had seen many changes; many doctrines had obtained for a time and then been rejected, but one doctrine had always remained, the resurrection of Christ, and to-day 500 millions of people all over the world sang "Crown Him Lord of All."

There were special Easter services in the Sunday school, and at night a very large congregation heard another splendid service which had many exceptionally bright musical features, in which the following ladies and gentlemen took part: Mrs. A. P. Allen, Mrs. A. Ray, Mr. S. R. Burrows, Mr. H. Wrightmyer, Mr. C. H. Vermilyea and Mr. Burns. During the offertory, Miss Joy Higgs, violinist, played the "Ave Maria," of Bach-Gounod.

Holloway Street.

The services throughout the day were in keeping with Eastertide and were largely attended. In the morning the children took an active part in the service and that they were well drilled was clearly demonstrated. The service was bright and inspiring.

Around the pulpit and reading desk were an abundance of flowers. A large number of girls and boys from the Deaf and Dumb Institution were present and occupied seats at the front of the church. Some of them took part in the service and this was of especial interest and significance. Four girls, namely, Effie Brooks, Pearl Herman, Fannie Dalgleish and Dorothy Hazlett, in an impressive manner, signed the hymn "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name." At the conclusion of the signing of the last verse of the hymn, a little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Blanchard brought forward a floral wreath which was placed upon a cross, symbolizing the crowning act. The Sunshine choir, composed of some twenty-five girls and a like number of boys, who are members of the Sunday school, occupied seats on either side of the gallery and they, too, took part in the service by rendering three appropriate hymns, namely, "Pass the Word Along," "Jesus, the Light of the World," and "Happy in the Love of Jesus." The solo parts were taken by Nellie Westover, Lela Weese, Master Russell Woodley and little Miss Wooten. To the mutes these hymns and also the other parts of the services were interpreted by Mr. Geo. F. Stewart. The pastor, Rev. R. H. Leitch, occupied the pulpit and gave a brief but appropriate address on the subject "In the Garden." As the basis of his remarks he chose as his text the 41st verse of the 19th chapter of St. John.

> "Now, in the place where He was crucified there was a garden, and in the garden a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid."

The Rev. gentleman's remarks were brief but appropriate to the occasion. During the service the choir rendered an anthem entitled, "They Have Taken Away My Lord."

St. Thomas'.

Easter day was yesterday fittingly celebrated at St. Thomas' church. Bright and hearty were the services, joyous the music and the floral decorations exceedingly beautiful. At 7 and 8 a.m., Holy Communion was celebrated, and nearly 200 were present, being the largest number in the history of the parish. At 11 o'clock a fully choral service was held. The singing by the 30 voices which constituted the choir was hearty and inspiring. The service was sung to Smart's setting in E flat. The offertory solo was beautifully rendered by Miss Mabel Henderson, of St. Agnes' School. The selection was "The Way of the Cross," and the young lady's rich contralto voice was never heard to better advantage. The sermon by the rector, Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, was most appropriate to the occasion. His text was from Revelations, 1st chapter and 18th verse:

> "I am He that liveth, and was dead, and, behold, I am alive for evermore. Amen! and have the keys of hell and of death."

In the afternoon a children's festival service was held. It was an object lesson of the sepulchre, which was fittingly explained by the superintendent of the Sunday School, Mr. S. R. Gorman.

The evening service was fully choral, and the choir rendered two anthems, namely, "Christ our Passover," and "Now is Christ Risen from the Dead." The hearty congregational singing was a feature of the service. During the day there were 243 communicants and the voluntary offerings amounted to $278.70.

Christ Church.

The glad Easter festival was most fittingly celebrated in the above church. At last evening's service the choir was in fine form, and the male voices, in particular, showed up strongly. Diligent application on the part of its members would undoubtedly make Christ church choir one of the best in the city. The choir last night sang an anthem, "Come, let us join our cheerful songs," in a very pleasing way, the solo being excellently taken by Miss Lucy Holton, who sang with much feeling. During the offertory Mrs. C. Willmott sang "The King of Love My Shepherd is," to Gounod's setting, in an ideal way. The organist, Mrs. (Col.) Campbell, played with the sympathy and skill for which she has always been noted. The rector, Rev. Mr. Blagrave, took as his text the 20th verse of the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians:

> "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept."

The greatest event that ever occurred, he said, was the Resurrection, and its influence would last through all eternity. For 40 long centuries it had pleased God to keep silence about the future life of man, and during that time men had no assurance that the tomb would ever give back her dead. The resurrection of Christ established a fact. On the first Easter morning men knew, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that there was a resurrection and that resurrection was the best-proven fact in all history. The cause was infinite; so must be the effect. Depravity and the devil worked together to try to convince man that there was no future life, but in the light of the resurrection of Jesus such a theory fell to the ground.

At the morning service Miss Holton sang a solo, "Golden Harps Are Ringing," in a way that charmed her hearers.

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

Large congregations were present at both services in the above church yesterday, and the services were bright and in keeping with the day. Special music had been prepared, and the choir never sang in better form. At the communion table gathered the largest number of communicants in the recent history of the church. At the morning service the Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly, preached an appropriate Easter sermon, and the choir rendered, in a highly pleasing way, the anthem, "Solemn Night," the trio being very nicely taken by Misses L. Hubly, Gertrude Thompson and Emily Watkin. The evening anthem was "Praise, Praise to Thee," and the Rector preached on "The Consummation of Grace."

John Street.

At John St. Presbyterian church yesterday large congregations were present at both services. The discourses by the pastor, Rev. A. H. Drumm, were most appropriate to the day, whilst the choir rendered suitable music. About the pulpit were placed beautiful flowers, whose fragrance invaded the sanctuary and even seemed to lend assistance to the services. In the evening the pastor's subject was, "The Everlasting Shepherd," and his text was from St. John, 10th chapter, 17th and 18th verses:

> "Therefore doth my Father love Me, because I lay down My life, that I might take it up again.
> "No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of My Father."

The Rev. gentleman said it was clear that Jesus Christ was the everlasting Shepherd. As a good Shepherd he voluntarily laid down his life for mankind. Jesus demonstrated the assertion he made when He said He had power to lay down His life and take it up again. His death did not prevent the death of the body, but it did save the immortal soul. Death was the transfer of this life to the life beyond.

The musical part of the service was much appreciated and consisted of two anthems by the choir, namely, "Christ is Risen from the Dead," and "Conquering Kings." The solos were taken by Mr. Cameron and Miss E. Lavoie. A quartette composed of Misses Gowsell and Mair and Messrs. Cameron and Moore, sang very sweetly and effectively a selection, "There is a Green Hill Far Away." The offertory solo, "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say," was rendered very acceptably by Mr. Cameron. The hymns sung were also in keeping with the service.

St. Michael's.

The great festival of Easter was observed with all due solemnity at this church yesterday. At the 8 o'clock mass the children's choir gave several hymns very sweetly, indeed, reflecting great credit on the good Sisters, their teachers. At 10.30, St. Cecilia's Mass was rendered by the choir, the solos and the soloists being as follows: "Christi Eleison," Mr. Doyle; "Et in terra," Miss Wilson; "Qui tollis," Mr. Peppin; "Et incarnatus," Mrs. Grant; "Benedictus," Mr. Fortier; 1st "Agnus Dei," Miss Bawden; 2nd "Agnus Dei," Mr. Hayes; 3rd "Agnus Dei," Mr. Fortier. At the offertory, Mr. Hayes sang "Just for To-Day" in his usual pleasing voice. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Father Twomey, and was a most eloquent and inspiring effort.

Bethel Hall.

A most interesting meeting was held last night in Bethel Hall, when seven persons were baptized in the profession of their faith in Christ Jesus. The hall was crowded and two soul-stirring gospel addresses were delivered by the well known evangelist, Alex. Marshall, of Scotland, and a Mr. Morrison, of Orillia. The usual Believers' conference, which is held every year in this hall, is now in session and a large number of Christians from the city and surrounding district are attending, and much interest is evinced by the large congregation listening to the earnest teachers and preachers who have come to preach the word of God. These meetings will be continued to-day and to-morrow at 10.30, 2.30 and 7.30. All are cordially invited.

Tabernacle.

"Life and Immortality," and "God Our Father," were the subjects of the sermons by Rev. Geo. Brown yesterday. Special Easter music was the feature of the services.

Mr. Jas. S. Dyer, choir leader; Miss Jessie Elliott, organist. Morning service: Organ Prelude, "I know that my Redeemer Liveth" ("Messiah") Handel; male quartette, "Jesus Came to Die" (Crosby), sung by Messrs. Ransome, Griffith, Hunter and Dyer. An anthem was given by the choir, 'We would see Jesus,' in which a tenor solo sung by Mr. A. E. Ransome; organ offertory, "Surely He

WOMEN FIGHT IN RIOTS

Roumanian Peasants Terrified by Hail of Grape Shot.

Villages Totally Destroyed—Insurgents Armed With Hay Forks and Scythe Blades—Many of the Leaders Arrested—Attack on Galatz By Troops Repulsed After Deadly Slaughter—Rioters Are Quieter.

Bucharest, April 1.—Field guns loaded with grape shot, according to the official reports, are winning against the revolutionary peasantry, whose arms are mostly hay forks and scythe blades.

The insurgents were able to hold their own against the troops at close quarters and even withstood cavalry charges, doing terrible execution with long pronged forks and scythe blades strapped to long poles, but the slaughter since the troops used artillery appears to be terrifying them into submission.

In the district of Vlashica, where the outbreak was particularly serious, large numbers of insurgents have surrendered and have denounced their leaders to the authorities with the result that many of the latter have been arrested. The Government hopes that with the leaders in jail the undisciplined bands will soon abandon the field.

The self-styled "generals" usually turn out to be country school masters and village priests.

Numbers of women are fighting in the insurgent ranks, and many of them have been found among the killed, side by side with their husbands, sons and brothers.

Pitched Battle Fought.

Details of the attack by the peasants on Galatz show that a pitched battle was fought. The insurgents, who were several thousand strong, began the assault at midnight, carried the outer earthworks by storm and captured a suburb, which they set on fire after pillaging it.

Three battalions of infantry attempted to stem the peasants entry into the city itself, but the fork and scythe armed rustics fought desperately, hand to hand, and had almost routed the troops when the governor ordered field guns loaded with grape shot to be fired at the insurgents, who wavered and then fled. The fire of the guns wrought great havoc on the retreating masses.

Whole Villages Destroyed.

Artillery was used at Cucuesti, Valoclele and elsewhere, and in some instances whole villages are said to have been utterly destroyed by fire of inch shells.

It is semi-officially stated that in many districts the peasants are repairing the damage done to property and restoring stolen goods to their owners.

Disturbances are reported from Putna in Moldavia, and many cases of plundering, incendiarism and armed conflicts in Wallachia.

A number of peasants have been killed or wounded by troops at Langa and Oatulele. At Calicea, in the centre of the disturbed area, all the ringleaders have been captured.

The communes of Hueresani, and Pegeni are in full revolt, and troops have been despatched there. All is quiet at Vlascha, Coverlie and Roman.

According to yesterday's official report, there was no fresh rioting anywhere in the districts in which there were outbreaks, murder, pillage and incendiarism by peasants last week. The disorders were vigorously suppressed, and the revolt stopped at all points, and troops are following up the bands of plunderers.

The Pacific Squadron.

Secretary Metcalf says that the general navy board does not intend that the American fleet in the Pacific shall be weaker than that of any possible enemy, and there is reason to believe that before long two divisions of battleships, numbering eight of the most modern vessels flying the stars and stripes, will be stationed in the Pacific.

RAYNOR ESCAPES GALLOWS.

Whiteley's Slayer Saved by Popular Agitation For Reprieve.

London, April 1.—It was announced Saturday that as a result of the popular agitation in favor of a reprieve for Horace G. Raynor, who on Jan. 25 killed William Whiteley, the well-known merchant of Westbourne Grove, the Home Secretary, Mr. Gladstone, had advised the King to commute the death sentence to life imprisonment at penal servitude.

The King almost invariably acts on the Home Secretary's advice and therefore Rayner's reprieve may be regarded as an accomplished fact.

The exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy is probably to a great extent due to the strong revulsion of public feeling against nursing a dying man back to life only to reserve him for the hangman's rope, together with the painful situation of the prisoner.

A NOVEL OPERATION.

Man's Blood Pumped Into His Wife's Veins Saves Her Life.

New York, April 1.—For the first time in this city, transfusion of blood was resorted to Friday to save the life of a patient, says a despatch from Philadelphia. Mrs. Peter Anderson was dying from anaemia, in the Polyclinic Hospital. The doctors decided on a bold stroke to save her life, and the husband of the dying woman cheerfully permitted a quantity of his blood to be pumped for an hour from his heart into his wife's veins. The woman was brought back to consciousness, and now has more than a fighting chance for complete recovery. Anderson himself, though weakened by the loss of blood and the ordeal of the operation, soon rallied, and bids fair to be himself again a few days.

Elopers Caught On Liner.

Halifax, April 1.—A man named Key and a young woman, who eloped from Liverpool, were arrested on the arrival of the Allan line steamship Parisian yesterday. They came as steerage passengers as man and wife, and were on passenger list as P. Key and wife.

Key is detained at the immigration building here, and the gril, whose name the authorities refused to give, left last night for New York with a relative who arrived from there yesterday morning.

Her father left London last week and will meet her at New York and take her home.

Tries Rope Route.

Toronto, April 1.—Just out from England six weeks, Edward Lewis, aged 50, tried to leave this world by the rope route in a Mutual street boarding-house.

His roommate, Edward Currier, found him yesterday afternoon black in the face, speechless and strangling with the rope around his neck. The rope was tied to the bedpost.

Lewis had been in business in Wolsall, Eng., where he failed. From letters in his possession, it seems, he came to Canada at the request of his wife and family, and they did not wish him to return, having enough to live on.

Excelled Canadian Wheat?

London, April 1.—(C. A. P.)—Lord Northcote, at the opening of the Royal Agricultural Show at Sydney, said: "In 1904 Australian wheat was quoted from ten to three shillings per quarter better than English, two shillings better than Argentine, and eightpence better than Canadian."

Drowned In Kaministicua.

Fort William, Ont., April 1.—While playing around a hole in the river at Kaministiqua Friday three children belonging to Storekeeper Elliott fell into the water.

Edna, aged seven years, was drowned, the other two children being rescued with difficulty.

PORT CREDIT MYSTERY

Inquest Opened on Body of Young Englishman Who Was Killed.

Looks Like Murder Case—Theory Advanced That Elliott Was Lured to the Woods, Shot, and Afterwards Laid on Track—Gang of Italians Are Suspected—Appearances Indicate Severe Struggle Took Place.

Port Credit, April 1.—An inquest was opened Saturday at the Wilbur House, Port Credit, by Dr. Sutton, coroner, of Peel County, upon the body of Edward Elliott, who died shortly after being found on the Grand Trunk on Thursday night, near Lorne Park.

There is a very strong suspicion that Elliott's death is the result of foul play and a theory is advanced that he was lured to the woods, shot and then placed on the railway tracks.

An examination of the body reveals a hole under the chin, which may have been caused by a bullet. The hole is sufficiently large to allow a lead-pencil being inserted. There are also two or three wounds on the chest, which appear to be the result of a fight or struggle.

At 1 p. m. a jury was sworn in and the body viewed. Dr. Sutton adjourned the inquest until Wednesday morning, to allow of a post-mortem being made. This will be undertaken by Dr. Sutton of Port Credit, a son of the coroner.

No trace whatever has been found of the men who were in the handcar which passed the train, the conductor of which discovered Elliott dying on the track. It is known that bad blood existed between Elliott and several other Italian laborers who were working with him in the section gang.

All the indications point to the occupants of the handcar as the perpetrators of the crime, if, as is suspected, a murder has taken place.

SPEAKER NEAR DEATH.

Hon. J. W. St. John Lies In a Critical Condition.

Toronto, April 1.—Small hope is entertained for the recovery of Hon. J. W. St. John, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly.

All yesterday friends and attendants anxiously awaited fresh news.

During the afternoon his condition was so critical that relatives were advised by telegraph and telephone that the end was near.

He lay apparently very close to death, and oxygen was administered artificially in order to sustain life.

Between five and six in the evening the patient rallied, his heart beat more strongly and his general tone showed great improvement.

At one o'clock this morning Dr. G. W. Clendenan was in the room when the patient wakened and smiled, seeming as cheerful as usual. His pulse was 120. He fell asleep again in a minute or two.

Only since the operation for appendicitis has it been discovered that Mr. St. John is suffering with diabetes.

FOUR BOYS KILLED.

Accident on the Pennsylvania Railway, Near Buffalo.

Buffalo, April 1.—While returning from hunting four boys were run down and instantly killed by a light engine on the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks near the eastern city limit Saturday night. A passing freight train drowned the noise of the approaching engine. The dead are: Anthony and Frederick Phillips, aged 19 and 16 years, brothers; Hugh Reany, aged 14, and Otto Meitz, aged 11.

FOUR YEARS FOR DUNCAN.

Former Bank Manager Goes to Penitentiary For Forgery.

Berlin, April 1.—John F. Duncan, ex-manager of the Bank of Commerce at Ayr, who pleaded guilty to charges of fraud, forgery, and theft, his total defalcations amounting to about $15—000, was sentenced on Saturday by Judge Chisholm to four years in Kingston Penitentiary on each of three charges, sentences to run concurrently. His Honor expressed great sorrow for the prisoner.

Spain Welcomes King's Visit.

Madrid, April 1.—The approaching meeting of King Alfonso and King Edward, at Cartagena, is creating much comment, the close understanding between Spain and Great Britain being the subject of general welcome.

Every Spanish warship available will proceed to Cartagena to meet the British squadron of seventeen vessels, and a gala banquet has been arranged to take place on board the Spanish battleship Numancia.

Dowager Queen Christina, Premier Maura and the foreign and marine ministers will accompany King Alfonso to Cartagena.

Policeman Held For Robbery.

New York, April 1.—Patrolman George Dawkins of the Brooklyn police force was arrested Saturday night on a charge of robbing John Farley of $13.

According to Farley, he invited Dawkins to take a drink. They had a misunderstanding in the saloon, and when they reached the street, Farley says, Dawkins seized him and took $12 from his pocket, threatening to club him if he made an outcry.

Dawkins was held in $2,000 bail for examination to-day.

Was Hush Money Used?

Hamilton, April 1.—J. Bidwell Mills, near whose residence the late Constable Barron was shot, has written a somewhat sensational letter to Mayor Stewart.

He charges that the reason more active steps were not taken to investigate the affair is that money and influence have been used to hush the matter up.

He scouts the idea that the murderer is dead.

THAW HOPES TO BE FREE.

Believes Trial Will Go on and Makes Future Plans.

New York, April 1.—Easter Sunday for Harry Thaw in the Tombs was made more cheerful by a visit from his wife, to whom had been granted a special permit to pass the afternoon with her husband.

When Mrs. Thaw left she spoke for the first time since the tragedy last June to reporters.

"Harry grows more cheerful and satisfied with the way his affairs are progressing every day," she said.

"Like all the rest of us, he is perfectly confident that the commission will find him sane and that the trial will go on. He even talked of being free next Sunday, and he planned how we would dine together."

Thaw attended the Easter services conducted by Rev. Dr. Sanderson in the morning. None of his counsel visited him yesterday. He will consult with his lawyers to-day, as to probable developments before the commission, which convenes at 10 o'clock Tuesday.

The plans of the commission to submit a report to Justice Fitzgerald today were upset late Saturday by an appeal by Jerome to be allowed to produce more witnesses.

Adjourned Till To-morrow.

The commission thereupon adjourned until Tuesday, when it will hear experts called by the district attorney.

Chairman McClure served notice, however, that the witnesses must confine themselves to facts and opinions which deal with the present condition of Thaw and must not go into details of his past or future.

Thaw was under direct examination by the commissioners for more than three hours, and then for forty-five minutes he was under cross-examination by Jerome. This cross-examination was allowed by the commission only after a vehement protest by the prosecuting officer that he had not been allowed sufficient latitude in the enquiry.

Seizing his first opportunity of interrogating the defendant, Jerome attempted to go into Thaw's past life, but objections by Thaw's counsel were sustained by the commission, which held the district attorney to the direct issue before it—whether Thaw is capable of understanding the character of the proceedings against him and of rationally advising his counsel.

WARNING TO ENGLAND.

Must Learn That Canada Is Not Her Property.

Montreal, April 1.—Referring to The London Globe's remark that the arrival of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the middle of the intercolonial conference would be an insult to the mother country and to the other countries, and that such conduct would show that Canada might find a better qualified premier, The Presse says:

"What would those English cockneys say if we were to retort in somewhat the following terms: 'If the mother country has no more consideration for the political struggles and the working of parties which the constitutional system authorizes in Canada, as well as in England, Canada will see to have an ungrateful and unjust mother replaced by something more rational.'

"All the people in Canada, English as well as French, are far from holding such a view, but by dint of foolish things the London politician will finally lead us towards it. Those gentlemen should learn once for all that Canada is not their property, but ours, and that Sir Wilfrid Laurier established that point with great eloquence and clearness before the House last night. Canada never asked for a conference, but ceded to imperial besetting, of which it was the cause. On that point we are in no way indebted to the other colonies, who refused to accept the representations of Canada for another date, although we love and respect them as sisters in every way. They wished to have full play. Let them have it; but it is only fair that we should have the same. However, we are happy to see that the Prime Minister has found his way clear to start on April 5."

Youth Arrested for Forgery.

Chatham, April 1.—James Simon, manager of the local branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, informed the police department Saturday, that J. Parry Wiers of Charing Cross, had forged a cheque for $375.

Wiers, who is 23 years of age, and said to be active in Epworth League, Sunday school and church circles, was found in the Garner Hotel, and arraigned before Police Magistrate Houston, to whom he pleaded guilty. He was remanded until Friday for sentence.

Wiers said he came to Chatham with no intention of committing the forgery. He had $359 or $16 less than the amount received from the bank.

To Extradite Bribers.

Ottawa, April 1.—Saturday's Canada Gazette contains a despatch concerning a supplementary agreement in regard to the extradition of criminals between Great Britain and the United States, which adds bribery and criminal offences against the bankruptcy law to the list of offences for which offenders may be extradited from one to the other.

The operation of this arrangements is suspended so far as Canada is concerned so long as the present act respecting the extradition of fugitive criminals remains in force.

Survey Party In Danger.

Ottawa, April 1.—A survey party, on the National Transcontinental Railway, who were with Engineer Cotton in the Abitibi country, may be in some danger. There are grave doubts if they have enough supplies to last until spring.

One-half of the party, seeing this trouble ahead, started for Ottawa. They tramped over 300 miles on snowshoes and got to Engleheart on the T. & N. O.

Had Feet Cut Off.

Cobalt, April 1.—Reynold McDonald of Halifax was run down by a northbound freight just north of the station Saturday and both his feet were cut off.

Bloodhound On The Trail

Police Try to Trace Elliott's Slayer At Port Credit.

Animal Receives Scent From Clothes of Murdered Man--Leaps a Stream and Goes Through Meadow--Then Loses the Trail--Careless Handling of the Case--Strange Italian Spoken of--Jury Empanelled.

Port Credit, April 2.—A pedigreed bloodhound was yesterday put on the scent at the scene of the murder of Edward Elliott, after four days of masterful inactivity on the part of the crown.

With a man's life to be legally avenged, red tape and financial considerations are holding back. those who might act.

The tracker, "Bob," the property of Joseph Ernest, Toronto, was sent in leash from the bloodclot beside the railroad track, two miles west of Port Credit, where early Good Friday morning Elliott's body was discovered. First he was given the scent of Elliott, from a piece of bloodstained shirt the victim had worn. The bloodhound, held in leash by Ernest and followed by County Constable Peel sniffed his way rapidly north of the G.T.R. tracks, bounded down the gulley at the side, then continued west for 200 yards close to a rail fence. With his nose to the ground, the animal, descendant of a full-blooded Kentucky man-hunter, leaped a stream of water and tugged his way through the fence and beyond into a sloped meadow. Beside a log and a bush he stopped, disconcerted. There the trail seemed to end.

Lost the Trail.

Despite the fact that the county constable and the dog's owner put him again on the trail from the scene of the crime, he could pick up no other line. "If that dog had been here two days ago, we would have gone far to solve this case," said the constable.

The facilities Port Credit affords for efficient detective service are not splendid. The place where Dr. Sutton performed his post-mortem is a dingy shed in rear of an hotel.

The chief "evidence" so far—the bloodstained clothes of Elliott, lay yesterday on the plain ground, covered with a wooden soapbox. Any wide-awake murderer could abstract them at night. A heavy storm would probably soak all the blood out of them.

Until he was taken there Sunday the constable had not visited the place where Elliott's body was found. "What's the use; there's no money in it for me. I get only 25 cents for each subpoena I serve," is how he puts it.

The dog was sent out after the constable, Coroner Sutton and Constable Broddy of Brampton, had talked things over.

New Figure In Case.

A crown officer has discovered a new personality in the puzzle. He was told Sunday that a strange Italian—not any of the section gang—was watching Elliott drinking in the hotel. This man disappeared the night Elliott was killed.

Elliott was not known as a particularly hard drinker, but used liquor quite occasionally. Some in Port Credit say that he was intoxicated before he left that place on the night of his death. His going there to cash a discharge cheque does not indicate that he was leaving the Grand Trunk's service. It often happens that when a man wants money before the month is up, he gets a discharge cheque cashed, and is promptly rehired.

The Cause of Death.

Dr. Arthur Sutton, who conducted the post-mortem on Saturday, was confined to his bed yesterday. He points out that the deceased had evidently been stabbed in the chin and on the breast with a sharp instrument, apparently a stilleto, but none of these wounds were sufficient in themselves to cause death. The most serious wound, obviously inflicted by some blunt weapon, such as a shovel, was in the back of the head, and from this a clot of blood formed on the brain.

2,000 Cross Line for Papers.

Windsor, April 2.—It is estimated that 2,000 subscribers of the Detroit newspapers crossed the ferry on Sunday for papers from this city, Walkerville and Sandwich, the authorities having served notice that the Sunday papers would not be allowed across the line until Monday.

The movement was so pronounced that Hon. Dr. Reaume left for Toronto yesterday to persuade the Government to grant some relief in the situation in the border towns at least.

Ontario Man's Suicide.

Vancouver, B.C., April 2.—News was received here Sunday night that Lee Wigle, a well known Ontario man, had committed suicide by shooting at Dawson. He was 35 years old and married.

MAY ABOLISH HANGING.

Bill to Be Shortly Presented In British Parliament.

London, April 2.—Horace C. Rayner, the young man who shot and killed William Whiteley, the well known merchant, on Jan. 24, and was sentenced to be hanged, has been reprieved, Mr. Gladstone, the Home Secretary, having advised the King to commute the sentence to penal servitude for life. The newspaper editorials yesterday morning generally proved the action, as accurately reflecting public opinion, although the ground of the Home Secretary's decision is admittedly based more on sentiment than law. The opportunity is taken advantage of to discover phases of similarity between the Rayner and Thaw cases. The sheriff of Hull is quoted as saying: "Thank God for a Thaw and a Rayner, who are prepared to give their lives to rid the world of such pests to society as White and Whiteley."

The reprieve has raised the question of the abolition of capital punishment, a bill for which is expected to be shortly presented to Parliament.

Lloyd's Weekly News suggests that the numerous reprieves in recent years promise the early abolition of capital punishment in this country.

SLIGHTLY IMPROVED.

Speaker St. John Makes Splendid Battle For Life.

Toronto, April 2.—Mr. Speaker St. John continues to defy prophecy

Despite the alarming reports of his condition throughout yesterday afternoon, and the expected fatal termination of his illness, at an early hour this morning he was resting calmly, and his condition seemed slightly improved.

It is a magnificent battle for life which Mr. St. John is making.

On the one side is united the dangers resulting from the Speaker's hazardous operation, and the malign influences of an hitherto unsuspected internal disease.

On the other side is united the vitality which comes from a body which has known not abuse or excess, together with the vitality which is born of a strong genial spirit undepressed.

The patient has been conscious all through his illness, and retains his customary cheerfulness, despite great bodily weakness.

He is under continuous medical supervision, and although the end seems very near, yet with the wonderful vitality shown by Mr. St. John the apparently inevitable may yet be avoided.

WIFE SLAYER ARRESTED.

Caught While Heading For the Canadian Border.

Newport, Vt., April 2.—Dwight Niles, of Newport, for whom the authorities had been searching since Saturday night, when he is alleged to have shot and killed his wife, was arrested at Richford yesterday and placed in the local lock-up. Shortly afterward he cut his throat with a jackknife, but it is believed that the wound will not prove serious. Arrangements were made to have him brought here on the noon train, and it was expected that he would be given a hearing this afternoon.

Niles, who is said to have shot his wife at her father's home after she had refused to return to live with him following a separation, disappeared after the shooting. He headed for the Canadian line and Sunday boarded a freight train on the Canadian Pacific Railway, bound for Montreal. The conductor had heard of the murder, and becoming suspicious when the train reached Richford, notified the authorities. Niles made no resistance when arrested.

MUST WEAR THEIR HATS.

British Vicar's Strict Views Stop a Wedding Party.

London, April 2.—A pretty wedding party was stopped at the entrance to St. Mary's Church, Scarborough, and the bridesmaids forbidden to enter, because they wore no hats, simply a wreath of marguerites. The difficulty was quickly overcome by the bridesmaids fastening white handkerchiefs on their heads. The vicar of the church enforces the rule that the female heads must be covered in church with great strictness.

Burned to Death In Own Home.

Melburne, April 2.—The home of Mr. Kellock, living at Riverside, five miles from this village, took fire yesterday and Mr. Kellock, in trying to extinguish the flames, fell through the roof and was burned to death.

Ottawa is chuckling and crowing because it raised $205,000 in fourteen days for a new Y.M.C.A. building. That would be a good deed, indeed!

THE EASTER HAT.

(New York Sun.)

The hat she was wearing for Easter
  Was trimmed in a wonderful way,
The last cry of fashion's adornment
  In truly surprising array.

Behind, where the brim was uptilted,
  Pursing the up-to-date fad,
Was perched the white wing of an angel
  Exceedingly droopy and sad.

Instead of the usual flowers
  Displaying their coloring grand,
There clustered the root of all evil,
  Bestowed with a generous hand.

Nor was that the sum of its glories;
  The fellow who pays will accede
The fruits that it brings forth for trimming
  Are meet for repentance, indeed.

"Perhaps you think the old water in the milk joke has been worked to death, but I've found a new variation of it," said a friend recently. They always listen intently to what she says, and last night I decided to listen, to. This is what I heard:

"'An' de cat, she got thirsty, an' got thirstier an' mo' thirsty, an' finally she went to a pan o' milk sittin' in de pantry to get a drink ob watah.'"

The Toronto Globe says: "The innuendoes spoken on the floor of Parliament and the insinuations published in the press are too vague to be grasped and met." and immediately indulges in the following "innuendoes" and "insinuations": "What may have been true in the days of the Tory Government before 1896 is not true under the Liberal Government in 1907. The undenied and undisguised immorality of a half dozen Tory leaders then is no excuse or palliation for one Liberal leader's misconduct to-day." How much better is this than "the innuendoes" and "insinuations" which the Rev. Globe so viciously condemns. If the "immorality" which the Globe "insinuates" existed in 1896, why did not the pure "Liberals" expose it?

It will undoubtedly interest many people in this city to learn that a meeting of the Executive Committee was held last night, when the estimates of the various chairmen were submitted. There was a long and strenuous session, and the Chairman of the Executive (so we were informed by an alderman) found himself up against a rather hard proposition. The Statute, it seems, does not permit of the general rate (exclusive of school rate) being placed higher than 20 mills on the $. The Executive Committee found last night that if the money required was to be raised, the general rate (exclusive of school rate) would have to be at least 22 1-2 mills. Nothing definite was done, and Ald. Marsh, chairman of the Executive Committee, took the matter home to sleep over. The school rate last year, it may be stated for the information of people who are thirsting for it, was, for High and Public schools 4 1-4 mills, for Separate schools 5 3-10 mills. Figure it out yourself; Even with the statutory limitation of 20 mills for general tax, and 4 1-4 for school tax, the rate will be 24 1-4. But the schools want more! Surely, in the matter of taxes, we are "going some" in this year of our Lord 1907!

Fort Dodge, a city in Iowa, has a Mayor and Common Council who deserve to take rank with the great law-givers of this or any former time. In a message to the Council, the Mayor, Mr. S. J. Bennett, urged that every male or female of marriageable age who persist in remaining single should be penalized. The Council took the matter into serious consideration and passed an ordinance which decreed that 'All able-bodied persons between the ages of twenty-five and forty-five years, whose mental and physical propensities are normal, and who are not now married, shall be required to obtain a license and wed within sixty days or be subject to a fine of from ten to one hundred dollars. After this sublime ordinance had passed its third reading amid great applause, the Mayor made the announcement that, for the benefit of all who desired to escape the penalty, he would be in his office at all hours to perform the marriage ceremony free of charge. He added that the ordinance would be enforced to the letter, as it was in the interests of good morals and a sound public policy.

It may be necessary, of course, for such towns as Fort Dodge, Ia., Peterboro, Ont., and other places to pass ordinances penalizing bachelors who decline to marry, but permit us to point out that in beautiful Belleville such methods are not necessary. Belleville girls are so sweet-tempered and attractive that young men come from all points of the compass to wed them. In some unfortunate places the fairest flowers are often born to blush unseen. Not so in Belleville. Her reputation as a garden for fair girls is so well known that every young lady, almost, so soon as she attains marriageable age, is snapped up. Peterboro should send down a joint committee of young ladies and aldermen to study conditions in this city. That would be infinitely better than clapping on an absurd bachelor tax.

The Confessional

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Mr Editor, — Re the Presbyterian divine's views on the confessional in Montreal. Don't you think it shows the trend of present day thought towards unity. I notice also that yesterday in one of our Protestant churches the doctrine of the Invocation of Saints was taught. I myself have heard this doctrine taught in the same church some two years ago. This is a fact and I can prove it to anyone who may disbelieve it, and will be pleased to do so at any time.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

Coroner Says "No Inquest Necessary."

REMAINS OF JAMES BERRY, ALIAS CAMERON, WILL BE CLAIMED BY FRIENDS AND TAKEN AWAY FOR BURIAL — WHAT THE POLICE HAVE KNOWN ABOUT THE CASE.

The authorities, after consulting in the case of the body found in the mouth of the river yesterday afternoon, decided that an inquest was unnecessary, as it was apparent that the unfortunate man had met his death by drowning and there were no circumstances indicating that any foul play existed. The friends of the deceased at Lindsay were notified that the body had been recovered, and a message was received this morning that someone would come to claim the same. There is no doubt but that the deceased was James Berry, otherwise known as A. Cameron. It appears that the party went by both names and was at one time a resident of Toronto, where he went by the name of Cameron, and had some reputation as a boxer. In November last he was in the city on the day previous to the evening when the little girl, Myrtle McCune, was molested. The receipt of the post office order which was found amongst the effects in the pockets, shows that the order was for $20, and it was sent to Mrs. J. P. Berry, who, we are informed, is his mother, her first husband, the drowned man's father, being named Cameron. Berry at one time worked upon the railway at Lindsay. He was an unmarried man about 26 years of age.

The police have now no hesitation in making known the information which they withheld up to this time. It seems that Berry had been working at Madawaska, helping to build a bridge for the G.T.R. He left a month's pay, which is yet unclaimed. Berry and some companions arrived in this city at 4 a.m. on the day the assault occurred. It is said that, before leaving Madawaska, he was asked to drink by some of his companions, but refused, saying, "Boys, when I drink liquor I get crazy." He afterwards did drink in this city, with the result now well known. The police had positive information that Berry was the man they were after. A Mr. Burley, of this city, saw him jump into the river, saying "I'll take to the water before I'll be caught."

The mystery appears to have been fully cleared up, the result proving that the police were right in their theory when they said: "If that man went into the river he never came out alive."

In conclusion it may be stated, positively, that the deceased, James Berry, could not possibly have been the party who caused so much excitement in the vicinity of the College, though it is possible that the story of those doings, agitating the brain of an intoxicated man, may have prompted him to do the crazy thing he did.

A message was this morning received from Lindsay stating a relative of the deceased would this evening arrive in the city to claim the body.

VAGRANCY.

Margaret Tanasy, an old woman who for three nights sought protection at the police station, was charged with the above offense. As she desired to leave the city the Magistrate gave her an opportunity to do so.

The clock ticks and ticks the time away,

Men's judgments often make a blunder, but their consciences never.

All the failures are sure they would be successful if only they could start at the top.

Some people think that it's never too late to mend a matrimonial mistake by applying for a divorce.

Oh, no, Alphonse, a man isn't necessarily one-sided because he has never crossed the ocean.

Its virtues have been established for many years and thousands of people have been made happy by taking Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea. 35 cents, Tea or Tablets.—D. M. Waters.

A Nice Legal Distinction.

A lawyer in the Indian Territory named McGann was the attorney for a farmer who had killed a neighbor. McGann got the man out on bail on the plea of justifiable homicide or something of the kind, and the farmer immediately took his gun and killed the chief witness against him.

Naturally this nettled the sheriff and the judges, and they offered $300 reward for the murderous farmer. "Say," said McGann to the sheriff, "will you give me that reward if I get him?" "Yes," the sheriff replied, and McGann rode out to the hiding place of his client.

The farmer came up, and McGann shot him, took the body back to town and demanded the reward. "How about this, McGann?" asked another lawyer. "Do you think it is in accordance with the ethics of the legal profession to take advantage of your client in that manner?" "Ethics be blowed!" snorted McGann. "I killed him in another case."—Exchange.

Sagacity of Blind Horses.

The way in which blind horses can go about without getting into more difficulties than they ordinarily do is very remarkable. They rarely, if ever, hit their heads against a fence or stone wall. They will slide off when they come near one. It appears from careful observation that it is neither shade nor shelter which warns them of the danger. On an absolutely sunless and windless day their behavior is the same. Their olfactory nerves doubtless become very sensitive, for, when driving them, they will poke their heads downward in search of water fifty yards before they come to a stream crossing the roadway. It cannot be an abnormally developed sense of hearing which leads them to do this, for they will act alike though the water be a stagnant pool. Men who have been blind for any great length of time develop somewhat similar instincts to blind horses.

French Similes For "Drunk."

The French have some interesting similes of their own corresponding to the English "drunk as a lord" or "drunk as a wheelbarrow," says a London writer. The most generally recognized one in the case of "ivre," the less extreme and less vulgar word for drunk," is "ivre comme une soupe" —"soupe" meaning the piece of bread eaten with soup as well as the soup itself, and a bouillon soaked piece of bread offering a natural simile for saturation. When the less delicate "soul" is used instead of "ivre," the Frenchman may speak of being as drunk as an ass, a cow, a Swiss or a thrush. The allusion in the last case is to the fondness of thrushes for grapes, which are said at vintage time to make them unsteady in their flight.

Worse Inside Than Out.

"If you should visit a Japanese house," said an oriental, "you would be obliged to remove your shoes at the doorway. Japanese floors are very beautifully kept. I know of some houses where thirty or forty servants have no other duty than the polishing of the floors. A young Japanese student, studying in London, had the misfortune to live in an apartment house where the janitor did not keep the hall in very good condition. It was a great change to him, and he felt it keenly. On the approach of winter the janitor put up in the entrance the notice, 'Please wipe your feet.' The young Japanese, the first night he observed this notice, took out a pencil and added to it, 'On going out.'"

A Tale of Red Tape.

Among the tales of red tape the following should hold a high place: M. Roger Cavailhon, a young French gentleman rider, who had won his hundredth steeplechase, was drawn for the conscription and had to serve for a year. He asked to be placed in the cavalry, explaining with due modesty that he was not unknown as a horseman. The military council of revision refused the request on the ground that as his period of service was only one year he would not have time to learn to ride.

A Strong Reason.

The bookkeeper of a sportsmen's publication received a letter one day from an old subscriber stating that he had long read it with interest and was aware that it was time to renew his subscription, but did not wish to do so, as he would not need it in the future. It was not noticed that the postmark was that of a town in which a state prison is located, but the postscript was eloquent. It said, "P. S.—I am to be hanged next week."

In a Studio.

"I ordered you to paint me some cows in a stable. I see the stable, but where are the cows?"

"They are in the stable."

"So is your pay for this picture. You had better bring both out."—Saeta.

SELECTIONS

GILA MONSTERS.

Their Bite Is Sometimes Fatal and Always Dangerous.

In a recent issue of the Scientific American an article appeared written by D. Allen Willey describing the Gila monster. The statement was made in the article that scientists had questioned whether its bite was fatally poisonous, as has been supposed. W. C. Barnes of Las Vegas, N. M., claims to know of two cases, in one of which death resulted. Mr. Barnes writes as follows:

"The first man was in Tombstone, Ariz. The Gila was tied by the leg in a saloon as a curio, and a drunken gambler named Brown was teasing it. He carelessly stuck his first two fingers into its mouth, which immediately closed down on them and could not be released until the reptile's head was cut off and the jaws cut apart. Brown suffered horrible agony for almost two days, and in spite of all efforts he died.

"The second case was in the fall of 1880. Walter Vail started from the Empire ranch, near Benson, Ariz., to ride into town on horseback, some fifteen miles. A short distance from the ranch a monster was sluggishly dragging its way across the road. Thinking to take it in for a friend, he got down and killed it, or at least he thought he killed it. To carry it easily he tied it on his saddle behind him, using his saddle string for the purpose. As he loped along he thought to assure himself it hadn't dropped off by reaching around behind him with his right hand and feeling for the monster.

"It was there and not nearly as dead as he thought. His first finger went into the reptile's mouth clear to the knuckle, and instantly those jaws with the long, sharp, daggerlike teeth closed on Vail's finger. With his left hand he managed to get his knife out and cut the saddle strings and then had to dissect the head and jaws to get his finger from their grip.

"Vail then spurred his horse into Benson and found an engine in the yards. A hasty exchange of telegrams with the division superintendent and Tucson took place, and in a few moments he was on the engine and racing over the road for Tucson, where an eminent surgeon resided at that time. Vail lay at death's door for two months, and that finger today is useless and shriveled up from the effect of the bite."

A Denatured Alcohol Test.

A careful test of denatured alcohol was lately made by the driver of an automobile, who drove his machine from New York to Philadelphia with alcohol fuel. He found advantages and disadvantages in the use of it. The auto consumed three times as much alcohol as it would have consumed of gasoline, but a part of the excess was due to carelessness. The speed was less than gasoline would have given, and the power developed was less. But it is to be born in mind that the engine was not constructed to use alcohol. The new fuel is absolutely safe, and has a less disagreeable odor. On the whole, he got everything he expected out of alcohol, and, although he does not expect a general adoption of it for pleasure vehicles, he foresees a large use of it by the farmers of the west.—Youth's Companion.

The Chinese Farmer.

Harry L. Paddock, United States consul at Amoy, China, writes: "The Chinese farmer is up before daybreak and at work in his sterile fields—fields whose productivity has been exhausted except under high fertilization. He returns to his little shanty after nightfall. To the view of the foreigner he never rests, and for this never ending labor he raises a crop of rice or corn that does not support his family for the year. His clothing consists of a loin cloth in summer and a coarse cotton suit in the winter. Farmers, like all laborers and artisans of China, work hard to live. Laborers earn 10 cents a day, masons 15 cents, artisans 10 to 20 cents and clerks 40 to 50 cents."

England's War Footing.

It is seven years since the British empire reeled from the blow dealt to its military prestige in South Africa, but all the good resolutions formed then have come to nothing. There is not the slightest doubt that had England possessed a national statesman of courage and foresight the opportunity might have been turned toward better things, but we had none such. We are today in a relatively worse position than we were in 1899.—London Broad Arrow.

Our Own Honesty.

While the Japanese are being lectured on the necessity for commercial honesty it is instructive to read that a line of $2.75 shoes from America was lately landed in Australia of which the Sydney Bulletin says, "The only scrap of real leather about them was a shaving on the soles, the rest consisting of a cloth that looked like kid, some wood, some paper and about eighty stitches."—Springfield Union.

Skyscrapers For Egypt.

American skyscrapers from nine to ten stories high are to be erected near the pyramids of Gizeh, in Egypt. Permission for the erection of homes and hotels in the great plain extending from Eskebich to the Nile and covered with ancient sphinxes and structures has been granted by the Egyptian government. Several associations have been formed for the building of large hotels in this district.

A REIGN OF TERROR.

The Kind of Life They Lead in Baku, in Southern Russia.

Henry M. Nevinson, a British newspaper correspondent, writes as follows of present day events in Baku, southern Russia: "'You parasite!' When you open a letter at breakfast and find that written at the top instead of 'Dear sir' or 'My darling love' your attention is immediately drawn to the contents. But here in Baku, if you happen to be the hardworking manager of a rich field with lots of wells yielding some 200,000 pounds of oil apiece every twenty-four hours, you will not be so much surprised. You will know at once what is coming, and your first thought will be a visit to your banker's. 'Our agents,' the letter goes on, 'will call on you tomorrow afternoon at 5 o'clock and you will give them the sum of $750. Should you refuse you will be killed tomorrow or next day. Should you betray our agents or give the smallest hint to the police the whole of your family will share your fate. Signed and sealed on behalf of the committee.' The seal is a rubber stamp in red, sometimes bearing the words, 'Social Democratic Federation,' sometimes 'Anarchist Commune.' The sum demanded varies considerably. I think it is seldom over $1,000, for one must be reasonable in these matters, and usually it is less. I have known a popular and capable English manager to get off with $25, which is a ludicrous exchange for life. But when the agents ring at the door and ask the servant if you are at home and disengaged, the only thing to do is to pay.

"For there is no pretense about the threats. Refusal or betrayal means death without pause, probably within the day. It has been proved over and over again. It was proved last week in the case of a well known and powerful manager who was murdered with revolvers. It was proved the day before yesterday when a Russian manager was disemboweled with knives and lived a horrible time. Anyhow, if you think it worth while to live a little longer here below, you must pay and try to reclaim from the company. Whether the company will ever get anything by reclaiming from the Russian government heaven knows. The government is too busy with the troublesome and expensive task of shooting its political opponents or sending them to Siberia to undertake the protection of commonplace citizens who have no perilous notions about freedom.

"Most conspicuous men employ armed retainers to protect them or avenge their death. Some publish from time to time in the local papers a list of the men who will be at once assassinated if anything happens to themselves. This is thought very efficacious and certainly helps to preserve the peace. I know one manager who boasts he has 200 men in his pay, each pledged to kill some one if the manager is murdered. Pride may have exaggerated the number, but there is no doubt about the system."

A Cigar Store Secret.

Every tobacconist has on his counter a machine for cutting off the ends of cigars. These machines are popular for the reason that they pay for themselves many times over every year.

The ends that smokers cut off are carefully gathered from the counter, and it takes but a few hundred of them to make a pound of good tobacco. This can be sold for 40 or 50 cents.

Some cigar store clerks are very solicitous to see that the patron does not overlook the cutting machine. They push it toward him, and he is much impressed with their politeness. These clerks have for a perquisite the machine's cuttings. This adds several dollars weekly to their salaries.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Australia's Wealth In Sheep.

The greatest industry of Australia is sheep raising, mainly for the sake of the wool, but also in part of course for the meat. Australia now ranks second among the great sheep raising countries, Argentina being first with 92,000,000 sheep, Australia second with 72,000,000 and Russia third with 70,000,000. But a few years ago Australia was first, possessing no less than 106,260,000 head of sheep. That was in 1891. Prolonged droughts were the cause of the destruction of many millions of Australian sheep, but since 1902 there has been an annual gain. Yet these sheep were not indigenous to Australia. They were first introduced in 1797, being of the Spanish merino species.

Platinum Vanishing.

A prominent French writer deplores the vanishing stock of the world's platinum, says the London Globe. All the known deposits are becoming exhausted, and the price is going up to a prohibitive extent. In 1876 the metal could be bought for $100 the kilogram. Four years later it had doubled, in 1901 it had quadrupled, and today the price is $1,200 per kilogram, or twice the price of gold. Even that is for crude platinum. The worked metal is twice as dear again. Considering how many industries are now absolutely dependent on platinum, the question of replacing it by some really efficient alloy or combination is acquiring vital importance.

Aged Golf Players.

One of the great advantages of golf is its suitability as a recreation for the middle aged and the old. A "foursome" was played lately on an English golf course in which the aggregate age of the four players was 331 years. The competitors on one side were eighty-six and eighty years old and on the other side eighty-four and eighty-one. The putting green makes a green old age.

Learn Dressmaking.

IN TWO WEEKS.

We teach you everything, from the plainest shirt waist to the most elaborate toilette that can be found in the fashion books. We show you how to put together not only the lining but all the outer goods in coats, skirts waists, wrappers, sleeves, children's dresses, collars, etc. Why spend months at a shop where you do nothing but hem, overcast, sew on hooks and eyes, and then after you have served your time there, what do you know about cutting? Absolutely nothing! For you will know no more how to cut out a dress at the end of a year than you did the first day you went there; so why spend your time there; you can come and try for a week and see for yourself what it's like, and as there is nothing to be paid in advance, you certainly would not lose anything by trying.

We have taught over 2,000 in this way within the past six years, and all recommend it very highly; we teach you how to use a chart the first day you are with us; also guarantee that the waists made by this chart will not draw nor pull out of place when raising arm.

Charge for full course is only $10, to be paid when course is completed, if satisfied, including one of the most perfect fitting systems in use, which we give free.

We will teach at Belleville from April 8th to April 20th. Hours for day class from 8.30 to 5. All wishing to learn or for full particulars, be sure to see us at the KYLE HOUSE, on Saturday, April 6th, between 10 and 5 o'clock. An evening class will also be taught; in this class we teach shirt waists, sleeves and dressing sasques only. Terms $4 and hours from 7 to 9. Remember there is no pay in advance, you can all come and try.

THE NOISY FAMILY.

(London Globe.)

We once were quite a quiet lot,
  Our voices soft and meek;
You sometimes had to strain your ears
  Before you heard us speak.
I often used to say, "How free
  We are from every jar!
We are a happy family—
  We are! We are!! We are!!!

But things have moved since then, and oh!
  The troubles we're among!
For Jane has got the Hockey Voice,
  And Maud the Tennis Tongue;
And Ethel's strident Croquet Shouts
  Our placid evenings mar.
We are a happy family—
  We are! We are!! We are!!!

Now Aunt Matilda's growing deaf,
  And I've got headache, too;
The butler, when the noise begins,
  (His nerves are weak) turns blue.
It wrecks my appetite, and spoils
  My after-meal cigar—
We are a happy family—
  We are! We are!! We are!!!

AN INDIAN MYSTERY.

The White Woman Who Fought With the Tonto Apaches.

In 1864 Dr. Alsap and Lord Duppa, well known pioneers, were prospecting with a party in the Bradshaw mountains on the Hassayampa creek. One morning the party separated for the purpose of hunting. In going up a canyon, in which they were separated from their companions by high mountains, Duppa's detachment was attacked by a large band of Tonto Apaches. The whites gradually fought their way across the ridge with the hope of rejoining their companions. During the advance Duppa, who was stationed behind a rock, noticed that he was the particular mark of an Indian with a bow. Several arrows had fallen at his feet, and one struck him in the arm. Raising his rifle, he took aim, and just as he was touching the trigger the supposed Indian cried, "Don't shoot!" in good English, but it was too late, and the body fell over with life extinct. Soon after the two parties succeeded in forming a junction, and the Indians retreated, leaving their dead.

Out of curiosity the party returned to the place where Duppa killed the supposed Indian and found that it was a white woman, evidently about thirty years of age and dressed in all the paraphernalia of the Apaches. Investigation was made, but no trace of her former whereabouts could ever be obtained.

THE UNEXPLORED.

Many Regions of the Earth Still Remain a Mystery.

Many years will elapse before any other continent is as well mapped as Europe, and perhaps the era of perfected mapping all over the world may never come, because surveys are very expensive and the five other continents have far greater expanses than Europe of comparatively worthless lands that do not call for the most detailed and refined cartography. But a large amount of pioneer work still invites the explorer, for many of the unknown areas have much territorial extent.

In the Amazon basin, for example, three of these regions are each much larger than all of our New England states. One unknown area in northwest Alaska is nearly as large as New England, and the Sahara has two areas in black that are each twice as large and another three times as large as New England.

Asia still has several of these vast mysterious spaces, and the solid chunk of the unknown in New Guinea, the largest island in the world excepting Greenland, would swallow up New England and leave a black border all around it.—Cyrus C. Adams in Harper's.

"Leaves."

To him who is penetrated by true principles even the briefest precept is sufficient, and common precept, to remind him that he should be free from grief and fear. For example, says Homer:

Leaves—some the wind scatters on the ground—
So is the race of men.

Leaves also are thy children, and leaves, too, are they who cry out as if they were worthy of credit and bestow their praise or, on the contrary, curse or secretly blame and sneer, and leaves in like manner are those who shall receive and transmit a man's fame to aftertimes, for all such things as these "are produced in the season of spring," as the poet says. Then the wind casts them down. Then the forest produces other leaves in their places. But a brief existence is common to all things, and yet thou avoidest and pursuest all things as if they would be eternal. A little time, and thou shalt close thy eyes, and him who has attended thee to thy grave another soon will lament.

Curious Nesting Habits.

Many birds in their nesting habits have accommodated themselves to the advance of civilization. Thus the barn and cliff swallows, which once built under overhanging cliffs and in caves, now place their nests on the rafters and beneath the eaves of our barns. The chimney swift, which originally placed its nest on the inside of hollow trees, now uses our chimneys for that purpose. The purple martin, once nesting exclusively in holes in trees, will now in many sections of the country use nothing but the bird boxes which kind hearted men have erected.

Handicapped.

"Too bad about Keene. There's a fund of good humorous stuff in the antics of the would be society people in his new neighborhood."

"Well, he's just the fellow to take advantage of that for his funny sketches."

"Yes, but his wife is trying to get into society there."

He Couldn't Object.

Clerk—You can't get a room here for that man. He's drunk. Man (supporting a weary friend)—That's all right. What of that? Clerk—This is a temperance hotel. Man—Well, he's too drunk to know the difference.

Trouble Ahead.

"Is your husband up yet?" asked the early caller of the sour faced woman at the door. "I expect he is," was the reply. "I'd like to see him for a few minutes." "So would I. He hasn't come home yet."

The truth of it is those who best deserve praise have generally the most exquisite relish of it.—Steele.

QUAINT QUEBEC.

The Old World Charm That Crowns This Picturesque City.

Dear, delightful old Quebec, with her gray walls and shining tin roofs; her precipitous, headlong streets and sleepy squares and esplanades; her narrow alleys and peaceful convents; her harmless antique cannon on the parapets and her sweet toned bells in the spires; her towering chateau on the heights and her long, low, queer smelling warehouses in the lower town; her spick and span caleches and her dingy trolley cars; her sprinkling of soldiers and sailors with Scotch accent and Irish brogue and cockney, twdng on a background of petite bourgeoise speaking the quaintest of French dialects; her memories of an adventurous glittering past and her placid contentment with the tranquil grayness of the present; her glorious daylight outlook over the vale of the St. Charles, the level shore of Montmorenci, the green Ile d'Orleans dividing the shining reaches of the broad St. Lawrence, and the blue Laurentian mountains rolling far to the eastward, and at night the dark bulk of the citadel outlined against the starry blue, and far below the huddled housetops, the silent wharfs, the lights of the great warships swinging with the tide, the intermittent ferryboats plying to and fro, the twinkling lamps of Levis rising along the dim southern shore and reflected on the lapsing, curling seaward sliding waves of the great river! What city of the new world keeps so much of the charm of the old?—Henry Van Dyke in Scribner's Magazine.

STAMPING ENVELOPES.

Queer Ways Some Folks Have of Doing This Simple Act.

"The only way to stop people from plastering a stamp at any old place upon the envelope except the right one is to do as is done in England. There a letter which does not have the stamp in the right position is cast aside and handled only when all other mail is sorted and exchanged." This idea was advanced by a postal clerk quoted by the Philadelphia Record. "We often lose considerable time because of these letters," continued the clerk, "for often we have to stop and turn over an envelope to find the stamp. We do not mind so much the love sick youth or maiden who places the stamp on the center of the envelope, because a stamp so placed can be seen at a glance, but it is chiefly with the foreigners that we have the trouble. These people invariably put on a stamp at any but the right place, and you would be surprised to know how they do it. Why, I have seen letters upon which the stamps have been placed on the back of the envelope at the point where the society girl will put her monogram in sealing wax. Others when they have to pay, say, 5 cents postage will buy five one-cent stamps and put one on each corner of the envelope, with the remaining one acting as a seal upon the back."

An Exciting Escape.

Prince Kropotkin, the Russian revolutionist, once made an exciting escape from a fortress prison in St. Petersburg. After two years in the prison he had been removed to the jail hospital, where plans were matured by his friends for his flight. He was allowed to walk for an hour each afternoon, guarded by armed sentries, in the grounds. A line of spies outside maintained a system of signals to notify the prince when the adjoining streets should be clear. When all was well a friend in a kiosk opposite the gates played upon a violin. After one or two false starts the violinist burst into a mad melody, and the prisoner, flinging off an outer garment, leaped for it. Sentries tried to stab him with their bayonets; others hesitated to shoot, believing that they could catch him. A carriage with a racing horse in the shafts was waiting. Into it he sprang, and they left at a gallop. His beard was cut off, his clothes changed, and he spent the first hours of his hiding in the best cafe in St. Petersburg.

The Amateur Detective.

Said the man in the restaurant to the other across the table:

"I'll bet you're a druggist."

"No; you're wrong."

"A chemist, then?"

"Wrong again."

"A photographer?"

"This time you're right. How did you guess it?"

"It was simple enough," was the answer. "I guessed it from the way you held the vinegar cruet in making your salad. You placed your little finger at the bottom of the bottle. No one but a man accustomed to measuring out graduated and exact quantities does that."

Could Thin Them Out.

The Hon. H. L. Dawes in his young manhood was an [illegible] speaker. Participating in a [illegible] soon after his admission to the bar before a North Adams justice of the peace, Dawes was opposed by an older attorney whose eloquence attracted a crowd that packed the courtroom. The justice was freely perspiring, and, drawing off his coat in the midst of the lawyer's eloquent address, he said:

"Mr. Attorney, suppose you sit down and let Dawes begin to speak. I want to thin out this crowd."

Would Cost Her More.

"You naughty child, where have you been? You have been fighting again with Paul. Just look at your clothes! I'll have to buy you a new suit."

"Don't you say anything, ma. You ought to see Paul. I think his mother will have to buy a new boy."—Exchange.

"May Monseigneur le Duc be happy in his love!" the wench said, as she bit the coin before she placed it in her bodice, and Andre remarked with approval the whiteness of her teeth. If her face was not pretty her body was both trim and sturdy, and she walked with the easy swing of perfect health. He could have kissed her smutty face then just because the world was so fair and he was free.

"You have a magnificent cow, my dear," he remarked.

"But certainly," she answered and her white teeth sparkled through her happy laugh, "better a fat cow for a wench than a lean husband. She carries me, does my spotted cow, which no husband would do," and she scrambled on to the glossy back and laughed again, throwing back her shock of flaxen hair. Andre observed, heedful by long experience of such trifles, that not even her clumsy sabots could spoil the dainty neatness of her feet.

"And what may your name be?" he demanded.

"Yvonne, Monsieur le Duc; they call me Yvonne of the Spotted Cow, and some," she dimpled into a chuckle, "Yvonne of the Spotless Ankles. I am not pretty, moi, but that matters not. My fat cow or my ankles will get me a husband some day, and till then, like Monseigneur, I keep a gay heart."

Whereupon she drove her heels into the cow's flanks and the two slowly passed out of sight, though the merry tinkling of the bell continued to jingle through the leafles trees long after she had disappeared.

Andre waited patiently. An hour went by, still he waited. Twice he trotted up the road and peered this way and that, but there was not a soul to be seen, and with a muttered exclamation of disgust he was about to spur away when the notes of a hunting horn caused him to gather up the reins sharply. And now eager expectation was written on every line of his face.

A young lady in a beautiful riding dress of hunting green, and attended by a single lackey on horseback, came galloping down the forest track. At sight of him by the roadside she pulled up her horse in great astonishment.

"Andre—you—you are back!" she said, and the color flooded into her cheeks.

"Thank God, yes."

"And well?"

"Perfectly. My wounds are healed. I am a prisoner no longer, and in a fortnight I return to the Low Countries to seek revenge from my enemies and yours, Denise, the English."

Her grey eyes flashed, then dropped modestly. "You will find revenge, little doubt," she said, "the Maison du Roi are soldiers worthy of the noblesse and of France. But do you not come to Versailles first?"

"No. My company is not on duty this month at the Palace and in April we shall all be with His Majesty in Flanders."

"Yes," she answered, "I forgot."

She began to stroke her horse's neck in some embarrassment. Andre gazed at her with the hungry eyes of a starved lover, and indeed this girl was worthy of a soldier's homage. Neither a brunette nor a blonde, for her eyes were grey and their lashes almost black, though her hair was fair and the tint of her cheeks in the morning air delicate as the tint of a tender rose. Beautiful, yes! but something much more than beautiful. A great noble this lady surely, one who saw in kings and queens no more than an equal, and in palaces the only fit home of beauty nobly born, one to whom centuries of command had bequeathed a tone and quality which men and women can inherit but not acquire.

"And when I return," Andre said at last, " shall I find at Versailles what I desire more than revenge?"

"What is that?" she asked innocently.

"Can you not guess? Have you forgotten? Ah, Denise, twelve months ago you promised——"

"No, no," she broke in, eagerly, "I said I would reflect."

"There is only one thing that a poor Vicomte and a soldier of France can desire—your heart, Denise; your love, Denise; the heart and the love of the most beautiful and loyal woman in France, the heart of the Marquise de Beau Sejour. And Andre de Nerac loves the Marquise as he loves France. Can he say more?"

"I think not," she said, averting her eyes, "and the Marquise de Beau Sejour thanks the Vicomte de Nerac for his words and his homage—to France."

"I do not desire thanks—I——"

"Then go and do your duty as a noble and a soldier, and when peace and victory are ours perhaps I——"

"I cannot wait till then. Have pity, Denise, have pity on the man who was your playmate, who loved you then and who loves you now. Remember, remember, I beg you, that over there in England the one thought that consoled my prisoner's lot was the hope that when I returned to you—you would——"

"But, Andre, I cannot give you an answer, here, now——"

"Give it me then before I return to the war, that I may know whether I am to live in hope, or to die sword in hand and in despair."

"There is more than one marquise in the world," she said, quietly.

"Not for me."

Denise looked at him, and he dropped his eyes, for he understood the calm reproach.

"Very well," she said, with decision. "I go to my home to-morrow. You shall have my answer in four days at the Chateau de Beau Sejour if you care enough to come and hear it."

"If—" he broke off. "Ah, Denise—!" he stretched out a passionate hand.

"Hush! There is some one coming."

A young man was galloping towards them, a boy he seemed, saucy, insolent, handsome, fair, with great blue eyes sparkling with the gayest, wickedest, most careless joy of living. Removing his plumed hat with an airy sweep he kissed the lady's fingers, bowed low in the saddle, and looked into her face:

"Marquise," were his words, "the company and His Majesty await you." His dare-devil eyes roved on to Andre's face with a studied insouciance, but Andre gave him back the look, and more.

Denise made haste to present the young man. "Monsieur le Chevalier de St. Amant, secretary of the King's Cabinet," she said and her eyes pleaded for politeness from both.

"Monsieur le Vicomte goes to the war?" the Chevalier asked, carelessly.

"As all true subjects of His Majesty ought to do," Andre retorted.

"Except," said the Chevalier, bowing to Denise, "those who find more pleasant pastime here at home."

"It is curious," Andre remarked, as if he had not heard, "that I who have known Versailles for ten years learn to-day for the first time of St. Amant. Where is St. Amant?"

"Ah," answered the Chevalier, laughing, "in this life, Vicomte, we are always learning what is disagreeable. The dull philosophers of whom we hear so much in Paris at present say soldiers learn more than others—or ought to? Perhaps you differ from them?"

"Ma foi! no. For when it is necessary the soldiers teach what they have learned to the young men and the schoolboys, which is very good for the schoolboys. But perhaps you, sir, do not like lessons?"

"No, oh, no! my only regret at present is that I cannot stay now and have one at once. But Mademoiselle la Marquise will take your place and I can learn, as we ride together, something that she alone can teach. Monsieur le Vicomte, I have the honor to wish you good-morning, and good-by." He raised his plumed hat and galloped with the Denise.

The flush in Andre's cheek did not die out for some minutes. "Upstart! Puppy!" he continued to mutter while his eyes glittered and his fingers twitched involuntarily on the handle of his sword. But his wrath and his scowls were suddenly dispelled in the most unexpected and agreeable way. A crisp tinkle of bells, the crack of a whip, and down the road came driving an ethereal phaeton, azure blue in color, and in it sat an enchantress most bewitchingly clad in rose pink.

She too appeared to be waiting for somebody or something, for she pulled up ten yards off and gazed in the direction of the hunting horns which could be heard distinctly in the depths of the wood. To Andre she was most annoyingly indifferent, but the more he looked at her and marked her exquisite dress, her wonderful complexion, her seductive figure, and her entrancing equipage, the keener was his chagrin. Who was this airy sylph of the royal forest, this divinity floating in the rose of the queen of flowers through a leafless world as Venus might have floated on the sun-kissed foam at dawn? Gods! What a taste in dress, what a bust, and what amorous, saucy charm in her eye!

Andre fell back behind the trees and watched; nor did he have to wait long. In five minutes the royal hunting train swept by. The rose-pink lady curtsied to her sovereign. A cry of distress! Her hat caught by a sudden gust—surely it was very loosely set on that dainty head—flew off and fell almost under the hoofs of the horse of the King of France. His Majesty looked up, coldly, caught her appealing eye, looked down at the hat, and galloped on as if he had seen neither the hat nor its owner. The royal party behaved exactly as did their master, and the rose-pink goddess was left with disgust and indignation in her face and a tear trickling down her cheek.

Andre moved his horse forward, whereupon she threw a glance over her shoulder almost comic in its pathos and its amusement, as if she did not know whether to laugh or to cry; a glance which convinced his susceptible heart that she had been perfectly well aware of his presence all the while and now invited him to take what she had always intended he should have. In a second he was off his horse and was handing her the hat. Her bow and her smile were more than a reward, for if the rose-pink divinity was alluring seen from behind, she was positively bewitching at a distance of four feet in front. What wonderful eyes! They spoke at once of everything that could stir a soldier's soul, and her blush was the blush of Aurora.

With the prettiest hesitation she inquired his name, which he only gave on condition that she should also tell hers. But this she laughingly refused. "My name is nothing," she remarked, "for I am nobody. If you knew it you would despise yourself for having been polite to a bourgeoise."

"Impossible!" Andre cried.

"But it is so," she persisted, gravely, a challenge stealing from under her demure eyelashes.

"I shall find out," Andre said, "I shall not rest till I find out."

"Then inquire," she retorted gaily, "Rue Croix des Petits Champs—perhaps you will succeed," and without more ado she flashed him a look of defiant modesty, whipped up her ponies, and the azure phaeton vanished as rapidly as it had appeared.

Andre stroked his chin meditatively. What did it mean? Who was the unknown and why did she come to the woods in that enchanting guise? A bourgeoise! Pah! it would be well if all the women of the bourgeoisie and some of the noblesse possessed but one of the secrets of her irresistible womanhood. But find out he must, and Andre, hot on this new quest, began to trot away. He was in a rare humor now, for he had noticed with unbounded satisfaction that, while Denise had been of the royal party, that boyish Chevalier had not.

But he had not ridden far when he was amazed to discover by the roadside Yvonne of the Spotless Ankles weeping as if her heart would break.

"What is the matter?" he demanded.

"Monseigneur—ah! it is the good Monseigneur—" she fell to crying again. "They have stolen my spotted cow," she sobbed, "robbers have stolen my spotted cow."

"Robbers?"

"But yes, three great robbers, and they have beaten me and taken Monseigneur's piece too. My cow, my spotted cow!"

"See, Yvonne," he said soothingly, "I am no monseigneur, I am only a poor vicomte, but you shall have another cow, a spotted cow, too."

But she would not believe it, whereupon he took all the money in his purse, four gold pieces and three silver ones, and thrust them into her hand.

She stared at the money incredulously.

"There, girl," he urged, for a woman's distress, even though she were only a peasant, hurt him, "be happy and buy a fat and spotted cow."

She kneeled to kiss his hand. "Monseigneur," she sobbed, "is kind to a poor wench. Surely the good God has sent him to me/" and she poured her hot tears of gratitude on the ruffles of his sleeve.

"I am happy again," she murmured. "Yes, I will buy a cow and be happy," and she began to sing, flinging the coarse matted hair out of her eyes.

Andre watched her contentedly; it was pleasant to see her joy.

"Monseigneur is not happy," she surprised him by saying shyly.

"Can the poor be happy?" he asked, absently, for he was thinking of the goddess in pink.

"No," she muttered, "not while there are robbers in the land, and the poor are taxed till they starve. Monseigneur is in love. Did I not see him talk with the great lady in green?" she added suddenly. "Ah, if Monseigneur would listen to a poor girl he too could be happy."

"Peace!" he commanded, but he was much amused.

"I too was in love," she answered, "and women stole my lover from me as the robbers stole my cow, and I was sick. I wasted away, but the good God who sent me Monseigneur put it into my heart to go to the wise woman who lives at 'The Cock with the Spurs of Gold'——"

"The Cock——?"

"'Tis a new tavern in the woods by the village yonder," she replied earnestly, "and a wise woman lives there. For one piece of silver she brought me back my lover. They say she is a witch, but she is no witch, for with the help of the good God she cured my sickness and changed my lover's heart so that once again he was as he had been."

"Tush!" Andre interrupted, impatiently.

"But it is true," she persisted. "And if Monseigneur is in distress, he, too, should go to the wise woman, and she will make him happy. It is so, it is so."

"Adieu, my child, adieu!"

"Monseigneur will not forget. 'The Cock with the Spurs of Gold,' in the woods——"

He gave her matted head a pat. It was a pity she was not pretty, this wench, for she had a buxom figure. "A soldier," he said lightly, "does not love wise women, Yvonne, he loves only the young and the fair and he wins them not by sorcery, but by his sword."

"Monseigneur is a soldier?" she asked with grave interest.

"Yes, a soldier of France."

"My lover too is a soldier, but not as Monseigneur. Ah!" she whispered, "if all the nobles of France were as Monseigneur there would be no unhappy women, no robbers, and no poor."

Andre left her there. His heart was gay again though his purse was empty, for he had made a woman happy. And as he rode through the woods he could hear her singing as she had sung when he had seen her first on te sleek back of her spotted cow. And all the way to Paris that song of a peasant wench softly caressed his spirit, for it clinked gaily to the echoes of the soul as might have clinked the golden spurs of the cock in the woods of Versailles, and it was fresh with the eternal freshness of spring and the immortal dreams of youth.

CHAPTER IV.

The March sun was setting on the hamlet of La Riviere, in the pleasant land of Touraine—Touraine the fit home of so many noble chateaux, the cradle of so many of the proudest traditions and the most inspiring memories of the romance of love and chivalry in the history of France.

Andre was standing in the churchyard of the hamlet, but it was not at the landscape that he knew so well that he was looking, nor even up the slope beyond, where the great Chateau de Beau Sejour shot its towers and pointed turrets through its encircling domain of wood. Ten leagues away in the dim distance lay Nerac, the poverty-stricken home from which he took his title, and whose meagre patrimony encumbered with the debts of his ancestors and his own barely sufficed to provide a living for the widowed mother to whom that morning he had said good-bye and whom the English in the Low Countries might decide he should never see again.

Yet it was not of his mother that he was thinking, still less of the enchantress of the forest whose identity he had discovered—one Mademoiselle d'Etiolles she had proved to be, "La Petite d'Etiolles," as that gay Lothario the Duc de Richelieu called her, the daughter of a Farmer-General, a bourgeoise notorious for her beauty, her wit, and her friendship with the wits. Indeed he had forgotten the rose-pink divinity in the azure phaeton entirely. No, he was striving to pluck up courage to face Denise and receive her answer. For if that answer was not what he desired it would be better to ride straight down into the Loire and let the last male of the House of Nerac put an end to it for ever.

Twinkling lights began to shine in the great chateau; its towers and gables insolent in the majesty of their beauty, strong in the might of their antiquity, challenged and defied him in the dusk. That was the chateau of his

AERIAL TELEGRAPHY.

First Attempted by Amontons in the Fifteenth Century.

One of the first systems of aerial telegraphy was attempted in the fifteenth century. The originator was Amontons, at that time considered one of the cleverest scientists of the world. Yet you never hear the name nowadays in connection with that of Morse or Bell. However, Amontons developed a system of signal telegraphy so that a message could be sent from Paris to Rome in three hours. Those who assisted in the transmission of the message along the line were unable to tell the nature of the message.

Posts were placed from Paris across the Alps at consecutive points, where men were stationed with telescopes. Different signals, representing combinations of letters, were run up at each post. The man at the other end, seeing the signal, placed a similar one before his post, and so the message was carried to its destination.

The key to the signal was known only to those who sent the messages in Paris and to the recipients a thousand miles away. Amontons was not encouraged in his work by the puffy, gouty functionaries of the time and discontinued his efforts.

THE COTTAGE.

It Should Be Without Sham Elegance and Elaboration.

There are cottages and cottages. Any modest, unpretentious house designed on strictly economical lines may be fitly called a cottage, and it is more satisfactory to regard one's own simple little abode as a well built, commodious cottage than as a small house of comparatively cheap construction and cramped dimensions. It is when given to the big swaggering seaside houses of the rich that the term "cottage" becomes a misnomer and an affectation. To the man of moderate means the very idea of building a cottage rather than a house carries with it a sense of making a home within his means free from vain striving for a sham elegance and elaboration. The cottage which apes the mansion is as absurd as the affected and exaggerated dignity of the pompous and undersized individual who seeks to create an impression out of all proportion to his real importance.

Since simplicity is one of the main attributes of a well designed cottage, its charm and effectiveness must depend upon the quiet excellence of its proportion and the harmonious and unobtrusive quality of its coloring in relation to its surroundings.—Robert C. Spencer in House Beautiful.

MISLED BY PARROTS.

How Columbus Missed the Honor of Discovering This Continent.

A flight of birds, coupled with a sailor's superstition, robbed Columbus of the honor of discovering the continent. When Columbus sailed westward over the unknown Atlantic, he expected to reach Zipangu (Japan). After several days' sail from Gomera, one of the Canary islands, he became uneasy at not discovering Zipangu, which, according to his reckonings, should have been 216 nautical miles more to the east.

After a long discussion he yielded to the opinion of Martin Alonzo Pinzon, the commander of the Pinta, and steered to the southwest. Pinson was guided in his opinion solely by a flight of parrots which took wing in that direction. It was good luck to follow in the wake of a flock of birds when engaged upon a voyage of discovery, according to widespread superstition among Spanish seamen of that day.

If Columbus had kept to his course, he would have entered the gulf stream, have reached Florida and then probably have been carried to Cape Hatteras and Virginia.

On the Bias.

"What do people mean when they talk about tacking?" asked Bobby, who had listened to a detailed account of his sister's first experience in a sailboat, but in much confusion of mind.

"Oh, you'll know when you're a little bit older," said his sister, but the small round face wore an expression of injury, and she had to explain further.

"Why, it's just turning halfway round," she said, with slight hesitation, "and then—and then you sail on the bias."

Old Age and Work.

Old people make a great mistake when they give up work. Many men who have made a competency in business and feel entitled to retire from active work find themselves declining in health and becoming prematurely old for want of occupation. In most aged persons the vital functions continue in active exercise under normal conditions, but if the regularity and moderation of business life are departed from trouble will surely follow.—London Lancet.

Crossed the Border.

A Mean Cut.

Dora—Is it true that Jack is going to marry you? Flora—Yes, dear. Dora—Well, you'd better make him sign the pledge. Flora—Why, Jack doesn't drink. Dora—No, but he probably will.

There is nothing so grievous to be borne that pondering upon it will not make it heavier, and there is no fancy so bad that the animation of fancy cannot enliven it.—Jane Porter.

THE POPULAR DISEASE.

An ache in the back and a pain in the head—
That's the grip!
A choke in the throat and a yearning for bed—
That's the grip!
A river of heat, then a shiver of cold,
A feeling of being three hundred years old,
A willingness even to do as you're told—
That's the grip!

An arrow of pain, now in this place, now that—
That's the grip!
A feeling of doubt as to where you are at—
That's the grip!
A stupid sensation—of course, wholly new!—
A foolish depression—why should you feel blue?—
A doubt as to whether this really is you—
That's the grip!

Strange visions at night that deprive you of rest—
That's the grip!
A taste in your mouth and a weight on your chest—
That's the grip!
A tired sensation that runs through your veins,
A queer combination of aches and of pains,
A vapid admission of absence of brains—
That's the grip!

A marvelous weakness, come on in a day—
That's the grip!
A petulant wonder, "How long will it stay?"—
That's the grip!
A season of fever, a season of freeze,
A quivering weakness that's felt at the knees—
Say, if ever there was a cuss-ed disease,
It's the grip!

Overheard in a Georgia Kitchen.

Not long ago an old colored cook in an Atlanta family was visited by one of her friends, who had but recently come from "down in de country," where both had been raised. The visitor was received with genuine darky cordiality and given a comfortable corner of "de white folks' kitchen." The Atlanta cook asked all kinds of questions as to what had been "gwine on" down in her old home, and among other queries was:

"What's cum er Mandy what use ter stay at Miss Willie's?"

"Law! Ain't you h'yeerd?"

"No!"

"She in jail."

"Hush!"

"Yaas, she is."

"What fer?"

"I d'no jes' what fer, but de man come an' 'res' her, an' de jedge fine her five an' cost, an' put her in de jail house. Miss Willie say hit wuz er shame ter 'res' a good cook like Mandy, an' she sen' her husban' down ter pay de fine, but Mandy say, 'Nem mine; she jes' stay whar she wuz till de time wus out, 'cause she need de rest.'"—Harper's Weekly.

Long Distance.

The Truant Angel.

Willie looked up into the sky and saw an airship for the first time. It was very high up and looked very small. After watching the wings on the machine flapping up and down, he said:

A Government to Kick About.

"We kick about our own government," said a reformer, "and it is doubtless pretty bad, but what would we think if it took the taxpayers' money to pay every year a pension of $50,000 to the Goulds, another of $75,000 to the Astors and another still of $25,000 to the Vanderbilts? That is what goes on in England. The English doctor, the English druggist, the English carpenter, all sorts of hardworking Englishmen, are taxed $200 or $300 a year, and the money goes to pay the huge pension of some ducal loafer who is already too rich. Charles II., for instance, granted an eternal pension of $95,000 a year to the Duke of Richmond and Gordon. In all the years since Charles II.'s time that pension has been paid out of the taxpayers' pockets. To this day it is paid. The present Duke of Richmond and Gordon settles for his dinners at the Ritz in London or at Ciro's in Monte Carlo with money earned by English butchers, bricklayers and blacksmiths."—Exchange.

The Lion's Mouth.

The use of the lion's mouth as the vent of a fountain is so common that it cannot be regarded as accidental. As a matter of fact, the custom (like so many customs—not forgetting the fountain pen) came from Egypt, which adopted it because the annual inundation of the Nile takes place when the sun is in the constellation Leo—the lion. The allusion is too obvious to need pointing out. The oldest fixed date (4241 B. C.) can be traced to Egypt, where the calendar was introduced in the middle of the forty-third century. And the history of modern shipbuilding began in Egypt, where it can be traced to about 3000 B. C. The most recent discoveries give to the land of Egypt a clean run of about 11,000 years without any admixture of foreign races. "Egypt, land of hidden mysteries, great mother of science and art, what thinking mind has not dreamed of thee!"

Husband Would Settle.

From India comes a story of the discomfiture of a very distinguished soldier. It happened at a big dinner, where he had taken in a pretty American globe trotter, who asked him to pass a dish of almonds and raisins.

"With pleasure," replied the gallant son of Mars, "but do you know that what you have asked for is called in the vernacular kissmiss and that the penalty of a kiss attaches to the request?"

"Is that so?" answered the woman calmly. "I must consult my husband," and she called across the table to him and told him of the request.

"Quite so," he replied, "according to the custom of the country it is a just debt and must be paid, but is the general aware of the arrangement made when we married that I must settle all my wife's liabilities?"

Submerged Aristocrats.

Some curious letters are quoted by Mr. Percival Bickerstaffe the pedigree searcher, in an interview with a representative of the London Tribune. One runs:

"I am a plumber and gasfiter out of work. My stummick is empty, but in my art is the blud of noble burth. * * * I claim the family title and tenements which I will not be denyed the same."

A city clerk wrote:

"I have long suspected that I am of high birth. People tell me that I have manners above my station of life. My photograph herewith shows that I have an aristocratic cast of face and will perhaps be a clew to my ancestry. I do not ask for fortune, but I aspire to the pride of race."

Beans to Separate Bones.

Anatomists, when they wish to separate the bones of a skull, sometimes resort to a very peculiar procedure. They fill the skull with small beans and place it in a vessel of water. The beans swell and rend the skull apart at the sutures. The well known German physiologist, Grehaut, measured the force which the beans are capable of exerting under these conditions and found that it indicated five atmospheres, equal to the average pressure in the boiler of a steam engine.

Put on More Than the Saddle.

A cookery teacher was giving a lesson to a class of children and questioning them on the joints of mutton. The neck, shoulder, leg and loin had been mentioned.

"Now," said the teacher, "there is another joint no one has mentioned. Come, Mary, I know your father is a groom; what does he often put on a horse?"

"A dollar each way, miss," was the unexpected answer.

Not a Dog.

Old Lady (to chemist)—I want a box of canine pills. Chemist—What's the matter with the dog? Old Lady (indignantly)—I want you to understand, sir, that my husband is a gentleman! (In profound silence the chemist put up some quinine pills.)—London Queen.

The Black Stone, at Mecca, is undoubtedly the oldest idol in the world. It was once white, but has been worn black by the kisses of the faithful.

Jamaica.

Jamaica is more populous in proportion to its size than Spain, Turkey, Russia and some other European countries. The white people, however, are outnumbered by the black and colored by nearly fifty to one.

Petrarch.

Meat For Dogs.

The coarser parts of meat are much better for dog pets than the better part of the steak. A dog should not be allowed to eat chicken or mutton chops, as the bones of both splinter and are bad for him.

Useless Tusks.

The curious piglike animal known as the babirussa has most remarkable tusks, which have long perplexed all students of animal life. As far as can be discovered, these tusks are useless to their owner. On the other hand, by collecting tufts of straw, grass and litter of all kinds, they seem to be an intolerable nuisance.

Hogs.

H. P. Kennedy reports prices for hogs at $6.85 for selects and $6.60 for lights and fats.

Montreal Live Stock.

Montreal, April 1.—(Special.)—Cables today from Liverpool and London on Canadian cattle were stronger and noted an advance in prices of ¼c to ½c per lb., as compared with a week ago, with sales at 12c to 12¼c; exports from St. John, N.B., last week, were 2287 cattle and from Portland 347, and for the month of March, from St. John, N.B., they were 5157, from Portland 5104. At the Montreal stock yards, west end market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending March 30, were 3322 cattle, 60 sheep and lambs, 2001 hogs and 2076 calves, and for the month of March they were 14,006 cattle, 1515 sheep and lambs, 8720 hogs and 6057 calves. The offerings this morning for local consumption were 400 cattle, 700 hogs and 25 calves. The trade in all lines generally at the first market after Easter is quiet, as most of the butchers have sufficient left over to supply their requirements for an extra week, but this evidently was not the case this year in spite of the active buying last week, as a fair number of buyers were on the market this morning and as they all wanted a few cattle, a moderate amount of business was done. A feature of the trade was the improved demand for exporters and, altho the offerings were not large to select from, yet there was some stock suitable for the purpose and they took several loads at prices ranging from $5.10 to $5.25 per cwt. This was probably due to the more encouraging cable advices from Liverpool on Saturday, which noted an advance in prices for Canadian cattle, owing to supplies being only moderate and they also stated that the prospects were better. The tone of the local market was steady and prices show no important change from a week ago. Choice beeves were scarce, in fact there were none on the market; good cattle sold at 5c to 5¼c; fair at 4½c to 4¾c, and lower grades at 3c to 4¼c per lb. A much stronger feeling prevailed in the hog situation and prices scored another advance, owing to the somewhat scarcity of supplies and the keen demand from local dealers for the same and without receipts increase in the near future the prospects are they will sell still higher. There was nothing in cable advices from Liverpool and London on Saturday on the Canadian bacon situation to warrant any further strength in the local market for hogs, as prices were unchanged from the week previous and compared with the same date last year, they are from 3c to 5c lower when selected hogs here at the same time were selling at $7.50 to $7.60 per cwt., weighed off the cars. These facts, however, seem to have no impression here at present, tho the demand from local dealers is in excess of the supply coming forward and sales of selected lots were made at $7.50 to $7.60 per cwt., weighed off the cars.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

East Buffalo, April 1.—Cattle—Receipts, 3000 head; active and 10c to 20c higher; prime steers, $5.60 to $6.10; shipping, $5 to $5.50; butchers', $4.30 to $5.35; heifers, $3.50 to $5.25; cows, $3 to $4.50; bulls, $3.25 to $4.65; stockers and feeders, $3.50 to $4.50; bulls, $3.25 to $4.65; stockers and feeders, $3.50 to $4.50; stock heifers, $2.75 to $3.25; fresh cows and springers steady, $20 to $52.

Hogs—Receipts, 12,800 head; active and 15c to 20c higher; heavy, $7 to $7.10; mixed and yorkers, $7 to $7.05; pigs, $7.05 to $7.10; roughs, $6.10 to $6.30; stags, $4.50 to $5.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 22,000 head; sheep active and steady; lambs slow and 20c lower; lambs, $5 to $8.45; yearlings, $7.50 to $7.75; wethers, $6.25 to $6.75; ewes, $4.75 to $6.25; sheep, mixed, $3 to $6.25.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

GRANGE MATTERS.

Will a Fanning Mill Pay?

A very important factor in successful farming lies in sowing nothing but good large, heavy seed: the kernels being all of a uniform size allow the crop to ripen evenly, thereby doing away with nearly all the light grain. When selling or feeding, the farmer wants the weight not the bulk.

Out of all the small and split seed that is sown very little grows. Some small kernels may, but they bring forth only a small, delicate stock, with a correspondingly small head, and as their more robust companions start out in life under more favorable conditions they soon leave the weaklings far behind; consequently, a considerable percentage must necessarily be cut green, so that part of the crop will be little better than chaff: besides, the strength is taken from the soil to nourish the poor which the good seed should have.

Now we would like every farmer who reads these pages to consider if it will not pay him to have a fanning mill.

The chief aim of managers of all experimental farms is to procure the very best seed for the farm. They claim that sowing small or inferior seed grain is identical with and gives the same results as breeding from small horses or cattle. It requires about the same amount of labor and expense in sowing poor seed and harvesting a poor crop as in sowing good seed and harvesting a correspondingly good crop.

The threshing machine may seem to make a good job of cleaning it, but their main object is to secure for the farmer all the grain or seed. Now, in order to obtain the best results it is necessary to grade out the small, leaving nothing but the large, plump grains for seed, and, having straw, chaff, dust, wind, etc., to contend with, renders this work for the threshing machine not only impracticable, but impossible. By passing grain through an improved fanning mill it will be found that after having come through the threshing machine, there yet remains about one-fourth of it which is unfit for seed.

Therefore, in sowing sixty bushels the farmer throws away in seed alone about 15 bushels, which could otherwise have been utilized for feed, and were he to sow 15 bushels of good seed instead, the improvement in his next crop should more than pay for a fanning mill. Then, considering that the lifetime of a fanning mill is thirty to forty years, there should be no question as to the purchasing of one being a good investment. Again, very often a farmer can realize from ten to fifty cents extra on every bushel of his grain by grading it in first-class style and selling it for seed.

To thoroughly satisfy yourself and prove that what we say is correct, it will only be necessary for you to extract the kernels from the side of a head of wheat, place them on a board, each kernel in its respective place as it comes from the head. This will also do more to convince you of the necessity of grading your seed than all the talking we can do. It will also prove that no matter how good the crop is the seed requires to be graded each year. You do not realize the fact that you sow with your seed every year several bushels which, if graded out by itself, would prove to be so inferior that we venture to say you would not accept $1 a bushel and agree to sow it on your land, and it would not pay you to do so.

The superior seed must have an advantage, not only because like produces like, but also because a plump seed can nourish the first blade better and longer than a thin one, thus giving the infant plant a better start and a better hold of the soil ere it loses the nourishment afforded by the kernel.

This can be seen by putting large and small seed into pots of clean, sharp sand or sterilized soil, and noting the time which elapses before each plant dies. Moisture and heat will cause germination and sustain life so long as the blade can live upon the seed, but when that is sucked dry, and the tiny roots fail to find sustenance in the sand, the plant dies.

There is no place where a farmer can get his seed or grain cleaned without paying for it, and no way in which it can be as conveniently and cheaply done as by having a fanning mill at his own place, where he can grade it on wet days. He saves the price he would otherwise have to pay for grading, and has all his screenings, etc., at home for feed. All grain should be cleaned, not only the seed, but grain you feed should be cleaned. It prevents the foul seed in it from going back to the ground with the manure, where it will cost more than the price of a mill to get rid of it. Besides, the time one would lose in driving after a fanning mill and returning it would, long before the machine was worn out, amount to more than the price of it. A great many farmers believe it is a good idea to grade their seed, and they promise themselves that before they sow any more seed that they will take it to the elevator or some other place and have it graded, but when the rush of spring work is on, well the seed goes into the ground without any cleaning or grading of any kind.

We wish to draw your attention to the advantage in having one entirely your own. We don't think you can get any one to take the same pains in grading your seed that you would yourself. It's the other man's object to get through as much as he can, while it's your object to produce as good a sample of seed as possible. Besides, consider the trouble in carting your grain backwards and forwards, and wouldn't it be better to apply this money on your own machine, than to help pay for the other fellows? If you have not at all times one in your barn, but, on the contrary, have to drive after one, then you will often neglect to clean grain or seed that should be cleaned, and this neglect in one season's crop would amount to more than the price of a mill.

We sometimes hear a farmer say that it does not pay to clean grain. We admit that there is not very much to be made in cleaning grain before selling it, but what we do claim is that by grading your seed you can increase the yield to the extent of from ten to twenty bushels per acre. Now, all the other field grains can be increased by the same method, namely, plant nothing but the large, plump grains, free from all foul seeds. By the use of a fanning mill, as they are made to-day, this condition is easily accomplished, because the up-to-date mills are so constructed that they will clean and grade any kind of grain raised. They will take cockle out of wheat, kale out of oats, buckthorn plaintain out of clover; in fact, they are arranged so as to handle all kinds of grain and seeds.

If you decide that it will pay to sow good seed, that it will pay to prevent any more weeds getting on your farm either through the manure or the seed, that it will pay to make that farm yield you the fullest possible returns for each cent of capital invested and labor expended, then we say that the fanning mill is an absolute necessity on your farm; and to satisfy yourself on this point, we suggest that you immediately write to some of the manufacturers of fanning mills and get all the necessary information.

FARM BOOKKEEPING.

It makes but little difference what system is used. The important thing to be learned is the cost in time or money of a given article of farm product, and its relation to the selling price.

There would be fewer abandoned farms, and the general prosperity of farmers would improve, if all would keep a record of their business and know as nearly as possible the cost of a cow, a horse, a bushel of potatoes, a can of milk, a pound of butter, a ton of hay, or any other article that is produced on the farm. This at first thought you will say is easy. But it is not. The practical business of our New England system of farming is complex.

For instance, take the cost of a cow. What has she cost at the time she first gives milk? You will answer the cost of her food plus the value of labor, is caring for her, part of the cost of buildings and the cost of maintaining them. The food she has eaten, in all probability, is a part of your hay crop, corn crop, and a part of the product of your pasture. It will require considerable thought and judgment to give them their proper value, and to place the credit where it belongs.

The exercise of thinking out these problems will be of great value to the farmer. He will soon learn the relative value of different methods of cultivation, and he will find out which crop or crops pay the best. It will require a short time each day to record the labor used on different crops on his farm, and at the end of the season a summing up of the time and materials required to produce the same.

NOTES.

Fewer cows are injured not by high feeding than by unbalanced feeding.

A clean cow and a clean stable go with clean milk, good butter and clean cash.

The man who falls in love with cattle will soon find that they pay him a profit.

Good grain rations this winter and spring mean more grass next year and year after.

A large farm is all right, but it needs a smart farmer with plenty of capital to make it pay.

Don't get so proud of that one extra good cow that you forget to weed out the extra poor ones in the herd.

Can milk farmers afford to bother with young stock? Not unless the calves come from stock fairly sure to produce good milkers. Home-raised cows, well managed will be free from tricks and free from disease. But the home-raised scrub calf is a failure. It is cheaper to buy a poor cow than to raise it.

PRACTICAL POULTRY POINTS.

To get pullets of such birds as Rocks, Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds matured by November, it is necessary to hatch them in April. Some seasons May chicks mature quickly, and begin laying about the first day of December, but not as a rule. If a pullet does not commence to lay before Christmas, it is doubtful if she will begin much before March, unless the weather is favorable.

Hens over two years old are seldom good layers. Leghorns, Minorcas, etc., are sometimes good during their third and fourth years; but, generally speaking, the Rocks and such fowls are of little or no use as layers after the second year, being much inclined to become excessively fat.

For summer egg production the lighter breeds and late hatched pullets of the heavier breeds are best. Do not expect a hen that has laid well all winter to lay exceptionally well during the summer. A hen that lays early is inclined to show a desire to sit early in the season.

It is well to remember that the house should be clean, the droppings being removed at least once a week; it should also be well aired and kept dry, to avoid dampness and foul, stagnant air.

Feeding for Eggs

The general method of feeding is to give a mash of mixed ground grains moistened with water or milk in the morning; a little whole grain scattered in the straw covering the floor at noon; and all the whole grain they will eat at night. This latter meal is usually fed in the straw.

Some poultrymen adopt the plan of not feeding the mash until evening. We have been practicing this plan for some time, and we like it very well. The objection to the former plan is that the hen is likely to become gorged with food early in the morning, and thus take to the roost for the rest of the day, which is usually followed by hens becoming too fat, and the egg record becoming small; but, notwithstanding, many successful poultrymen use this method to advantage. The objection to feeding the mash at night is that it becomes quickly digested, and the bird has not sufficient food to last it during the long winter night; but this objection can be overcome by giving a little more grain after the mash at night.

Some poultrymen feed their fowls but twice a day, morning and evening, and get very good results; but I favor feeding three times a day. Our plan is somewhat as follows:

Early in the morning the fowls are given half a handful each of whole grain. This is buried in the litter on the floor. Thus the fowls get exercise (a very necessary thing) in searching for it, and at the same time keep themselves warm.

At noon about two handfuls of grain are given to a dozen hens in the litter; they are also given all the roots they will eat, either pulped or whole, as fowls relish mangels, sugar beets and turnips. Cabbage also, a very good green food, is sometimes given.

About four o'clock in the afternoon they are fed a mash composed of equal parts of bran, shorts, oat chops and corn meal (during cold weather); and to this is added about ten per cent. of animal meal if we have no cut green bone or cooked meat. These foods are thoroughly mixed together in a dry state, after which is added steeped clover, which has been prepared by getting a bucket of clover leaves, or cut clover hay, and scalding it with boiling water. This is done early in the morning and the bucket is kept covered with a thick sack throughout the day. This will be quite warm at night if it has been kept in a warm place. There is usually sufficient liquid to moisten the meal that has been mixed.

Our aim is to have about one-third of the ration, in bulk, clover. After the mash a small amount of whole grain is fed in the straw. There is, and should be, a plentiful supply of good, pure water within easy reach at all times.

WHAT CAUSES DANDRUFF.

Greatest European Authority on Skin Diseases Says It's a Germ.

The old idea that dandruff is scales of skin thrown off through a feverish condition of the scalp is exploded. Prof. Unna, Hamburg, Germany, European authority on skin diseases, says dandruff is a germ disease. The germ burrows under the scalp, throwing up little scales of cuticle, and sapping the vitality of the hair at the root. The only hair preparation that kills dandruff germs is Newbro's Herpicide. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Not only cures dandruff, but stops falling hair and permits a luxuriant growth. Delightful hair dressing.

The Arab horses have been used for centuries to effect improvement of other breeds. The Arabian horse has been bred in certain lines for many centuries, and transmits its qualities with great certainty. The first Arabian stallion was brought to this country in 1765. The illustration shows the typical appearance of the breed. The impression of style, intelligence, fineness, spirit and high breeding is well sustained by the actual appearance of the best specimens of the breed.

The Arab horse is remarkably strong for its size owing to the large development of loin and foreleg. He has great constitution and staying power. Notwithstanding the stories and legends of the breed, the Arabian is excelled in speed by some of the modern trotting breeds, but is probably the equal of any in endurance and vigor. In modern times the Arabian is imported chiefly for cross breeding to improve the qualities of the coaching and trotting breeds.

Breeders' Notes.

The breeder who keeps only two-thirds as many animals as his farm will carry will make more money in the long run than the one who is always overstocked. Every few years there is a shortage of hay or grain, and the man who is overstocked will be compelled either to sell some of his stock at a sacrifice or pay such prices for forage as will materially reduce, if not entirely wipe out, the profits when he does sell.

In compliance with the last request of Charles Marvin, the great trainer and driver of trotting horses, a diamond-set stickpin made from a nail from a shoe worn by the famous mare Sunol, when she lowered the world's record to a high-wheel sulky, was placed in his favorite necktie and buried with him at Meadville, Pa. Mr. Marvin, when he went to the hospital inquired of the nurse regarding the pin, and told her that he wanted the pin placed in his tie and buried with him, as it was very dear to him. The pin was procured and placed as he had requested it to be by his son, Charles L. Marvin, who went to Lexington and accompanied the remains to Meadville, Pa.

Scouring in horses is sometimes due to indigestion, nervousness and a constitutional weakness. If from the former it is easily obviated by care in feeding, etc.; if from the latter cause it is very difficult to overcome. Have his teeth put in order, and feed him only upon such food as is easily digested. Commence by giving him his water first, then hay and lastly his grain. If he bolts his food procure a slow feed manger and place several small stones in it so as to compel him to eat slowly. Give him water sparingly during the day, but plenty at night. Do not let him fill himself full of water just before going out, and give him a tablespoonful of chemically pure dried sulphate of iron in his bran, flour and oats, three times a day, until you see a change for the better.—Horse Breeder.

OCULAR HEADACHE.

That is headache caused by eye-strain, and 90 per cent. of all headaches are caused by eye-strain in some form. And in most cases the vision is normal, which fact often throws the physician off his guard in his diagnosis; where the vision is much affected there is not much headache for the reason that the nerve centres are not so sensitive as where the vision is keener. Of course, small errors of refraction, especially astigmatism with oblique axis, will cause headache, but the worst forms of headaches are caused from muscle-strain, because these ocular muscles have a vital connection with the nerve centres at the base of the brain. In the latter case this strain often produces other nervous troubles, such as chorea, epilepsy, debility, insanity, etc. RANNSEY and STEVENS, two prominent specialists of New York, report numerous cases of chorea and insanity cured by wearing the proper glasses. We make a specialty of such cases of eye-strain. Consultation free.

The Easter Monday Vestry Meetings.

ANNUAL BUSINESS SESSIONS OF EPISCOPAL CHURCHES HELD LAST NIGHT—RETURNS SHOW GRATIFYING STATE OF AFFAIRS.

St. Thomas'.

A large number of ladies and gentlemen attended the annual vestry meeting of St. Thomas' Church, which was held in the Parish Hall last night. The Rector, Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, presided.

Mr. S. R. Gorman was appointed Vestry Clerk.

Mr. T. E. Ketcheson, the People's Warden, read the financial report, which was very satisfactory. He also read reports from St. Paul's Guild, St. Thomas' Altar Guild, Sunday School, Women's Auxiliary, J.W.A. and the C.C.M.G.

Mr. J. P. O. Phillips was appointed Rector's Warden.

Messrs. T. E. Ketcheson, A. McCuaig and J. Elliott were nominated for the position of People's Warden, but all declined, and Mr. B. F. Hudson was chosen.

The sidesmen appointed were Messrs. Hy. Mouck, G. Pearson, J. McCrodan, H. Thompson, T. E. Ketcheson, E. G. Sills, S. A. Lockwood, J. Williams, F. C. Clarke, A. A. Roberts, J. Elliott, H. Carre, J. S. Kerr, J. D. Collip, S. Kenney, S. R. Gorman, Dr. Clinton and Ald. Stapling.

Auditors—A. McCuaig and J. Elliott.

Advisory Board to act in conjunction with Rector and Church Wardens—Dr. Clinton, H. Carre, H. Corby, F. R. Lingham, E. G. Sills, T. E. Ketcheson, C. M. Stork and A. A. Roberts.

Votes of thanks were tendered to the choir, the several Guilds, Wardens and Vestry Clerk for services rendered.

It was moved by Mr. Roberts, seconded by Dr. Clinton, that the question of rebuilding, remodelling or selling the present S. S. building and erecting a more modern building to meet requirements of St. Thomas' Church congregation, be placed in the hands of the Advisory Board, with power to act, and that the Board be called together at once.

The meeting was closed with the benediction, pronounced by the Rector.

Christ Church.

The annual vestry meeting of Christ Church was held in the body of that church last evening. The conduct of the meeting, the interest shown and the reports presented were the best on record. Mr. F. Thompson, the Rector's Warden, was unfortunately absent through illness. After the reading of the minutes reports were given in order. Chief Newton read the Warden's report, showing that $3453.00 had been handled by them since last Easter. Mr. F. Palos sent in the report from St. George's, with his resignation as Delegated Warden, because of pressure of time. The report showed the church to have been self-supporting and to have a balance on hand. Reports from the two Sunday Schools were then read by Mr. F. Mills for Christ Church and Mr. Russell Bell for St. George's, showing that Sunday School work is progressing beyond everything else. About forty dollars will be sent to missions, besides self-support, library books, etc. Reports were read in order from the Ladies' Aid, W.A. and J.W.A., all of which are doing excellently. The total receipts of the church for the year approximates $3,700.00; $2,081.94 has been paid in on debt, leaving balance due of $1,118.06 on principal. Officers for the ensuing year were next appointed. The Rector re-appointed Frank Thompson as his Warden and the vestry re-elected Chief Newton as People's Warden. Mr. J. Lutton was re-elected Clerk of the Vestry. Mr. Rainbird was appointed to succeed Mr. Palos as Delegated Warden at St. George's. Finance Committee elected are: Messrs. W. Alford, H. Ackerill, W. Rodbourne, R. Reid, J. Lutton, F. Mills, C. Symons, A. Elliott, J. Tickell, T. Marshall, F. Millard, J. Irwin, and the Wardens ex-officio. Delegate to Synod, J. Tickell. Sidesmen, the Wardens, F. Mills, C. Carrol, T. Boyle, G. Bennett, F. McPherson, F. Palos. Altar Guild, Mrs. Irwin, Miss Lucy Mills, Miss McPherson, Miss Andrews. S. S. officials, F. Mills, Librarian and Assistant Superintendent; R. McCoy, Organist and Class Accountant; Russell Bell, Superintendent of St. George's S. S. The choir is to be reorganized shortly. Twenty-one families have identified themselves with Christ Church since last year and six have gone by removal. Altogether the outlook for Christ Church is more promising than ever.

St. John's.

Rev. Canon Bogert, rector, presided over the meeting. The reports presented were of a very satisfactory nature, and the financial statement showed a balance on hand.

Mr. W. Spencer was appointed Rector's warden, and Mr. F. D. Ford re-elected people's warden.

The sidesmen elected were Messrs. Geo. R. Brown, W. Harden, B. Backus and A. Symons.

Messrs. J. B. Harker and W. Parry were elected auditors.

Votes of thanks were passed to the Women's Guild and J. W. A., for donations, and to the church wardens for their services.

The church wardens appointed Mr. R. S. Bell vestry clerk.

Mr. Thos. Nightingale was elected lay delegate to the Synod for the next three years.

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

The annual congregational meeting was held last night. Rev. A. M. Hubly presided, and there was a fair attendance. The various reports presented were favorable in character. The receipts of the different church organizations were shown to have been as follows: Sunday school, $195.15; Ladies' Aid, $212.45; Missionary Society, $34.89; Communion alms, $32.10; C. E. Society, $33.12; mortgage account, $359.50; vestry, $1491.26. Total receipts, $2608.71; total expenditures, $2,346.86; balance on hand in all departments, $261.91.

Mr. E. T. Thompson was re-elected People's warden, and Mr. J. Neate re-appointed rector's warden.

The rector's stipend was increased 10 per cent. per annum.

Mr. R. H. Ketcheson was re-elected vestry clerk.

Following is the personnel of the vestry: Geo. Warham, Thomas Thompson, A. S. Large, Geo. Robinson, R. H. Ketcheson, W. Wheeler, E. Dobbs, J. Barlow, Ed. Warham, H. Thompson.

Parish Council — Mrs. Dunnet and Mrs. Hubly.

Auditors — J. Barlow and J. Neate.

Delegates to General Council — Messrs. Geo. Warham and Thomas Thompson.

Delegates to Synod — Messrs. J. Barlow and Thompson.

Trustees — Messrs. F. S. Wallbridge, J. Taylor and J. London.

The usual votes of thanks were passed.

Trinity Church, Shannonville.

The usual annual vestry meeting was held, according to announcement, Easter Monday evening. The Rev. Mr. Geen, incumbent, occupied the chair. The minutes of last meeting were read and approved. The Church Warden's financial report was presented and adopted. It showed a balance on hand after paying all debts, except stipend. The amount sent in for general mission work was larger than ever before. All diocesan funds received attention.

PERSONAL ....AND.... SOCIAL.

Mr. D. E. K. Stewart, of Madoc was in the city to-day.

Miss Ida Vollick, Madoc, returns to her home, after a short residence here.

Miss Leah Wills, of this city, is visiting relatives and friends at Roslin.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Bates, of Toronto, are spending Easter at the home of Mrs. Bates' mother, Mrs. William Sparrow, West Huntingdon.

Mrs. Isaac Hall and daughter, Luella, of Deseronto, are returning home to-day, after spending Easter with Mrs. Fred Holmes, Cannifton Road.

Mrs. Thos. Foley and young son left this morning for the west. After a brief stay with her parents at Copenhagen she will proceed to her husband, who is located at Kamsack Sask.

A Large Funeral.

The funeral of the late Mr. Jas. B. Holmes, which took place yesterday afternoon, was one of the largest that has occurred in this city for some time. It was under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity, and over a hundred of the craftsmen were in attendance. Services were held at the deceased's late home, on Front street, conducted by the Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, pastor of St. Andrew's church, and also by the Masons. The floral tributes were numerous and handsome in design. At the cemetery the services were conducted by the above named minister, and by Bro. R. McCrudden, Worshipful Master of Eureka Lodge. The bearers were members of the order, namely, Bros. B. Black, J. Diamond, J. McCrodan, S. Crothers, G. Balantyne and H. McCrodan.

Pretty Home Wedding

NUPTIALS OF MR. LEROY J. CHOWN AND MISS BERTHA WHITE AT BRIDE'S HOME THIS AFTERNOON.

A very pretty home wedding took place at 2.30 this afternoon, at the home of the bride's father, Mr. Frank White, Commercial st., when his youngest daughter, Miss Bertha, was joined for life to Mr. Leroy J. Chown, third son of ex-Mayor Chown, late of this city, now of Edmonton. Like another young Lochinvar, "Roy," as he was popularly known came out of the west, and this afternoon took the leading role in a ceremony which gives him the right to transplant one of Belleville's fairest young ladies to another home in the land of the setting sun.

Rev. J. P. Wilson, B. A., pastor of Bridge St. performed the ceremony, which took place in the drawing-room. The house was charmingly decorated with cut flowers, etc., and the young people were married in front of a floral bank, which proved a beautiful background to a very pretty scene. To the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March, played by Miss Ethel Macklam, of Brighton, the bride entered the room on the arm of her father, by whom she was given away. The winsome bride looked exceedingly well in a handsome gown of lace over taffeta; she carried white roses and wore the conventional orange blossoms.

The bridesmaid was Miss Florence White, sister of the bride, who wore a gown of Dresden voile, and carried pink roses.

The groomsman was Mr. James S. Dyer, son of Rev. Dr. Dyer, of Albert College.

At the conclusion of the ceremony a dainty repast was served, and the happy young couple left on the 5.55 train for Kingston, where they will remain till Friday; then they will return to this city, staying here till Monday next, when they will leave for their future home in Edmonton, where Mr. L. J. Chown is associated with his father in the business of the Chown Hardware Company.

The bride's going-away gown was of blue chiffon cloth.

About 50 guests were present, including parties from Toronto, Montreal, Picton, Brighton and this city.

The presents were superb, including cut glass, china and silverware galore. Among them was a silver tea service from the groom's brothers in this city, and a cheque from the bride's father. The groom's present to the bride was a pearl sunburst.

Mr and Mrs. L. J. Chown have been among the most popular young people in our city, and nothing but good wishes for future happiness will be extended to them from all sides. In those good wishes The Intelligencer heartily joins.

Busy Firemen.

The firemen yesterday afternoon had a run to Great St. James street. Grass burning in a vacant lot was the cause of alarm.

Shortly after 8 o'clock this morning they were again called out. A chimney blaze on a residence on Bridge street was the cause, but fortunately the services of the brigade were not required.

Easter Monday Ball.

A successful assembly, under the auspices of Belleville Lodge, I.O.O.F., was held last evening in the Academy, Front St., The attendance was large and a most enjoyable time was spent by all present. Music was furnished by the I.O.O.F. orchestra and Mr. R. H. Ketcheson was master of ceremonies. At midnight a substantial lunch was served.

IN NO HURRY TO RETURN.

Hyman Decides Not to Come Back to Canada For a While.

Montreal, April 2.—The news was received here yesterday that Hon. Charles S. Hyman, who left Coronado a fortnight ago for home, via Los Angeles, has decided not to return to Canada for some little time. The Minister of Public Works is reported to be in much better health and spirits than at any time since he left Canada. He is accompanied by Mrs. Hyman.

RICH IRON FIELD.

Large Area of Hematite Ore Discovered—Many Claims Staked.

Vancouver, B.C., April 2.—A huge deposit of bog iron ore hematite has been discovered in Quatsino Soundred. One hundred and eighty claims have already been located. The ground covers 5,600 acres and is believed to be one of the richest iron deposits on Vancouver Island.

Scratch Kills Canadian.

Detroit, April 2.—Rev. George A. Robson, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Lansing, is dead, from blood poisoning, the result of a slight scratch on his hand from a rusty poker.

Mr. Robson was a Canadian by birth, 33 years of age, and came here from Hartford, Conn., last December. He leaves a widow and two children.

Hospital On Mount of Olives.

Jerusalem, April 2.—The foundation-stone of the new German hospital at Mount of Olives was laid Sunday to the accompaniment of cheers for Emperor William and for the Sultan of Turkey, who gave the land.

Finger Lines.

Line markings on the fingers have been found distinct and unimpaired on the fingers of Egyptian mummies.

The Human Hand.

Aristotle termed the human hand the instrument of instruments, which enables man to make all others, to manage and apply them to divers uses and to produce the most powerful and most delicate efforts.

Dean Swift's Recreation.

Dean Swift relieved his tense and tragic moods by harnessing his servants with cords and driving them up and down the stairs and through the rooms of the deanery.

Baton Rouge.

Baton Rouge, La., was named from the fact that for many years after the town was established a gigantic cypress, the bark of which was red, grew on the site. The name means red stick and was bestowed by the French settlers.

Merino Sheep.

The merino sheep has the peculiarity of living to a greater age than other breeds of sheep.

The House Fly.

The common house fly is often literally devoured by parasites, and it has been proved that these parasites are also infested with minute creatures that threaten their destruction.

Minute Writing.

Thackeray considered calligraphy one of the fine arts, and sometimes, to puzzle his correspondents, he would write in so small a hand that the note could not be read without the aid of a magnifying glass.

The Eldest Child.

In most countries it is believed that the eldest child is superior in stature, strength, beauty, wisdom, virtue and even in good fortune. Certainly among men of genius we find an undue proportion of eldest sons. But against that fact we must place the other—that an undue proportion of criminals are eldest sons.

TOWN BADLY DAMAGED

Severe Earthquake at Bitlis in Turkish Armenia.

Missionaries Are Homeless—Some Loss of Life But Details Not Yet Known—People Encamped in 25 Feet of Snow—Great Damage Is Feared—Is a Densely Populated Town.

Constantinople, April 2.—The report that a severe earthquake, accompanied by loss of life, has occurred at Bitlis appears to be confirmed, but the number of deaths is unknown. Beyond a brief message from the missionaries at Bitlis reporting that the town is badly damaged, that they are homeless and that their people are encamped in the snow, which in places is 25 feet deep, no news of the disaster has reached this city.

London, April 2.—The situation of Bitlis, which is built on a rocky slope, with houses constructed of stone, having flat, earthen roofs, caused people here to fear that a great amount of damage has been done. It is described as a picturesque, densely populated town, having but few Europeans among the population. A British Vice-consul is stationed there, but at present he is absent on leave. Instructions have already been sent to the local authorities to afford relief to the inhabitants, but there is no doubt that outside help is needed.

MAY QUIT DOMINION.

Prince Edward Island Not Satisfied With Subsidy Plan.

Montreal, April 2.—"The new arrangements for provincial subsidies do not lessen the dissatisfaction in Prince Edward Island," declared Alexander Martin, M. P. for Queen's, Prince Edward Island, yesterday.

"The Dominion Government," said Mr. Martin, "refuses to abide by its contract of union with Prince Edward Island with respect to continuous communication.

"On the other hand, the Dominion, under the provision of the act of 1873, which admitted Prince Edward Island into the union, exacts its pound of flesh from the province.

"Previous to the union the province built 200 miles of railway at the cost of $3,250,000. Canada was made a present of this road and the small Province of Prince Edward Island is taxed with interest at 5 per cent. on the cost of construction, and that every year since 1873.

"This interest is $147,000 a year—a great drain on the province. The province claims that, not only should the interest cease, but that Canada should refund all that has been paid under this heading since 1873.

"The agitation in Prince Edward Island is beginning. An appeal to King Edward will follow; and unless the Dominion shows more desire to conciliate the people, Prince Edward Island may yet ask to revert to the position of a crown colony."

SPECTACULAR FIRE.

Large Quantity of Paving Materials Prey to Flames.

Toronto, April 2.—There was a somewhat spectacular fire last night in the plant of the Dominion Paving and Contracting Company, situated at the head of Shaw street, near the C. P. R. tracks. The fire is supposed to have originated from a spark from a passing locomotive, which ignited the dry grass in the vicinity of the storehouse, a large wooden structure. This building was soon in flames and as a large quantity of oil was in storage, it make a fierce blaze for a couple of hours. The structure was completely destroyed.

The fire broke out shortly after 6 p. m. and was under control before 8.30. Owing to the deep mud the fire brigade experienced much difficulty in placing their engines.

There was a large quantity of oil and other materials in the yards. This material was saved.

Pastors Demand Enquiry.

Halifax, April 2.—The following resolution was passed at the Halifax Methodist preachers' meeting and a copy of it sent to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and R. L. Borden:

"Resolved, that, inasmuch as the morality of our nation is largely affected by the example of our political leaders, this Methodist preachers' meeting of Halifax views with alarm the possibility of grave charges being made touching the moral life of prominent members of the House of Commons without any effort on the part of the House to prove the truth or falsity of the same, much to the scandal of the country;

"We, the members of this meeting, therefore call upon the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and R. L. Borden to meet the reasonable expectation of the citizens of the Dominion by taking such steps as will secure an investigation into any immorality alleged against certain members of the Parliament of Canada."

Kaiser's Heir Near Death.

Berlin, April 2.—Crown Prince Frederick William and the crown princess had a narrow escape from accident yesterday, while driving home in a dogcart from a visit to Prince Eitel Frederick.

The horse took fright at an automobile and bolted, but with the assistance of a passerby the crown prince finally gained control near the Brandenburg gate in the city.

Neither of the occupants of the dogcart was hurt.

Berlin April 2.—According to statistics published by the North German Telegraph Bureau, about 250,000 Jews left Russia in 1906, of which number 200,000 went to the United States. Thousands more Hebrew families are preparing to leave Russia as soon as possible, owing to their continual terror of massacres.

CANADA MAKES POSTAL DEAL.

Rates For Second Class Matter In States Reduced.

Washington, April 2.—At a conference between Postmaster-General Lemieux of Canada and Postmaster-General Meyer of the United States here yesterday, an agreement was reached to amend the postal convention existing between the two countries insofar as it affects the transmission of newspapers and periodicals, known as second-class matter, between the two countries.

Canada accepts the tentative proposal of the United States that second-class matter mailed in one country and addressed to the other shall be subject to a rate of one cent for each four ounces or fraction thereof on each bulk package, prepaid by stamps after fixed.

The rate agreed upon is substantially the transient second-class rate, which the individual citizen of the United States now enjoys, the exception being that publishers of the United States have an additional privilege of mailing in bulk packages, at the rate named, separately addressed newspapers and periodicals intended for delivery to subscribers at one postoffice.

The cost also to publishers in the United States will be at least fifty per cent. less than if the postal union rate should be applied.

Postmaster-General Meyer endeavored to obtain a continuance of the old agreement until congress shall have had opportunity to legislate upon the question of second-class postage, but it did not appear thus to maintain the status quo, and the new agreement therefore was entered into for the protection of American publishers.

DEATH DUES ARE HEAVY.

London, April 2.—It is now known that the receipts from death duties during the fiscal year just ending beat all previous records. The total, in round figures, will be $95,000,000. Since the passage of Sir William Vernon Harcourt's Finance Act twelve years ago the total receipts from death duties have exceeded $1,000,000,000. The largest sum paid on one estate was $4,500,000, on that of George Smith, generally known as "Chicago Smith," who lived at the Reform Club at an average rate of 10 shillings a day.

The Treasury has issued the budget figures for the financial year ending March 31, showing a total revenue of £155,036,485, against £153,878,866 for the previous year. There is a surplus of £1,157,559, due to an unexpected increase in the death duties, which are the chief contributory towards the £2,059,000, the amount by which the revenue, as estimated by the Chancellor of the Exchequer last year, is exceeded.

DIVER'S GREAT FEAT.

Brought Up Tons of Rails and Railroad Iron—During Winter.

Winnipeg, April 2.—One of the greatest feats of diving known on the Great Lakes has been performed by Diver H. Valentine in the employe of the Great Lakes Dredging Co., by removing the rails, anglebars and spikes which slid into the Kam last fall off the G. T. dock at Westport. By means of the derrick and diving outfit 3,700 rails, 7,100 angle-bars and 2,300 spikes have been recovered between Dec. 8 and March 25. The six men engaged lost but two days in the above time and the removing of such heavy articles from the 20 feet of water was not a very easy job.

Many of the rails were imbeded in the mud and a fresh hole had to be cleared in the ice each day in order that the derrick might be able to lift the rails. A small moveable house was built in the ice for the benefit of the tenders and linemen from which they had kept the work going through the many stormy days.

FERRY RAN DOWN TUG.

Two Members of Crew Missing—Four Were Rescued.

New York, April 2.—Two men are believed to have lost their lives in a collision in the North River early yesterday when the tug John D. Dailey was run down and sunk by the ferry boat Musconetcong, of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company. Four members of the tug's crew were saved after jumping overboard, but they suffered severely from exposure and were taken to Bellevue Hospital.

The men unaccounted for are John Shanaphy, first officer, and a deckhand named McDevitt. Capt. Wm. Healey and First Engineer John Cronin also are missing, but it is thought they were not on board the tug boat at the time of the accident. The ferry boat suffered little damage.

Zion's Autocratic Ruler.

Chicago, April 2.—Wilbur Glenn Voliva issued the ultimatum in Zion Sunday: "I say to you, officers and people, that one month more I will give you," he said. "On May 1, if you do not make a radical move, I shall make one and put a stop to this criticism of me."

He then recited his own deeds, claiming that he had made Zion what it was. He also said he would make the community the wonder of the age and set it strongly on its feet financially.

Of the 1,500 persons present 1,200 said they would follow him. They launched into a denunciation of those who would not submit. He said he would continue the one-man rule.

Negro Was Lynched.

Durant, I. T., April 2.—Jim Williams, a negro, charged with committing criminal assault on Lillie Mizner, white, near Colbert, I. T., Saturday afternoon, was lynched at Durant Sunday night by a mob of a thousand people. Williams was hanged to an oil derrick and his body riddled with bullets. Deputy United States marshals and local officers pleaded with the mob and threatened it with their revolvers, but to no avail. The girl positively identified Williams.

WILL TESTIFY AGAIN

Thaw's Wife Subpoenaed by the Insanity Commission.

Report Expected on Thursday—Jury Dismissed Until Then—District Attorney Keeps Silent as to His Actions—Will Try to Get In Hamilton's Evidence—Jurymen Send In Petition for Higher Remuneration.

New York, April 2.—It is probable that the Thaw lunacy commission will report on Thursday. The case was adjourned last week until yesterday, and when the jury was called before the court Justice Fitzgerald adjourned again the case until Thursday morning at 10.30 o'clock.

Should the commission find that Thaw is insane within the meaning of the law, the trial will be stopped, but if it finds otherwise the trial will continue.

When the hearing was interrupted by the lunacy proceedings the defence was submitting its case in surrebuttal and Dr. A. Allan McLane Hamilton, the alienist, was on the stand. If the trial is resumed it will be taken up at that point. It is doubtful if the defence will call any other witnesses, although it has been said that Evelyn Nesbit Thaw would be recalled to repeat her story of the Hummel affidavit. As soon as the defence rests, the summing up will begin and will, under the agreement made between attorneys, last for two days.

Wife a Witness.

When Mrs. Evelyn Thaw made her daily visit to her husband in the Tombs yesterday she was met by a process server, who handed her a subpoena directing her to appear before the lunacy commission to-day. Mrs. Thaw apparently had not anticipated this move, and she appeared very much disturbed.

"Do they expect me to give evidence against my husband?" she asked.

She was told that her presence probably was desired merely as a matter of routine, but this did not seem to reassure her.

District Attorney Jerome declined to make known his purpose in calling Mrs. Thaw before the commission.

The members of the Thaw jury have drawn up a petition to Justice Fitzgerald asking him to allow them $5 a day for jury services instead of the customary allowances of $2.

Jerome's Experts.

It was reported yesterday that when the lunacy commissioners resumed its hearing to-day Mr. Jerome will call as his witnesses Drs. Pilgrim and Gregory of this city, two of the alienists engaged by the defence, and will endeavor to prove by them that Thaw is now insane. Dr. Pilgrim is head of the New York State Lunacy Commission, and Dr. Gregory is in charge of the Psycopathic ward of Bellevue Hospital. Both of them are said to have had several convercations with Thaw during the trial.

DISCUSS LAND QUESTION.

Russian Parliament Has No Hope of Making Any Changes.

St. Petersburg, April 2.—The discussion of the agrarian problem to which the first Russian Parliament almost entirely devoted its legislative activity began in the Lower House yesterday. Over a hundred speakers signified their intention of participating in the debate, to which, according to the plans of the Parliamentary leaders, only one day per week will be devoted. Neither the Constitutional Democrats nor the Socialists have much expectation of arriving at practical results during the present Parliament. They are convinced that any measure involving the compulsory expropriation of land, which is the basic principle of all the Liberal solutions, will immediately be vetoed by the Emperor and be regarded by the Cabinet as a justification for the dissolution of Parliament. But the House was forced to begin the discussion of the agrarian problem as a concession to the peasant constituents of many of the members.

MADE A CLEAN SWEEP.

Infuriated Armenian Commits Murders and Then Suicides.

Alexandropol, Russian Armenia, April 2.—A series of brutal murders was perpetrated here yesterday by a man named Karapetyants, who lately had been without employment and was refused further board and lodging in the home of a married sister. Karapetyants with a stiletto, mortally wounded his sister, killed her husband, mortally wounded a nephew and niece, killed a neighbor who answered their cry for help, and mortally wounded the wife and mother of his neighbor. Then he committed suicide.

SIX MEN WERE KILLED.

Thirty Freight Cars Burned In Texas Wreck.

Fort Worth, Tex., April 2.—Six men are reported to have been killed in a collision between two freight trains on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway, at Bethel switch, six miles south of here, yesterday. Thirty freight cars were burned. Aid has been sent from this city.

Rescuer Was Murdered.

St. Joseph, Mo., April 2.—Charles L. Stanley, a commercial traveler, was killed here Sunday night by Wesley Christopher. Christopher is alleged to have assaulted a young woman in an alley. When Stanley heard the girl scream he ran to her rescue and was shot in the heart. Christopher was arrested.

Borden Decides To Go.

Ottawa, April 2.—The report that Sir Frederick Borden has cancelled his arrangements to go to the Colonial Conference is incorrect. He will sail from Halifax on April 6, going by the Empress of Britain along with Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Brodeur.

Harry Thaw Not Rational.

Jerome's Experts All Declare Him To Be Insane.

Open Session of Lunacy Commission--Jailer, Prison Chaplains, Deputy Sheriff, and Dr. McGuire Testify For Thaw--All Say He is Right In His Mind--Trial May Proceed On Thursday.

New York, April 3.—The commission in lunacy which is enquiring into the present state of mind of Harry K. Thaw yesterday allowed Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton to testify as to what he knows of Thaw's mental condition. This action was taken over the continued protest of the defendant's attorneys.

Dr. Hamilton declared Thaw to be incapable of realizing the nature of the charges against him.

Michael J. Delehanty and Franklin J. Sheridan, Tombs guards; Mrs. Emily S. Walker, probationery officer, and Rev. John A. Wade, Episcopalian chaplain, and Rev. Luke J. Evers, Roman Catholic chaplain at the Tombs, testified that Thaw had always seemed to them to be rational.

Dr. Austin Flint expressed the opinion that Thaw was suffering from paranoia, with original delusions of persecution now passing into delusions of grandeur, and Drs. William Mabon, William Hirsch, Albert Warren and William B. Pritchard coincided in this belief. All are prosecuting experts.

Dr. Graeme M. Hammond, who was a consulting alienist for the defence throughout the trial, talked with Thaw every day of the trial. His comments on the trial were pertinent and rational always.

Dr. Smith Ely Jelliffe, a member of the defendant's corps of alienists, said that at the time Thaw killed White he suffered from insane delusions, but they seemed entirely to have disappeared.

Dr. Britton D. Evans added his testimony for the defence, to the effect that Thaw is perfectly rational.

Adjournment was taken at 6.30 p.m. until 10.15 a.m. to-day.

The commission expects to be able to report its conclusions to Justice Fitzgerald early Thursday morning.

WATERFALL WOOS SUICIDES.

Many Young Women Go to Pretty Spot to Die.

St. Petersburg, April 3.—A despatch to the Gazette from Viborg, Finland, says a curious suicidal mania has lately, at short intervals, driven 16 victims to self-destruction in the picturesque Imatru waterfall. The suicides were hysterically inclined young women who wanted to die in romantic surroundings.

Their bodies were washed away by the roaring Wuoksen River and rarely recovered, and then in shockingly mutilated condition.

The latest victim was a young girl, who had traveled especially from Moscow to commit suicide in the waterfall. A coachman seized her clothing as she was going over the edge of the precipice, but the material gave way, and she disappeared with a shriek in the torrent.

KILLED STEP-CHILDREN.

Father Finds Wife Had Drowned Them Deliberately With Herself.

Dover, N.J., April 3.—Shongum Lake, a small body of water four miles from here, was the scene of a triple tragedy. When Otto Britting arrived home late Monday he found that Mrs. Britting had gone out with two of his children, a boy of nine months and a girl of three years, to a neighbor's. Later the bodies of all three were found in the lake. When they were taken out of the water it was discovered that the mother was in a stooping posture, with the boy under one arm and the girl beneath her, the garments of both children being pinned to her own.

Mme. Melba Goes to Europe.

New York, April 3.—Mme. Melba, the grand opera singer, sailed for Europe yesterday on the steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse.

LOOKING TO AUSTRALIA.

Canada Too Nervous to Be the Hope of the Imperialists.

London, April 3.—(C. A. P.)—The Aberdeen Free Press says: The dislike of Canada for anything which may drag her into irksome responsibilities or fetter her autonomy is likely to be one of the dominant factors of the coming conference. Rightly or wrongly, Canada is extraordinary nervous on this point. The colony which seems likely to lead in the direction of strengthening the Colonial Conference, crystallizing it into a permanent body, is Australia.

Dies In Jail From Kick.

Toronto, April 3.—Fannie Catone, aged 59, who was committed to Toronto jail a few days ago, died at that institution last night.

When sent to jail deceased was suffering from a kick on the head, received, it is alleged in a fight with a woman named Lond. Both were intoxicated at the time, and the victim was given thirty days in jail.

Crown Attorney Drayton, on learning that the woman was dying, went to the jail yesterday to take her antemortem statement, but she was in a state of semi-consciousness.

Girl Fatally Stabbed.

Elmira, N.Y., April 3.—Because she would not marry him, James Terry, aged 23, fatally stabbed Katharine Stird at Salt Point, near Watkins Monday afternoon. Both are Italians employed in the salt works there. The girl died early yesterday morning. Terry escaped.

Half of Wrecked Ship Saved.

London, April 3.—The White Star Line steamer Suevic, which went ashore near the Lizard on March 17, was cut in two Monday, and her afterpart was severed yesterday morning and towed into port. Her forepart is firmly fixed on the reef.

FAT WOMAN FELL ON HIM.

Skater Dies As the Result of Peculiar Accident.

Vandergraft, Pa., April 3.—Abner McGary, a wealthy merchant and retiring president of Vandergraft Council, is dying at his home as a result of an accident in the Apollo roller skating rink.

McGary, who is a good roller skater, notwithstanding he is fifty years old, tripped and fell. Immediately behind him was a woman weighing over 200 pounds. The woman fell on McGary, and in a moment he was crushed under a mass of struggling skaters.

When McGary was reached he was unconscious. An examination developed that the man's pelvic bone was crushed and he had sustained other internal and dangerous injuries.

Seeks Mrs. Mason For Gems.

Windsor, April 3.—A son of John R. Swindon of the Flying Roller community says that he will apply to Chief of Police Wills for a warrant for the arrest of "Mother Elinor," Mrs. Mason, to recover $10,000 worth of jewels she is said to be wearing and which belong to the Swindons.

The rings were obtained by the elder Swindon during his 35 years' service in the British army in India. One ruby is said to be an inch in diameter and to be worth $1,500. It is said Lewis F. Newman, a Toronto mining stock broker, would like to find the woman and get from her $300 which he lent to her while she was in Toronto last winter, pretending to negotiate a big Cobalt deal.

There is little hope that Mrs. Mason will be caught.

Big Canal Open In 8 Years.

Kansas City, Mo., April 3.—Representative Edgar C. Ellis, who has just returned from the Isthmus of Panama, said Monday night:

"In eight years ships will be going through the Panama Canal. It will cost $500,000,000, but we will build it.

"The army has got hold of it and can do it. I always was convinced that it could not be built by contract."

Busse Defeats Dunne.

Chicago, April 3.—The most intense campaign in municipal politics that Chicago has experienced in many years closed last night with the election of Frederick A. Busse, the Republican candidate for mayor, over Edward F. Dunne, his Democratic rival and a candidate for re-election. Busse's plurality was between 15,000 and 18,000 votes.

Those frozen dirt piles on the streets, of course, are exceedingly handsome, and may appeal to aesthetic people, but the good sense of heaping up mud and then allowing it to remain there, become frozen and be a menace to public safety is not apparent. It seems to be the plan in this city to scrape up the mud on a lot of streets, and then take it away when convenient. The plan is not by any means a good one. A more sensible way would be to remove the mud when scraped up, and not scrape up, at a time, any more than can be removed in that day. It is alleged that frozen mud piles on Station street were the cause of that runaway accident last night. The lesson of the incident is plain enough. It should be heeded.

A party wants to know if the city or anybody else has the right to close up the culvert underneath the bay bridge road, which, it is understood, drains the marsh to the north of Zwick's island. It is said that, with the culvert closed up, there will be no outlet for the marsh water, which will then become stagnant and a menace to health. The Medical Health Officer might give this matter his attention.

$10,000 A DAY FOR Y.M.C.A.

It is significant that, with the help of men of all faiths, and no faith, the building fund at Buenos Ayres, South America, has been swung up to nearly $200,000; at the City of Mexico to $250,000; at Manilla $120,000. At Panama four buildings, erected by the Government, are placed under the direction of Association secretaries. In Australia building campaigns are in swinging force in great cities, while at London the parent Association is lining up for a great million dollar memorial building to Sir George Williams, and in America the building campaigns are rolling in more than $10,000 a day, with thousands of citizens engaged in the work of soliciting contributions.

A Hay Story.

North Hastings Review; "What might be termed a 'hay farce' came to our notice a short time ago, the circumstances in connection with which are actual facts. A farmer brought a load of hay to a certain gentleman in Madoc and drove to the scales to have it weighed. After it was weighed some person noticed three men slipping off the load who had been hidden in the hay while the weighing operation was going on. The hay was taken to the purchaser, and upon his meeting the hidden parties he asked them when they were ready to go to work for him. They appeared somewhat surprised and informed the questioner that they had not hired with him, but were informed by the purchaser of the load that he had bought them with the load. The purchaser finding they were not willing to accede to the purchase, had them weighed, and deducting the weight of the men from the hay paid the farmer for the just weight. This is no hay yarn, but an actual fact, and instead of the purchaser being so lenient with them, he should have made an example of them, and have meted out to them their proper punishment."

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

What about a little sport this summer? Who is going to take up the good work and help to organize baseball and lacrosse teams. The material for both is here, all it needs is somebody to push the good thing along.

A picture of Sidney Pointer (2.07 1-4), owned by W. H. Moffat, V.S., of Picton, appeared on the front page of The Buffalo Horse World last week, which shows that the horse has more than a local reputation. Sidney Pointer was one of the best campaigners that ever went out of this country to try conclusions with the cracks on the big tracks in the United States, and his son, Angus Pointer (2.02 3-4), is now keeping up the good work.

Ed. Herrington, the Picton horseman, has a couple of trotting mares, full sisters, Tassie Medium and Ayliffe, that bid fair to be sensational this year and rival the two full sisters, Mary Scott (2.14) and Jennie Scott (2.14 1-4), that Al. Collins, of Hamilton campaigned so successfully two years ago. Tassie Medium was extremely fast as a 3-year-old, three years ago this summer, but did not go to the races again until this winter at Ottawa, when she was second to the Brantford trotter, Johnny, making him stretch his neck all the way to win in 2.23, which is good going for a trotter on ice, and they say that Ayliffe is the faster of the two.

The two Ottawa campaigners, Alf. Smith and Harry Westwick, who finished out the league season with Kenora and then played with that team, in defence of the Stanley Cup, reached their home town after a three weeks' sojourn in the west. Smith brings the tidings that Tom Phillips will play with Ottawa next winter.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

The Alien Labor Case.

FULL TEXT OF JUDGMENT RENDERED BY JUDGE FRALECK ON SATURDAY.

The defendant's appeal from eleven convictions made by the Police Magistrate of Belleville, dated the 22nd day of December, 1906.

The defendant company was convicted under the provisions of the "Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens," being 60, 61 Vic. Chap. 11, and 1 Edward VII., Chapter 13, and designated as "The Alien Labor Act." R.S.C., 1906, Chap. 97, which latter Statute will be, for the sake of convenience, hereafter referred to.

Section 2 of the Act reads as follows: "It shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation in any manner to prepay the transportation or immigration of any alien or foreigner into Canada under CONTRACT or AGREEMENT, parole, or special, expressed or implied, MADE PREVIOUS to the importation or immigration of such alien or foreigner, to perform labor or service of any kind in Canada."

And Section 3: "For every violation of any of the provisions of the last preceding Section the person, partnership, company or corporation * * * shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars and not less than fifty dollars.

Having regard to the cases in hand the first endeavor is to find out the meaning and intent of the statute in order to determine whether the defendants' acts or any of them fall within the restrictions imposed.

First, there must be an agreement MADE PREVIOUS to the importation or immigration, or, to assist, encourage, or solicit the same, or to pay the transportation.

It will be important to consider the case of an alien coming into this country unsolicited, of his own accord, seeking employment here and upon his arrival entering into the employment of a private party or a corporation.

I am of the opinion that it is not the intention of the Statute to include such a case within its prescriptions. The whole tenor of the act is to the contrary. Section seven provides, that all contracts or agreements made PREVIOUS to the immigration or importation, shall be void.

Again, section eight makes it a penalty for any master of a vessel who knowingly brings into this country any alien who PREVIOUS TO EMBARKATION on such vessel had entered into a contract to perform work in this country.

Still further, section twelve makes it unlawful to promise employment through advertisements published in such foreign country, and any person coming into this country in consequence of such, shall be treated as coming under a contract as contemplated by the Act. Now what contract is here referred to? It seems clearly to me the contract mentioned in Section two "MADE PREVIOUS to the importation or immigration" of such alien.

It will be noted that in every case where the word "agreement" occurs but one, it plainly mentions or refers to an agreement "MADE PREVIOUS to the importation or immigration." Indeed if this were not the intention of the Statute, then section two would appear to be meaningless.

Section three is copied verbatim from the United States Act. It seems to me that this section, from the foregoing, is not intended to create an offence distinct from that of section two. If, of the contrary, a separate offence is established, how are we to construe the words "citizen," "resident?"

There is no other legal definition for the word "citizen" in this country except if it be applied to a person comprised in an urban population. In any other respect the word "British citizen" or "Canadian citizen" would be meaningless. If citizen is construed to mean British subject, then an alien must reside in this country a term of years sufficient to qualify him to become a British subject before any one could engage him to perform any kind of labor. So likewise with "resident." Clearly it is not the intention of the Statute to require an alien to take up his abode and live in this country for a period of time long enough to comply with the legal definition of residents. Moreover should the term "citizen" or "resident" be thus applied to aliens, it would be inimical to the promotion of immigration and contrary to Section 15 of the Act.

Then as to "skilled labor": skilled is to have the knowledge united with the dexterity to do a particular kind of work as it ought to be done. A skilled mechanic is one of the very highest class of workmen.

Sub-section "C," section nine states: "Nothing in the Act shall be construed as to prevent any person or corporation, &c., from engaging under contract or agreement skilled workmen in foreign countries to perform labor in Canada; provided that skilled labor for that purpose cannot be otherwise obtained."

"Otherwise obtained." It was contended on behalf of the prosecution, meant anybody and in any country. Evidently sub-section two of section 12 has been overlooked. "Provided that this section shall not apply to skilled labor not obtainable in Canada AS HEREINBEFORE specified, upon any new industry not at present established in Canada."

It was contended by the counsel for the prosecution, that the business of the defendants has been so long established in Canada as to become a matter of judicial notice without proof or reference. Ship building has been an industry since the days of King Solomon. But the building of the Roman triremes was a different industry to that of building Spanish caravels, and the building of the latter is a far different industry to that of the modern ironclad or of the ocean greyhound.

Distilling has been known and a practiced industry for centuries, but the manufacture of spirits in the modern distillery is a different industry to that of the "moonshiner" of the mountains of Kentucky, or the making of "mountain dew" amongst the hills of Kerry. It was shown that the life of the distillery is only about fifteen years. Then the appliances must be again renewed.

The defendants purchased this plant from H. Corby for a very large sum — about a million dollars — and having expended this large sum they determined to put in the very newest process and appliances. They consulted with one Angelo Meyers, of Philadelphia, an expert in this business, and as the result of this consultation, they proposed to put in a new business altogether, whereby more and better spirits could be obtained from a given amount of raw material. This process was within the last year or two perfected and used only in three distilleries in the United States. For this a large expenditure was required, one witness stated from $150,000 to $200,000, and it is not denied that the work in installing the plant, which the defendants introduced into their distillery, called for workmen of the very highest order.

It has been found by the Magistrate and admitted by the prosecution, that Cohen and Matthews were both engaged in this country, Matthews in the defendants' office in Belleville, and Cohen in Corbyville. Now, Isadore Cohen and W. Matthews came to this country of their own accord, not knowing whether they would be engaged or not. Cohen was in Omaha and received word from his uncle, Angelo Meyers, that a distiller was required at Corbyville. By Meyers' advice he went first to see Mr. M. B. Davis in Montreal and then came on to Belleville. He takes up his residence at Corbyville for a week or so to look over the distillery and see if the place suited him, and was finally employed to take charge of the work. It is not suggested by the prosecution that any one in Canada was qualified to take Cohen's place. On the contrary, Mr. Taylor had been distiller for the Corbys for 30 years. When he saw the new process being installed he refused to undertake the management and resigned. If Mr. Taylor with his 30 years' experience, could not manage this plant, where else in Canada could the defendants find a man competent to do so?

Matthews hears through Henry Cohen, who had visited his brother here, that the defendants required a "bottler." He came of his own accord to the defendants' office in Belleville, and there the defendants engaged him. After these two men had been engaged, and sometime after they had commenced work, they represented to the defendants that it was customary in such cases for employers in this business to pay travelling expenses. The defendants did so, not as an obligation, but simply as a gratuity. The two men did not come into this country with an understanding or promise that their travelling expenses should be paid. I do not think these payments constituted an offence within the meaning of the act.

Matthews remained a short time, but left, alleging that the place was too small and did not afford opportunities of educating his children.

I am of the opinion that the appeal in the case of Isadore Cohen and in that of W. Matthews should be allowed with costs and the convictions in these cases be set aside.

It appears that a committee of three, consisting of E. H. Davis, J. H. Stockton and A. I. Bird, manage the defendant company. To this committee is relegated the power to make contracts on behalf of the company and to generally manage the same. A millwright was required and Cohen spoke to Mr. Davis about hiring a Mr. Hiatt, an experienced millwright, of Peoria, Illinois. Cohen wires Hiatt as follows: "Can you come immediately to take charge millwright work? Wire reply, stating terms, care H. Corby Distillery Co." To this Hiatt replies, "Will come, six dollars a day and expenses." Cohen replies, "Terms satisfactory. Come immediately. Wire when leaving." Upon this Hiatt comes direct to Corbyville and goes to work. No other hiring took place. He was paid the wages asked and his expenses. Hiatt stated in the evidence that a millwright to perform this work would require a knowledge of brass work as well. He also stated that this was his first experience with a plant like that which the defendants have installed. I think the hiring of Hiatt a violation of the provisions of the act and dismiss the appeal in his case with costs. The defendants accepting Cohen's telegrams as an engagement.

The Ansonia Copper and Brass Co. is a very large company of coppersmiths. This company have a large number of men in their employ who are expert coppersmiths. This company alone possessed the tools and knowledge of installing the new process and plant, which the defendants desired for their distillery at Corbyville.

Peter Bouchert, agent for this company, and who draws their plans, came to Belleville in the fall of 1905, and, on behalf of this company, entered into a contract to instal the new plant. The Ansonia Company were to furnish all the materials and perform all the work. The Dominion Construction Company had the contract for erecting all buildings required. Like the contract with the Dominion Company, the one with the Ansonia people was a very large contract. The headquarters of the Ansonia Company are at Cincinnati, Ohio. There were no provisions as to where this company were to secure workmen. In fact the matter was not mentioned. The Ansonia Company at different times sent on men who were in their general employ to do the coppersmith work. At the request and for the accommodation of the Ansonia Company the defendants, after these men had arrived and commenced work, paid their travelling expenses, and also their board while working on the job, but such sums of money so paid out by the defendants were charged against the Ansonia Company upon their contract. The Police Magistrate holds that the Ansonia Company were the agents for the defendants to employ these men to do their work. There is nothing in the evidence, as I can see, to justify such a finding. The men were employed by the Ansonia Company and paid by them.

There is no legal restriction against entering into a contract with a foreign company and it is no concern of the parties here as to where such foreign contractor obtains his workmen. If the foreign contractor violates the statute under consideration the remedy is to bring such men before a magistrate, and if a breach of the law is proved, to deport them. But the evidence of Bouchert shows that there are only three distilleries in the world, and none of them in Canada, that have a plant similar to this, and that without his plans the work could not have been done and that he would not entrust them to anyone but his own foreman. In fact, as Frotescher, the foreman, states in his evidence, "We have some new improvements, which we don't like other people to handle." It seems to me clear, therefore, that skilled labor could not have been obtained anywhere in Canada to do the work done by these parties. The defendants are expending a very large sum of money in endeavoring to extend and build up an industry far beyond the old one so well carried on by Mr. Harry Corby, furnishing employment for a larger amount of men, a larger market for our cattle and grain and other produce of our country; in fact, adding to the wealth of our country. Canada is extending rapidly in every direction and in all manner of industries. Common labor is scarce to be had. Railroads and other large interests projected during last year had to be abandoned for lack of men, and if common labor is so scarce, how much more so is the skilled citizen?

This statute is copied from the United States Act, and is meant as a set-off to the same. It was aimed against wholesale importation of lumbermen into our woods and workmen in times of strikes and other occasions. I do not think that it is the spirit or intention of the statute to cripple a large industry. Being a penal statute, I believe it ought to have a liberal construction in the interest of the public good.

In the case of Harry Hortell, Alexander Nieuman, Herman Frotescher, August Kuhert, Jacob Dixleus, William Wonderlich, Edward Bretzel and Alfresco Brady the appeal must be allowed and the several convictions set aside, but each party to pay their own costs.

W. B. Northrup, K.C., counsel for The H. Corby Distillery Company, Ltd., the appellants; E. Guss Porter, counsel for George S. Johnson, respondent.

Canadian Inventor's Experience.

INTERESTING INCIDENT BY A FAMOUS PATENTEE.

Mr. Wm. Wilson, of Craigie Villa, London (Ont.), the inventor of the Wilson Fruit Case, now adopted by the Canadian Government, tells an interesting experience which shows the healing and antiseptic value of Zam-Buk, the herbal balm. He says. "I had two poisoned wounds on my leg, which were very sore and inflamed. They caused me much pain and suffering, and although I tried several salves they refused to heal. Zam-Buk was recommended, and I applied some. It acted splendidly and in a very short time healed the wounds.

"At another time I sustained a nasty cut. Zam-Buk took away the soreness almost instantly and soon closed and healed the wound. I have also used Zam-Buk for other injuries, and I have no hesitation in expressing my high opinion of its value. It is, without doubt, a splendid household balm!"

Zam-Buk cures blood poison, cuts, bruises, old wounds, running sores, ulcers, boils, spring eruptions, scalp sores, eczema, itch, barber's rash, burns, scalds, and all skin injuries and diseases. All druggists and stores sell at fifty cents a box, or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Remember, it is purely herbal!

Wedding Bells.

TUCKER—DeLONG.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. DeLong, Huff's Island, at 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday, March 27, 1907, when their eldest daughter, Ethel Berniee, was united in marriage to Mr. Anson C. Tucker, of Rawdon. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Jos. Barpes, B.A., of Ameliasburg, in the presence of about seventy invited guests. The bride was attired in cream embroidered crepe de chene, trimmed with tucked chiffon and silk insertion, and wearing a dainty bridal veil, carried a bouquet of white carnations. She was attended by her younger sister, Miss Iela DeLong, who wore a cream voile, prettily trimmed with lace and silk insertion, and carried a bouquet of pink carnations. The best man was Mr. Lewis Green, of Rawdon. The room was tastily decorated and the ceremony was performed under a beautiful arch of evergreens. Mendelssohn's wedding march was played by Miss Jessie Rodner. After the ceremony the guests sat down to a very sumptuous dinner, which reflected great credit on those who had charge, all the arrangements being excellently carried out. The presents were many and costly, among them being a beautiful Anson clock, from the grandfather and grandmother of the bride; a beautiful silver tea service, from the father and mother of the groom; a purse of money, from the bride's father, and a beautiful china cabinet from her mother, and from her great-grandmother a beautiful pair of pillows. After dinner the bride donned her travelling dress of brown cloth, with hat and veil to match, and the happy couple took their departure for Picton and other points east, amid cheers and showers of rice from admiring spectators.

WALLBRIDGE.

April 1.—At the close of the Easter service, last evening, Mrs. L. Massey, took occasion to give expression to the esteem in which Rev. C. S. Reddick and his bride are held. A most appreciative address was read and Mrs. Reddick was presented with a purse of money, who although taken completely by surprise, made a very gracious reply. Mr. and Mrs. Reddick will carry to their new field of service on Kitamat Mission, B.C., the hearty good wishes of their many friends in this community.

BRAIN AND BULLET.

What Happens When the Skull is Pierced by a Shot.

The results of firing a bullet at a flat brittle bone and into a soft substance like the brain are very different. The bone is pierced, and the lateral displacement of its particles is very slight, but the brain is thrown aside in all directions. The difference is due to the different degree of cohesiveness of the particles composing the two bodies or, in other words, to the greater fluidity of the softer structure.

Next, the importance of fluid contents in intensifying the effects of a bullet fired through a closed receptacle is shown by one of Kocher's experiments. Two identical tin canisters were filled with equal quantities of lint, which in one was dry and in the other saturated with water.

A bullet of moderate velocity fired through them simply perforated the dry one, but caused the wet one to burst explosively. Kocher also filled a skull with water and found that a bullet fired through it caused bursting of the sutures.

Very remarkable is the shattering that results when skulls that have been filled with water or with wax are treated in this way, and if they are compared with others showing the effects of bullet wounds under normal conditions it is easy to appreciate that the variations presented are dependent, in part at least, upon the difference in the character of the contents.—Current Literature.

Queer Chinese Belief.

It is a common belief among Chinamen that if one commits any crime against certain animals—cats, for example—the soul of that animal will take possession of the wrongdoer until the offense has been purged. A servant girl, according to the oriental tale, unmindful of tradition, put to death a cat and its three kittens. She was taken violently ill. Her mistress, suspecting the cause from the fact that the maid was scratching and mewing, apostrophized the body of the dead cat, demanding to know why it thus tormented the girl. The spirit of the cat, speaking by way of the girl's mouth, denounced the quadruple murder. The whole story was told by the girl in the character of the cat. Then she expired in violent convulsions.

A Lesson in Philanthropy.

A whole souled resident of Harlem the other evening received the jolt of his career as a parent. While reading his evening paper the doorbell rang, and a parcel from a big department store was announced. The cost was 30 cents, and he gave his little bright eyes, a girl of six, a two dollar bill with which to pay the boy.

Half an hour later the subject recurred to him.

"Here, Mabel," he said. "Where's that money I gave you for the boy?"

"Why, papa," was little bright eyes' reply, "I did the same as you did yesterday with the newsboy. I told him to keep the change."

Belgium Shopkeepers.

Belgium shopkeepers generally are dealers in miscellaneous goods. One man in a small way, for instance, sells beer, foreign stamps, fruit, cotton, biscuits, penknives, cheese and secondhand hair. Everywhere one finds a mania for glaring lights. One evening when I was out I saw a tremendous light in the distance, and I thought it must surely be an advertisement for a music hall. When I got nearer, I found that the light merely conveyed the intelligence that sardines were sold on the premises.

One Drawback.

"It's a good idea to have something laid by for a rainy day."

"Yep," answered Peter Corntossel; "only that kind o' cash is a good deal like a reg'lar umbrell'. Some other feller is liable to walk off with it jes' as the shower starts."

HINTS ON HOME BUILDING.

The man who is thinking of building a home (and who is not, in these prosperous times) must have prominently in mind, economy, durability and appearance.

The wise builder will select materials that are good and inexpensive, as well as handsome in appearance. Take the roof, for instance. It should be proof against lightning, fire and water, and should also possess a handsome appearance.

Wood shingles have had their day. As now manufactured, they soon rot and crack, thus making it necessary to reshingle.

"Safe Lock" Galvanized Steel Shingles solve the problem in every way. They lock at the top, bottom and both sides, so that they are absolutely proof against every element. Being heavily galvanized, they cannot rust and are practically indestructible. Moreover, the smooth surface of the shingle will not permit dust or dirt to lodge on the roof, and defile the rain water.

The Metal Shingle & Siding Co., Limited, of Preston, Ont., offer to send you, free, their literature containing names of those who have used "Safe Lock" Shingles in your own locality. 47

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE GARDEN.

(Richmond Times-Despatch.)

Now that's April's coming and the milder breezes blow,
I shall chuck the weary round of bardin',
Buying me a shovel and a cunning little hoe,
I shall make myself a little garden.

There shall be no flowers in the garden-close I make—
I shall grow for dinner tables solely;
Flowers are not worth the needed spaces that they take—
Pretty things, no doubt, but useless wholly.

I will grow potatoes and sweet lima beans, b'gosh,
Succotash and marrowfats, my gentles;
I will raise cymbling and the corelated squash,
Injun corn and watercress and lentils.

There'll be other dainties, pink and green and very red,
Fit to decorate a royal table:
I will tend them nicely, getting early out of bed,
Digging as astutely as I'm able.

So I'll spend my springtime, just a-workin' with my hoe,
Raisin' vegetables in my garden;
Horticulture may not be excitin', but I know,
It'll prove at least as nice as bardin'.

PORT CREDIT MYSTERY.

Elliott Was Stabbed and Struck On Head With Shovel.

Port Credit, April 3.—The crown has at last decided to take a hand in the unraveling of the mystery surrounding the death of the English sectionman, Edward Elliott, who met his death two miles west of here early on Good Friday morning.

At the inquest to-day a member of the provincial detective staff will be in attendance to watch proceedings and follow up any clue which may be unearthed. It is certain that evidence will be produced to prove conclusively that Elliott came to his death as a result of foul play.

Dr. Sutton, who performed that autopsy, is ready to swear that the wound in Elliott's chin was caused by some sharp instrument, either a knife or a stiletto, and that the gash on the back of the head was in all likelihood inflicted by a blow from a shovel.

County Constable Peer made a trip into the city yesterday to subpoena Jas. Batty, the conductor of the way freight who found Elliott alive by the track and brought him into Port Credit.

He arranged with Michael Basso to act as interpreter for the four Italians known to have passed the spot shortly before Elliott was picked up. Harry Gallagher, the man with whom Elliott left the section camp at Clarkson to come into the city, will be brought here to-day from Hamilton to testify, and Constable Peer is of the opinion that this man will be able to throw some light on the matter.

Dr. Sutton will open the enquiry at 2 o'clock this afternoon, assisted by High Constable Broddy of Brampton and County Crown Attorney W. H. McFadden of Peel County, at the Wilbur House.

Only a few shipping cattle were on sale, and they were bought for butcher purposes.

Butchers.

Trade was brisk with prices for picked cattle, some of which were export weights, ranged from $4.85 to $5.25; loads of good, $4.60 to $4.75; medium $4.30 to $4.50; common, $4 to $4.25; cows, $3 to $4.35 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

Harry Murby reports a good demand for feeders—at least, there were several farmers and dealers who were enquiring for both stockers and feeders, but there were none on sale. Mr. Murby has orders for several loads.

Milch Cows.

Only a limited number were offered, few of which were of good to choice quality. Trade is reported dull in Montreal, and no buyers from that city being on the market, trade was dull, with prices ranging from $30 to $50 each.

Veal Calves.

All offered were readily taken at unchanged prices—$3 to $7 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Few were on sale, not enough to make a market. Prices were unchanged. Export ewes, $5 to $5.25; bucks, $4 to $4.50 per cwt.; yearling lambs are worth from $6 to $7.50 for good quality, and $5.50 to $6 for common to medium. Choice spring lambs are scarce at $6 to $10 each.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris reports prices easier at $6.90 per cwt. for selects and $6.65 for lights and fats.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

East Buffalo, April 2.—Cattle, steady; prime steers, $5.60 to $6.10; butchers', $4.50 to $5.35; stockers and feeders, $3.50 to $4.50. Veals, receipts, 150 head; active; 25c higher; $4.25 to $8.75. Hogs, receipts, 2000 head; active, shade higher; heavy, mixed, yorkers and pigs, $7.05 to $7.10; roughs, $6.10 to $6.25; stags, $4.75 to $5.25. Sheep and lambs, receipts, 4000 head; slow and steady; lambs, $5 to $8.45, few $8.50; yearlings, $7.50 to $7.75; wethers, $6.25 to $6.75; ewes, $4.75 to $6.25; sheep, mixed, $3 to $6.25.

New York Live Stock.

New York, April 2.—Beeves, receipts, 970, feeling nominally steady; dressed beef, unchanged, at 7c and 9c per lb. for native sides; exports to-morrow, 10,000 cattle, 642 sheep and about 6050 quarters of beef. Calves, receipts, 82; feeling weak; all sold; good to prime veals sold at $7.50 and $8 per 100 lbs.; city dressed veals, steady, at 9c to 12c per lb; country dressed 6c to 11½c. Sheep and lambs, receipts, 810; market steady; a few ordinary sheep sold at $4.50 per 100 lbs.; good to prime lambs, $8.40 to $8.65; culls, $5.25. Dressed mutton, steady, at 8c to 10½c per lb.; dressed lambs, slow, at 12c to 13½c. Hogs, receipts, 2360; feeling steady to firm; prime state hogs sold at $7.25.

Chicago Live Stock.

Chicago, April 2.—Cattle, receipts about 35,000; market, steady, but dull; common to prime steers, $4 to $7; cows, $3.25 to $5; heifers, $3 to $5.25; bulls, $3.40 to $4.60; calves, $2.75 to $7.50; stockers and feeders, $3 to $4.90.

Hogs, receipts about 14,000 head; market steady; choice heavy shippers, $6.77½ to $6.80; light butchers, $6.77½ to $6.90; choice light $6.75 to $6.80; packing, $6.20 to $6.75; bulk of sales, $6.70 to $6.80.

Sheep, receipts about 13,000; market sheep steady; lambs weak and dull; sheep, $4.25 to $6.50; yearlings, $5.25 to $7.25; lambs, $6 to $8.10.

Charity and Red Tape.

Berlin, April 3.—The Berliner Zeitung says that the Kaiser sent a cheque for $6,000 to aid the sufferers by the dynamite explosion at Witten four months ago. He was surprised to receive no acknowledgment, and ordered that an enquiry be made.

He was informed Monday that during the four months the money was passing from one official to another, and had just reached the sufferers.

Inrush of Immigrants.

Winnipeg, April 3.—Yesterday's arrivals of immigrants totalled 600. A special of nine coaches came in the morning, and nine coaches carrying immigrants were attached to No. 1, the transcontinental express. Two other specials are en route from Montreal and will arrive to-day. They will carry 620 passengers, of whom 600 are British and the remainder Scandinavians.

OPPOSE CHANNEL TUNNEL.

But May Become Necessary For the Successful Defence of England.

The revived Channel tunnel proposal appears to have been received with disapproval by Lord Roberts and sundry other prominent soldiers, even as the idea was universally received when originally advanced in 1882. At the National Defence Association's dinner, recently held to consider the question, the opposition of some prominent soldiers to the scheme constituted the most salient feature of the evening's debate. Though all soldiers are agreed that the Channel is our natural line of defence, it is probable that the exigencies of policy, combined with a sound consideration of modern tactical methods, will cause those who have now opposed the scheme to reconsider their opinions from a purely defence point of view. The fact that France and England are undoubtedly bound together, not only in the intrests of both nations, but in those of Europe also, would seem to have altered the entire situation of 1882. Whatever the economic aspect of this proposal may prove, it is clear that, in accordance with advanced tactical theories, the construction of the tunnel is, strictly speaking, a military necessity—an essential to our successful defence. One of the chief objectors to the original scheme, Gen. Sir Lintorn Simmons, said that "England may be regarded as an island fortress, unassailable so long as the integrity of the silver streak—its moat—is maintained." The Channel, as the late Napoleon III. remarked, saves us the burden of a large army raised by conscription, such as Continental Powers are compelled to maintain. But in modern warfare the defensive alone can never lead to decisive results. The Continental situation demands that Britain shall, if attacked, be in the position, as allied with France, to speedily exercise the effective force of counter-attack—the very essence of all defence. Only a Channel tunnel would provide for this condition.

CASTLE IN THE AIR.

Wembley Tower, Which Was to Have Reached 1,150 Feet, Demolished.

The most prominent landmark in Middlesex—Wembley Tower—is now being demolished, and will be cleared entirely away in about a year.

It was intended to be the tallest tower in the world, the full height being planned 1,150 feet, as against the 985 of the Paris Eiffel tower. The promoter of the scheme was Sir Edward Watkin, who hoped to make a more attractive pleasure resort at Wembley than either Earl's Court or Crystal Palace. A premium was offered for designs, and 500 guineas was awarded to three architects jointly.

The base of the tower covers 90,000 feet of ground, and the size of the first platform—which was as far skywards as the tower ever reached—may be judged from the fact that it was to accommodate a theatre to seat 1,500 persons!

The erection of the tower was begun in 1893, and stopped in August, 1894, the main reason being that there was a lack of funds, although a remark of Lord Rosebery's, to the effect that the building was a "new Tower of Babel," is supposed to have given offence to Sir Edward Watkin, and to have had something to do with the abandonment.

Lincoln's Honesty.

"The lawyer whose honesty is proved has the confidence of the judge and jury," asserts Mr. Justice Brewer in The Atlantic Monthly. To illustrate his meaning he tells this story of Abraham Lincoln:

He was appointed to defend one charged with murder. The crime was a brutal one; the evidence entirely circumstantial; the accused a stranger. Feeling was high and against the friendless defendant. On the trial Lincoln drew from the witnesses full statements of what they saw and knew. There was no effort to confuse; no attempt to place before the jury the facts other than they were. In the argument, after calling attention to the fact that there was no direct testimony, Lincoln reviewed the circumstances, and after conceding that this and that seemed to point to defendant's guilt, closed by saying that he had reflected much on the case, and while it seemed probable that defendant was guilty he was not sure, and, looking the jury straight in the face, said, "Are you?" The defendant was acquitted, and afterward the real criminal was detected and punished. How different would have been the conduct of many lawyers! Some would have striven to lead the judge into technical errors with a view to an appeal to a higher court. Others would have become hoarse in denunciation of witnesses, decrying the lack of positive testimony and the marvelous virtue of a reasonable doubt. The simple, straightforward way of Lincoln, backed by the confidence of the jury, won.

Japan Is Getting On.

According to Japanese papers, a syndicate, headed by Oshiro Manyu, has made arrangements to float a joint stock company, with a capital of 300,000 yen, to construct a floating pleasure hall and hotel for location in the most picturesque portion of Tokio bay. It is proposed to build great seven decked vessel, about 400 feet in length and thirty-two feet in breadth, with provision for restaurants, hotel accommodation, dining halls, conservatories, an aquarium, sea bathing, etc. It is intended that the vessel shall be connected with the land by a long pier, visitors being thus able to go direct on board from their jinrikisha.

Regarding your Zutoo Tablets I beg to say: I have been a sufferer from headache since childhood and have used all, or nearly all, of the so-called "cures" on the market, till warned by my physician to discontinue their use on account of their bad effects on the heart. Some months since my attention was called to your Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a "sick" or "nervous" headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effect. My family use them whenever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from headache and they never fail to give quick relief. I find them a good remedy for "sour" stomach as well as headache. I always carry them in my grip on the road and would not be without them at any cost.

Denise, the Marquise de Beau Sejour whom he, gallant fool, rich only in his noble pedigree, dared to love and hoped to win, Denise the richest heiress in France. Yet it had not been hers so long; its broad seignories were a thing of yesterday for her. Fifteen years ago she, as he, had been only the child of a vicomte as poor if as noble as himself. And Beau Sejour lay not here, but ten leagues away, a mile from Nerac, where that church spire hung its cross above the horizon.

The soft gloom of the growing dusk imaged for Andre at that moment the sombre pall of tragedy which twelve years ago had fallen on the great chateau. An ancient house, a venerated name had been its owner's; were not their achievements written in the chronicles of France? was not their origin lost in the twilight of dim ages far, so far away? Capets and Valois and Bourbons that house had seen coming and going on the throne, honor and fame and wealth and high endeavor had been theirs, and then shame and doom, swift, unexpected, irreversible. The story of their downfall had been his first lesson learned in budding manhood of the harshness of the world and the mystery of fate. Such a simple story, too. The wife of the Marquis had run away with a lover, a baseborn stranger gossip called him. The lover had deserted her, why and where no one knew, and disowned by her husband she had died miserably. Her husband, a soldier and ambassador of the great Louis Quatorze, had in despair or madness plunged into treason, and had paid the traitor's penalty on the scaffold. His only son and heir, from remorse or consciousness of guilt, had perished by his own hand in Poland, whither he had gone to fight in the war. And here to-day at his feet a rough and stained tombstone marked the neglected grave of the only daughter who had remained. Had she lived she would to-night have been just two years older than Denise; had there been no treason, she and not Denise would have been mistress of that chateau now called De Beau Sejour.

Denise's father for service to the state had been awarded the lands of the traitor; the old name for centuries noted in this soil had been annulled in infancy; its blood was corrupted by the decree of the law, and by the King's will the new Marquis had carried to his new possessions the title of his old, that Beau Sejour yonder so near to his own Nerac. The law and the King so far as in them lay had determined that the very name and memory of the ancient house should be blotted out for ever. But blot out the chateau they could not. There it stood haughty as of old, to tell to all what had once been, and the curious could still read here and there in its storied walls the arms and emblems, the scutcheons and shields of a family which had given nine Marshals to France, and in whose veins royal blood had flowed. What did that matter now? To-day it belonged to Denise, once poor as he was, and destined to be his bride before this sudden swoop upward on the ruins of another to the high places of France.

As Andre paced to and fro in the dusk the ghostly memories thickened. Twenty years ago as a boy he had ridden with his father to that chateau. He remembered but two things, but he remembered them as vividly as yesterday. Over the chief gateway a splendid coat of arms had caught his boyish fancy and he had asked what the motto "Dieu Le Vengeur" might mean. "Why, father, there it is again," he had cried, for in the noble hall, above the famous sculptured chimney-piece, the first thing that caught the boy's eye was the scroll with those three words "Dieu Le Vengeur." And the second memory was of a little girl playing with a huge wolf-hound in the dancing firelight under that motto, a little girl with blue eyes and fair hair, innocent of the evil to come, playing in her hall which had seen kings and queens for guests. "Dieu Le Vengeur" she had repeated—"God will protect me," and they had all laughed. But had God protected her? Here was her grave at his feet. Andre now recalled his dying father's remark five years later, when he had heard how his neighbor the Comte de Beau Sejour had been rewarded with the treason-tainted marquisate. "That would have been yours, Andre, my son," he had said. And no one had understood, and he had died before he could explain, if explain he could. That, too, had been another bitter lesson in the cruelty of fate, in the bleak, bitter tragedy of baffled and unfulfilled ambitions.

Smitten with a sudden pity, a sharp anguish, Andre kneeled in the damp, tangled grass and peered at the tombstone which marked the humble resting-place of the dead, worse than dead, dishonored and infamous. "Marie Angelique Jeanne Gabrielle . . ." the rest was eaten away. But in the church close by lay the coffins of her ancestors, the crusaders and nobles, and Marshals of France. The names had been obliterated. But not even a wronged king had dared to remove the tombs with which that church was eloquent of the glories that had once been theirs. Yes, they lay there of right, but she, little Marie, cradled in splendor, who had prattled of "Dieu Le Vengeur," she, the daughter of a wanton and a traitor, lay here in the rain, and the sheep and the goats browsed over her, and the sabots of those once her serfs and tenants made an insulting path over her grave. And up there another reigned in her place.

A traitor! Yes, his daughter deserved her fate. There should be no mercy for traitors.

"What seek you, Monsieur le Vicomte?"

He started at the question. It was the Chevalier de St. Amant, boyish, insolent, though his tone was strangely soft.

"I was finding a lesson," Andre replied quietly.

"In a tombstone?"

Andre explained. The Chevalier seemed impressed, for he went down on his knees and peered for some minutes at the weather-beaten stone.

"Poor child!" he muttered. "Poor child!"

Andre was thinking the Chevalier was better than he had supposed, but his next action jarred harshly. Standing carelessly on the stone he gathered his cloak about him. "Ah, well," he remarked, with his dare-devil lightness, "it is perhaps more fortunate for you or me that little Marie is where she is."

"For you or me?" Andre questioned, peering into his young face.

"The Marquise awaits you, Vicomte," he twitched his thumb towards the chateau, "perhaps you will understand better when you have seen her," and with a careless tip of his saucy hat he strode away.

For one minute Andre burned to seize that cloak and speak to him very straightly. "Pah!" he muttered, "It will do later. Perhaps it will not be necessary at all."

But it was with increased misgiving that he rode up to the chateau.

Denise received him in the great hall, unconsciously reproducing the picture which was burnt into Andre's memory, for she stood with a certain sweet stateliness by the sculptured chimney-piece and a huge hound lay at her feet. Above her head the emblazoned scutcheon of the old house still adorned the noble carving—indeed you could not have destroyed the one without destroying the other—and the glad firelight which threw such subtly entrancing shadows on the dress and girlish figure of the young Marquise seemed to point with tongues of flame to that sublime motto, "Dieu Le Vengeur!" above her head.

Andre bowed and halted. Ambition, passion, and hope conspired to choke him for the moment. How fair and noble she was! yes, surpassingly fair and noble.

Denise said nothing. She stared at the buckle of her slipper.

"I have come for my answer," he said, in a low voice.

She met his pleading eyes fearlessly. "The answer is 'No,'" she replied, and her voice, too, was low, as if she could not trust it.

"No?" he repeated, half stunned.

She simply bowed her head.

"You mean it? Oh, Denise, you cannot mean it?"

"I have reflected and I mean it."

"For always?"

"Yes."

Andre stepped nearer. "I do not remind you, Denise," he said, speaking with a composure won by a mighty mastery of himself, "that I love you, that I have loved you since I could love any woman. If you would not believe it before I was taken prisoner, when I spoke in the woods of Versailles, you would not believe it now. Nor do I remind you that twelve months ago you spoke very differently. A lover and a gentleman does not speak of [illegible] things when the answer has been 'No.' But I do ask you, before you say 'No,' always to remember that it was the wish of your dead father and of mine that the answer should be 'Yes'."

"My father died five years ago, yours even longer," she answered.

"Do the years alter their wish?" he asked, with a touch of passion, "do they make a promise, good faith, honor, less a promise, less——"

"There was no promise," she interrupted.

He bowed calmly. The gesture was better than speech.

"And your reason, Denise?"

"I said I would give you an answer, I did not undertake to give reasons."

"Certainly. May I plead, however, that perhaps, remembering the past, what you and I have been to each other since childhood, I have some right to ask?"

She placed her fan on the shelf of the chimney with sharp decision. The firelight flashed in her grey eyes. "I refuse," she said, very distinctly, "to marry a man who does not love me."

"Then you do not believe my words?" he questioned quickly.

"You are a noble, Andre," she answered; "the courtesy of a noble and a gentleman requires that when he demands a woman's hand in marriage he should profess to love her. For the honor you have done me I thank you, but a woman finds the proof not in words but in deeds. You are a brave soldier, but you do not love me. That is enough."

"No, it is not enough for me," he answered.

"Very well." She took a step forward. "I had no desire to discuss things not fit for a girl to speak of to a man who has done her the honor to ask her hand in marriage, and I would have spared both myself and you unnecessary pain. Plainly then and briefly, when I take a husband I do not choose to share what he professes is his love with any other woman. That is my reason and my answer in one."

A flush darkened his sallow cheek. "It is not true," he protested passionately, "it is not true."

"You would deny it?" she cried, passion too leaping into her voice. "Is that letter to the Comtesse des Forges, one of my friends—my friends, mon Dieu!— yours, or is it not?" She handed it to him with hot scorn.

"It was written twelve months ago," he said, somewhat lamely.

"And the duel which it caused is twelve months ago, too, I suppose? The right arm of her husband the Comte des Forges is healed, but the wound—my God! the wound in his heart and mine, that you can never heal. And she is not alone. Does not Paris ring with the gallantries of the Vicomte de Nerac? For aught I know there may be a dozen husbands in England who have lost their sword arm because Andre de Nerac professed to love their wives." She checked herself and was calm again. "I thank you for the honor you have done me, but—" she offered him the stateliest, coldest curtesy, "Vicomte, I am your servant."

She would have escaped by the door behind her, but Andre intercepted her. "No," he said, "you do not leave me yet. I, too, have something to say and you, Marquise, will be pleased to hear it."

Their eyes met and then Denise walked back to her place by the fireplace. She was trembling now, and she no longer looked him in the face.

"As to the past," he said in a low voice, "I say nothing, for I deserve your reproaches. I have been foolish, wicked, unworthy of you. But there is no noble to-day at Versailles of whom the same could not be said. Men are men, and I have never concealed from you what I have been. But such things do not destroy love. They cannot and they never will, and every women knows it. My past, I assert, is not your reason."

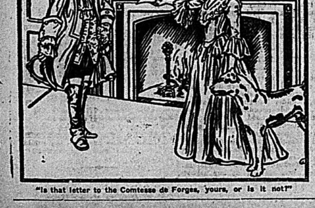
"What then is?" she asked proudly.

"I am poor, you are rich, but that is not the reason, either. Do not think I would dishonor you by supposing that I believed that, though some whom you call your friends say it is. No, the reason is that while I have been away, a prisoner, defenceless, silent, some one—" he paused, "some one has been poisoning your mind, some one who hopes to take the place——"

"Take care——" she interrupted.

"You speak of the gossip of Paris. I will not tell you what the gossip of Paris and Versailles says, for you will hear it and more fitly from other lips than mine. But I say, that poisoner will answer to me."

To be continued.



"Is that letter to the Comtesse de Forges, yours, or is it not?"

THE REASON WHY.

WE SO STRONGLY ENDORSE AND RECOMMEND VINOL TO THE PEOPLE OF BELLEVILLE.

Our local druggist, J. S. McKeown, says: "We do not believe there is a man, woman or child in Belleville whom our famous cod liver preparation, Vinol, will not benefit at this season of the year.

"We believe there is no need for so many people to drag around rundown, tired out and debilitated, or for old people to remain weak and infirm when we guarantee Vinol will restore health and strength."

Continued Mr. McKeown: "For centuries cod liver oil has been recognized as the grandest of all body-building agents for wasted human strength and vitality, but on account of the nauseating and system-clogging oil which enveloped its curative properties few could take it with benefit.

"In Vinol you get in a concentrated form every one of the curative and strength-creating elements of cod liver oil actually taken from fresh cods' livers, the useless, system-clogging oil eliminated, and tonic iron added.

"Vinol is guaranteed by over five thousand of the leading druggists of the United States to create strength for old people, for the run-down, tired and debilitated, weak, sickly women and children, and after a severe sickness.

"We ask every such person in Belleville to try Vinol. It costs nothing if it fails." J. S. McKeown, druggist.

A Hand at Poker

By JAMES JOHNSON.

Copyright, 1906, by E. C. Parcells.

At the age of twenty Thomas Appleby, Jr., was generally referred to as "Soft Tommy." While his father, who was one of the largest railroad contractors in the country, was known as a level headed man, his only son, Tommy, was playing "going to college" and making a fool of himself whenever occasion offered. A compilation of the idiotic things Tommy did in the course of two years would make a small volume of statistics. He got drunk, he bet on horses, he played poker, he fell in love with his laundress, he got into jail, he ran himself and his father into debt to the tune of thousands. As a windup he fell in love with a chorus girl at a New York theater, went on a drunk lasting two weeks and was disgracefully expelled from college. His old man stopped building the Colorado Midland long enough to come east and bribe the chorus girl to let go, pay up Tommy's debts, talk to him in vigorous English and then take him west to fill some unimportant position where he could keep an eye on him.

Tommy's halcyon days were over. He had to knuckle down and be good. In the course of two years he became so good and so sensible that he was permitted to go east and marry the daughter of a locomotive builder, with whom he had become acquainted while she was making a tour of the west. It was conceded on all sides that Tommy was no longer "soft." He had become interested in his father's work, been given a partnership, and he was looked upon as a coming man in the business of constructing and outfitting railroads.

Tommy and his bride were to "do" the east and then bring up in their future home in Denver, and everything went according to programme until they headed for the west. Then Tommy received word to bring along a sum of money from Wall street. The fact that he had $50,000 buttoned up behind his coat caused a relapse from virtue on Tommy's part. He became "soft" again. He drank and swaggered and told everybody what a big man he was in the Colorado Midland, and soon after leaving Ashley on his home coming he fell into the hands of the Philistines. Three thieves and a gambler had spotted him and were after his money. They didn't care how they got hold of it, but after awhile found that the game of poker would be the easiest way. When Tommy began drinking he became obstinate, and, leaving his tearful bride in the parlor car, he took a hand in the game started elsewhere for his particular benefit.

Then the chorus girl made her entrance. She had let go of Tommy for good. She had never cared for him in a sentimental way. She had drifted from the chorus in New York to the vaudeville in a western town of hard repute and was on her return from a trip to Chicago when she ran across Tommy and his wife. Her first emotions were those of jealousy to think that he had married, and she thirsted for revenge against the child faced bride. Then she reasoned that she never intended to marry Tommy anyway and that he and his papa had treated her very liberally, and she gave over her idea of revenge. Tommy didn't recognize her during the long day that she occupied a seat directly across the aisle, but she saw that he had something on his mind and was drinking himself up to it. The gamblers were going to make up a game for the night, and he wanted to be counted in and arrive in Denver with a few extra hundred dollars in his pocket. The protesting bride was ordered to the stateroom, and Tommy went in search of the game. He soon found it. The ex-chorus girl had sized up the newly married couple and the situation, and she reasoned them out as follows:

"Tommy the 'soft' is not as big a fool as he was, but he is fool enough to be taken in by those card sharps. From his swagger he has evidently got a lot of money with him. He has gone and forgotten me and got married instead of pining along in single blessedness, but I won't hold that up against him. That wife of his is a little innocent. She may have seen a circus once or twice in her life, but her knowledge of the world stops there. If she would take Tommy by the ear, as I used to do, instead of playing the baby, she could bring him to the mark. But she hasn't the pluck. Tommy will gamble, lose his money, and there will be a scene when he faces his father. I must do something for the helpless infants."

The game was going on in the smoker. There were only two or three passengers in the car, and it may have been that the conductor stood in with the blacklegs. At any rate, when the ex-chorus girl made her appearance in the car he politely hinted that she had made a mistake.

"Not if the court knows herself," was her reply. "I came in here to get a smell of this smoke and watch the game, and I don't think there is any rule to bar me out."

Tommy was drinking with one hand and playing poker with the other. He also kept his mouth going as to what a great man he was in connection with the Colorado Midland. The line would have never been thought of nor surveyed nor constructed but for him. He had played poker since he was ten years old. He was no chicken. He had the money, and money talked. From her nearby seat the woman listened to his vaporings and saw the gamblers fleecing him at every hand, and she said to herself:

"I used to get about a hundred dollars a day out of Tommy when he was struck on me, but these sharpers are doing a heap better. If he was born without brains it's not my fault, and yet I feel sorry for that little wife of his. This is all new on her. She is in her stateroom crying her eyes out when a wife of spunk would be in here raising old Ned. It's none of my business, and yet I can't help but feel sorry for her. It's no use to go and speak to her, for she's one of the weeping, helpless sort. What is wanted is something to give Tommy a jar."

A few minutes later the porter of the sleeping car came into the smoker and whispered to Tommy that his wife wanted to see him. At that the gamblers sneered and Tommy swore. He sent back word that he would come when he got ready and continued his play. The ex-chorus girl went back in his place, and when the stateroom door opened at her knock she said to the anxious and weeping bride:

"Your husband is drinking and gambling in the car ahead. Are you woman enough to walk in there and fetch him out?"

"Mercy, no!" gasped the wife.

"Then don't make a fool of yourself by sending messages. I know your Tommy of old. He's soft in the head, and I don't believe he'll ever get over it. You are only a baby wife, and your mother ought to have kept hold of one end of the string. Don't sob and wring your hands that way. I'm going back to watch the game and save your Tommy. He'll probably come along in the course of an hour and dump himself down on the floor. I may come later."

"But I don't understand," protested the bride as she struggled with her sobs.

"There's no need for you to. Just remain right here and leave the rest to me."

"And who are you?"

"Nobody or nothing."

When the woman returned to the smoker Tommy had lost all his own money and had broken into what he was carrying to his father. He was as dough in the hands of the sharpers. In five hands he lost $2,000. Then the woman stepped to his side and took him by the arm and said:

"Tommy, you are wanted in the sleeping car. Come along."

"What are you doing here?" demanded one of the gamblers of the woman as Tommy obediently rose up and lurched about.

"They call me Wild Rose in Cheyenne," she replied, "and it is said that I play poker as good as any man. This man is going back to his wife, and I'm going to take his hand in the game."

The men cursed and growled, but when Tommy had been landed in his stateroom the woman returned and sat down with such nonchalance and produced such a large "roll" that the sharpers winked at each other and then turned in to beat her. They palmed the cards; they bluffed; they conspired; they resorted to all the tricks of the trade, but they reaped nothing by it. The woman was posted in all their moves and had some new ones to show them. They became afraid of her after awhile, and then she used taunts to keep the game going. They lost steadily from the start, and if there was cheating on her part they were not sharp enough to detect it. When she had won back every dollar lost by Tommy the "soft," she rose up and carried her winnings back to the wife. The husband was asleep on the floor. The ex-chorus girl looked at him and nodded her head and said:

"Seems like old times to see him that way. Here's the money he lost to the gamblers. Take care of it and go through his pockets for the rest of his boodle. We are getting near Cheyenne. I leave the train there."

"But your name? You will tell me that and let me thank you over and over again for what you have done?"

"Don't mention it. Good night and goodby."

Tribal Suicide.

All students of Malay and Hindoo history know that one of the most horrid customs in those countries is the "poopootan," what I should like to call the tribal suicide, says C. Thieme, correspondent of De Niewe Courant, The Hague. A Bali prince, with the instincts of his warrior race, declines to surrender, but prefers death, and he and all his people seek death. The Prince of Badoeng did this. He turned a deaf ear to all suggestion of a settlement, but he and all connected with him, men, women and children, committed suicide. Nearly the same thing happened in 1896 in Lombok, a neighboring island. The old king had surrendered, but one of his sons, a cripple, walked out with all his relations dressed in gorgeous garments, bedecked with all their jewelry, and with their swords and lances attacked the Dutch army, only to find the death they courted. Those who were not killed in the fight were afterward found to have also killed themselves.

As Good as a Knot.

A little north side boy likes to play with needles and thread and pretend he is sewing. To please him and to keep him quiet his mother has been in the habit of letting him have the articles for his amusement while she is busy with her household duties and especially while she herself is sewing. One afternoon recently the boy was busily engaged in his favorite domestic pursuit when suddenly the knot came out of the thread and it slipped through the needle.

"Mamma," said he, handing the needle and thread to her, "pease put the thread in the needle and then pease put another lump in the thread."—Columbus Dispatch.

WOMEN IN HOSPITALS

Experiences of Mrs. Rockwood and Miss Tierney

MISS MARGARET TIERNEY MRS. CHAS. A. ROCKWOOD

A large proportion of the operations performed in our hospitals are upon women and girls for some organic trouble.

Why should this be the case?

Because they have neglected themselves, as every one of these patients in the hospital beds had plenty of warning in those dragging sensations, pains at left or right of abdomen, backaches, nervous exhaustion, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, and other organic weaknesses.

All of these symptoms are indications of an unhealthy condition of the female system and if not heeded the penalty has to be paid by a dangerous operation. When these symptoms manifest themselves, do not drag along until you are obliged to go to the hospital and submit to an operation—but remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, has saved hundreds of women from surgical operations.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured more cases of feminine ills than any other one remedy. Such letters as the following are constantly being received by Mrs. Pinkham to prove our claims.

Mrs. C. A. Rockwood, teacher of Parliamentary Law, of 58 Free St., Fredonia, N. Y., writes:

"For years I suffered with female trouble. It was decided that an operation was necessary, and although I submitted to a serious operation my sufferings continued, until Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended and it proved a marvelous remedy, so quickly did it restore my health. I cannot thank you sufficiently for the good it has done me."

Miss Margaret Tierney, of No. 328 W. 25th Street, New York, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"When only eighteen years of age our physician decided that an operation was necessary to permit of my womanly organs performing their natural functions. My mother objected and being urged by a relative to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did so. I soon improved in health, the proper conditions were established and I am well and strong, thanks to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

No other remedy has such unqualified endorsement as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. No other remedy in the world has such a record of cures of female ills.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that may help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

ADAM AND EVE.

The Forbidden Fruit, the Fall and the Three Mystic Gifts.

Many are the attempts to identify the forbidden fruit. Some say it was the fig, others the grape, others, again, the pomegranate, but the most "Arabian Nightish" description paints it as an ear of wheat which looked like a ruby and was as big as an ostrich egg and grew on a tree whose trunk was like gold, its branches like silver and its leaves emerald.

Our first parents were expelled about 3 o'clock of the afternoon of Friday, the 10th of May, having resided in Eden seven years, two months, two weeks and three days. Adam was banished to Ceylon and Eve to Mecca, and they remained apart for 200 years. Adam, according to some accounts, spent half his time weeping, with his face to the earth. Others less charitable aver that his solitude was cheered by Lilith, who resumed her former relations with him.

When he repented and rejoined Eve, he begged that something might be given him from the happy garden of innocence which he had forfeited, and, lo, in answer to his prayer three mighty archangels were sent to him, Michael bringing gold, Gabriel frankincense and Raphael myrrh—mystic gifts in after years associated with the offering of the magi, whom early Christian tradition identified with Enoch, Melchisedek and Elias.

FLY FISHING RODS.

It is the Weight Outboard From the Hand That Tells.

Much pleasure will be found in buying rods and tackle. If inexperienced, any old angler will rather enjoy helping you out, or you can go to a first class shop, ask for a salesman who is an angler and tell him where you propose to fish. If economy is an object to you, very fair working tools can be had for a little money. It is surprising to handle some of the rods that are priced at $5 to $10. I do not consider weight in the scales of great importance, as I like a good sized, comfortable handle. It is the weight outboard from the handle that tells. One of the lightest rods I ever saw weighed eight ounces on the scales. It had a big, fat wooden handle and substantial fittings, but the rod proper was very light. My individual preference is for a rod of ten feet, but lots of men prefer something shorter. I have seen good work done with an eight foot rod, but there is a great difference in the power of rods of the same length. A tall, strong man can handle a rod of great power and with a suitable line bring out all there is in it. He may be able to do this all day long without great fatigue, while a weaker person would be heavily handicapped and tired to death.—Forest and Stream.

Strange Freak of Memory.

There is a strange story of how Sir Walter Scott, producing "The Bride of Lammermoor" during illness, was afterward found to have forgotten entirely what he had thus created. According to James Ballantyne, "the book was written and published before Mr. Scott was able to rise from his bed, and he assured me when it was first put into his hands in a complete shape that he did not recollect a single incident, character or conversation it contained. The original incidents of the story, which he had known from boyhood, he still remembered, but he knew no more about the story he had written than he did before he began to write or even think about writing it." These facts were corroborated by Mr. Lockhart, Sir Walter Scott's son-in-law and biographer, so that they are placed beyond question.

An Earthquake in Persia.

Professor Vambury, the Hungarian orientalist, was in Shiraz, Persia, at the time of one of its devastating earthquakes. The shock was terrible, throwing great houses about like shuttlecocks and splitting the hills beyond the town. When the very earth seemed in process of disruption and men and women were weeping and tearing themselves in agonies of fear two mad fanatic priests stalked through the tottering city crying aloud that the foreigners sojourning in the place had brought on the calamity. And the people took up the cry "The Frengis are unclean!" and made a rush for the house in which the professor had been staying. Only the entire collapse of the property adjoining beat off their attack and enabled him to make his escape from the city.

Dress Millennium.

When the dress millennium arrives, and every woman finds herself a thing of joy to look at, able to walk in comfort and with a pocket for her purse, it will be the result of an elementary training in dignity, comeliness and common sense.—Reader.

Wanted a Second Trial.

"You were guilty of one matrimonial mistake. I shouldn't think you would marry again."

"Oh, but you know a verdict of guilty usually leads to a second trial," replied the gay grass widow.

Caustic.

"Yes," said the bride of a week, "Jack tells me everything he knows, and I tell him everything I know."

"Indeed!" rejoined her ex-rival, who had been left at the post. "The silence when you are together must be oppressive."

Preliminary.

Stella—I wonder why sentiment attaches to a first kiss? Bella—It's like the first tooth. You've got to have it before you get the second.—Brooklyn Life.

Oats.

Oats sometimes escape from cultivation and grow from year to year so persistently as to seem wild. They have been found thus in regions as widely separated as Algeria and Japan, the Pyrenees and north China, the Hebrides and the desert of Mount Sinai.

A Grewsome Catch.

A man's hand, with three valuable rings on its fingers, was found in the interior of a twenty-five pound pike caught at Staad, on the lake of Constance.

Addison's Wife.

Addison's wife, the famous Countess Dowager of Warwick, would not allow him to go to the inn at all unless he sat by the window, where he was in plain view from her front room. Every absence from his post had to be accounted for.

ROOSEVELT ACCUSED.

Harriman Was Asked For Funds to Save Party.

New York, April 3.—A sensation was created here yesterday by the publication of a letter written in December last and addressed to Sidney Webster of New York and signed "E. H. Harriman." In it the writer says:

"As to my political instincts to which you refer in your letter of Dec. 13, I am quite sure I have none, and my being made at all prominent in the political situation is entirely due to President Roosevelt, and because of my taking an active part in the autumn of 1904 at his request and his taking advantage of conditions then created to further his own interests. If it had been a premeditated plot it could not have been better started or carried out.

"About a week before the election in the autumn of 1904, when it looked certain that the state ticket would go Democratic and was doubtful as to Roosevelt himself, he (the President) sent me a request to go to Washington to confer upon the political conditions in New York State. I complied, and he told me he understood the campaign could not be successfully carried on without sufficient money, and asked if I would help them in raising the necessary funds, as the National Committee, under control of Chairman Cortelyou, had utterly failed of obtaining them, and there was a large amount due from them to the New York State Committee."

Anxiety never yet successfully bridged over any chasm.

WAS SHE DELUDED?

Strange Story of How a Woman Thinks Her Husband Has Changed His Identity.

There are no limits to the strange things that can happen in this world of ours. Recently a woman who had been married fourteen years, in calm, incisive tones, explained to the bewildered Magistrate at Willesden that lately she "had noticed a change in her husband," and was now sure that a substitute had taken his place. The five children called the substitute "Daddy," but she was sure that she was being imposed upon.

"Bring this man to court if you can," said the magistrate, faintly. But the man will not go. Recently, however, the woman explained why she is sure that a deception is being practiced on her. She lives in a flat in a rather poor part of Willesden.

Fourteen years ago, she said, she was married to a zinc worker. She noticed the "change" when the last child but one was born. Although the new husband gave her 27 shillings a week, like the old one, some of his ways are different.

For instance, the boots he wore were "nines" instead of "eights." Then she saw that he was darker in complexion. He admitted this cheerfully. "I am getting a bit darker," he said. But the decisive proof came soon after. She noticed that a birthmark on her husband's leg was missing, and asked for an explanation. "It went away not long after the baby was born," she was told.

Finally, says the wife, the new husband smokes the same tobacco as the old one.

LADIES TAKE THE BOX.

They Have to Run the Gauntlet of Many Sarcastic Remarks.

Several Paris women have longed to become cabdrivers, and at last two of them have passed the necessary examination, and are now qualified to handle the reins. They are Mme. Duffaut and Mme. Charnier.

The Prefect of Police, M. Lepino, who is a most thoughtful public servant, has ordered that "with a view to the possibility of falls," men's attire will be compulsory for the lady cabdrivers. There seems to be a good deal of humor in the official notice, comments a writer. Are the cabwomen expected to fall frequently from their boxes? They will be quite safe if they do, for they are to wear "stout pantaloons, short jackets, and boiled leather hats."

Less than five minutes after setting out on her first day's round, Mme. Duffaut had her first experience with professional jealousy. A mere man driver whom she encountered addressed her familiarly as "La petite mere," and remarked that she was holding her whip like a wax candle. Mme. Duffaut disdained to reply.

Further on near the Central Market a woman inquired pointedly whether Mme. Duffaut's husband mended the family hose. A milkman asked tenderly after her health. A marketman, saluting her with a tremendous sweep of his broad-brimmed hat, advised her never to drive on the left, because that was the side where the heart was.

A group of men drinking in a wine shop cheered her lustily and invited her to join them. Two small boys ran after her with shouts of "Vive la Republique!" All things considered, she felt that she had attained popularity.

Mme. Charnier had a similar experience.

Australia's Defence.

At a recent lecture on "Military Formation in Australia" before an audience composed exclusively of military men, Mr. Long-Innes gave several interesting statistics regarding the Commonwealth, and drew up an array of figures, regarding export, which was stupendous, considering that the population averages but one individual per square mile. Dropping into the military affairs of his country, he maintaned a free and impartial spirit, with one or two exceptions, throughout the lecture. "The present war footing in Australia," he said, "is 40,000, but—a very big but—the condition of arms is pretty shaky, and in view of the fact that the permanent force is so small that there are only 34 permanent officers, the land defence is wholly inadequate, and inefficient." He also grieved: "It is a matter of regret we have no military college. An officer's examination is of a purely educational character, and nothing even remotely approaches a military examination." There is no arms factory in Australia, according to Mr. Long-Innes. "Also," he said, "there are no pensions for retired officers, who, after a life's work in the army, are turned out empty-handed to start life anew."

Oddities In Graves.

There is a curious old gravestone in Prestbury churchyard which records the fact that one woman at least in England died a bachelor. Her name was Sarah Pickford, and the stone gravely informs the reader she was there interred "August ye 17. Anno Dom. 1703, and died a Bachelor in the 48th year of her age."

A stone in Westminster Abbey records the interment there of George Graham, who was the only workman that received the honor of being buried in Westminster Abbey. He was a scientific instrument maker, who in 1700 invented the deadbeat escapement in clocks. His funeral was attended by the Royal Society in a body.

In East Ham churchyard there is a tombstone placed crossways. The woman interred is said to have been born cross, lived cross, married a Mr. Cross and died cross. Her dying request was to be buried cross, and this was carried out.

The Skyscraping Jonah.

"I suppose you didn't know," remarked the superstitious man, "that many of the New York downtown office buildings and the Times building uptown have eliminated the thirteenth floor? It is true. They skip from the twelfth to the fourteenth. It is almost impossible, they say, to rent the offices on the thirteenth floor."

MAY RUIN BRITISH ARMY.

Exploiting British Soldier and Blighting His Future.

The decision of Mr. Haldane and the Army Council to prevent the majority of soldiers qualifying for pensions is severely condemned in the "United Service Gazette," which says:—

"One of the most astounding orders that has ever been issued to the British Army is that which was circulated by the Army Council last week, whereby soldiers have been wantonly deprived of the right to earn a pension after long and faithful service.

"So unthought of, so unexpected was such a blow, that for the moment it was difficult to believe that any officer in his Majesty's army would lend himself to such a scheme for exploiting the soldier and ruining his future.

"But as it became too evident that the work of confiscation had a real existence, a great wave of indignation spread itself through all ranks of the army, directed not so much against Mr. Haldane, the economist, as against the Army Council, the representatives of the Army as they should be, but who seem more pliant than Mr. Haldane himself in conceding to the demands of the Socialist clique.

"Officers and men are being betrayed on every side, and no man wearing the King's uniform, no matter what his rank may be, feels that his position is secure. Men who have joined the army with the full intention of making it their career, and who have consequently sought promotion, now feel that all their efforts have been wasted, and that their lives, so far, have been mis-spent, and must be begun all over again."

"TOM THUMB" DEAD.

Career of Most Perfectly Formed Dwarf In the World.

Field-Marshal Tom Thumb, Richard Garnsey, has just died at Wellington, the peaceful little market town in Somerset.

Born on April 20, 1833, he created a furore fifty years ago, dense crowds flocking to the Egyptian Hall and various places of amusement throughout the kingdom to see this little man of 3 feet, who was acknowledged to be the most perfectly-formed dwarf in the world.

More than once he appeared before the late Queen Victoria, who evinced a great interest in his welfare.

When he left the stage he adopted farming as an occupation, proving himself a keen, busy man.

In Wellington he soon became a great favorite. Always he was good company, revelling in a friendly pipe with his rural friends, and ever ready to talk over those old times when he was prominent in the public eye.

During the last few years he walked with the aid of a crutch, in consequence of an accident in which his leg was broken by one of his bulls. His coffin was scarcely larger than that of a baby.

By Motor Car to the Pole.

The use of a motor-car is the most novel feature connected wth the British South Polar Expedition, which is to leave England in October next.

It is to be under the leadership of Mr. E. H. Shackleton, who was third lieutenant on the Discovery during the National Antarctic Expedition, and, with Capt. Scott and Dr. Wilson made the record journey to the "furthest south."

A motor-car will be used, an innovation modern in method, and, according to the opinion of many Polar explorers, absolutely feasible.

The carrying out of the changes of this car in order to make it suitable for the ice surface that will be encountered is being undertaken by the Arrol-Johnston Co., of Paisley.

There will necessarily be modifications of the ordinary type, but the essential principle of the engine will be adhered to. Apart from this special attention is being paid to the equipment.

On its departure the expedition will proceed to New Zealand, and thence will go down to the winter quarters of the Discovery. After landing a shore party of explorers the ship will proceed back to New Zealand, and in the following year she will return to pick up the explorers.

As similar expeditions are being organized by other nations what may be called an international attack on the South Polar regions will be made.

Maisonettes On Liners.

Millionaires who appreciate privacy will welcome the latest improvement in ocean travel.

The Atlantic Transport Company is making structural alterations in its liners with a view to providing "flats" for those passengers who can pay for the luxury.

The "flats" or "maisonettes" are on the upper promenade deck, and consist each of three beautiful staterooms and bath-room. In the daytime the beds in these rooms can be hidden and the rooms used as sitting-rooms.

To each flat there will be a hall and a front door, and there is no reason why the occupiers should not have their names and the usual electric bell-push attached to the latter.

The "maisonettes" will be 30ft. long by 25ft. wide, and the chief room will be 15ft. square. The price of these "flats" in the summer season will vary. One person who wishes to take two rooms and a bedroom must pay £100., and a family of four taking a whole flat would pay £175.

In the Locust's Wake.

There is very bad news from Abyssina. As a sequel to the devastation by locusts some months ago wide tracks of country are now in a state of famine. Prices have gone up twenty-fold, and destitution of the most acute kind rages everywhere owing to the utter destruction of the crops. The worst case is that of the scattered but numerous populations who live among the lower slopes of the mountains difficult of access. It is becoming almost impossible to feed and clothe the children gathered into the missionary schools.—London Globe.

Mummy of Egyptian Queen Discovered at Thebes—Was Once One of the World's Greatest Rulers.

Theodore M. Davis has discovered at Thebes the tomb of Queen Teie, one of the greatest names in the history of ancient Egypt.

She was the mother and inspirer of the famous Amen-hotep IV., the "heretic King" of the eighteenth dynasty, who broke with the religious traditions of Egypt and endeavored to introduce a pantheistic monotheism, the visible symbol of which was the solar disc. The worship of Amon, the god of his fathers, was proscribed, and, for the first time in history, there was persecution for religion's sake.

The old religion of Egypt triumphed in the end, and the tomb of Teie bears witness to the blind rage of the victorious priesthood of Thebes and the intensity of their hatred toward the "heretic King."

The doorway of piled stones, which was sealed with the royal seal, was partially broken through, the wooden doors were wrenched from their hinges, the great catafalque which stood above the coffin was torn to pieces, and the mummy itself turned over in order to erase the name of the "heretic King" incised on the sheet of gold which lay beneath it.

Wherever the name of the heretic was found it was carefully destroyed, and the figure of the King, adorning the solar disc, which had been engraved on one of the gold plates of the catafalque, was chiseled out.

The men, however, who thus violated the tomb were no common robbers. The havoc they wrought was the result of religious zeal, and, save for these desecrations, the tomb remains as it was left by the priests amid the throes of a religious revolution which had spent its force before Moses was born.

Wherever the excavators walked they trod upon fragments of gold plate and gold leaf.

The coffin, when it was discovered, lay on a bier incrusted with gold and supported on four lion's claws, also of gold.

The woodwork of the bier has been converted into touchwood by the action of water. The coffin, however, is intact, and is a superb example of the jeweler's work.

The wood of which it was composed is entirely covered with a frame of gold inlaid with lapis lazuli, cornelian, and green glass. The inlay represents for the most part a pattern of scales, but down the middle runs an inscription from which we learn that the coffin was "made for Teie" by her son.

Wrapped In Sheets of Gold.

The mummy itself was wrapped from head to foot in sheets of gold. There were bracelets on the arms, and a necklace of gold beads and ornaments of gold inlaid with precious stones round the neck, while the head was still encircled by a priceless object—the imperial crown of the Queens of ancient Egypt.

This crown is at once simple and exquisitely fashioned, and represents the royal vulture holding a signet-ring in either talon, while its wings surround the head, and are fastened at the tips behind by a pin. The whole is of solid gold without inlay or other adventitious ornament.

An idea of the personal appearance of Queen Teie is gained from the four portrait heads which replace the heads of the genii of the dead of Egyptian orthodoxy as the covers of the four canopic jars.

Those heads are done in Egyptian alabaster, with the eyebrows and eyeballs represented by inlays of lapis lazuli and obsidian. The face is that of a woman at once masterful and engaging; but apart from the lips there is little that is Egyptian about it, and the delicate subaquiline curve of the nose is European rather than African.

Many articles of artistic interest were found in the tomb.

POLISHED SPEAR HEAD.

Lord Roberts On Universal Military Training.

Lord Roberts presided recently at the Mansion House over a meeting held in the interests of the National Service League, at which Dr. Emil Reich lectured on war. Emphasizing the importance of national training, he referred to the great part England had played in the world's history, and said this role could only be kept up by maintaining the strength of the Empire on land and sea.

In expressing his appreciation of Dr. Reich's lecture, Lord Roberts said they fully recognized that voluntary service was the only possible system for the Regular Forces, but this highly efficient army, this keen and polished spear-head, must in times of great national emergency have behind it the stout shaft represented by the trained manhood of the nation.

Lord Roberts concurred with Mr. Haldane in the view that a nation in arms was the only safeguard of public interests should war break out, and that could only be secured by the adoption of universal military training as part and parcel of the equipment of citizenship.

New Zealand Trout.

Forty years ago, says The County Gentleman, there was not a single trout in all the length and breadth of New Zealand. To-day New Zealand trout are famous all over the world for their size and numbers, and thousands of fishermen come every year simply and solely to fish—to fish all the time and do nothing but fish. There is no doubt at all about New Zealand being the angler's paradise. Everything possible is done to help him and encourage him and make him comfortable. Hotels in some parts exist solely for him, hotel managers are always ready to give advice, and in every town and village fishing tackle shops abound, where polite proprietors are ready with rods, flies, baits and information of all kinds about the state of the rivers, the fish in them, the sort of fly to be used and everything else that the would-be fisherman may want to know.

Elaborate Window Decoration In Charing Cross Office.

London, April 3.—(C. A. P.)—The most interesting and attractive window in London is that of the Canadian emigration office in Charing Cross. The window shows a Saskatchewan view of wheat in stock, in the foreground a river running through the picture, sending a flow of wheat and operating the mill-wheel of a grist mill shown in one corner of the picture.

Mobbed By Germans.

Hamburg, April 3.—Eight English longshoremen were badly injured and many others were slightly hurt Monday night in a fight with local locked out longshoremen.

The Englishmen had been on an excursion, contrary to warnings, and were assailed on their return to the ships in the harbor, on board which they were housed in order to keep them from clashing with the locked-out men.

A mob fell upon the Englishmen with stones and a strong force of police had to be hurried to the scene.

OCULAR HEADACHE.

That is headache caused by eye-strain, and 90 per cent. of all headaches are caused by eye-strain in some form. And in most cases the vision is normal, which fact often throws the physician off his guard in his diagnosis; where the vision is much affected there is not much headache for the reason that the nerve centres are not so sensitive as where the vision is keener. Of course, small errors of refraction, especially astigmatism with oblique axis, will cause headache, but the worst forms of headaches are caused from muscle-strain, because these ocular muscles have a vital connection with the nerve centres at the base of the brain. In the latter case this strain often produces other nervous troubles, such as chorea, epilepsy, debility, insanity, etc. RANNSEY and STEVENS, two prominent specialists of New York, report numerous cases of chorea and insanity cured by wearing the proper glasses. We make a specialty of such cases of eye-strain. Consultation free.

These Drummers Had "A Run For Their Money."

At a few minutes before 10 o'clock last night an exciting runaway occurred on Mill and Front streets, and whilst no person was seriously injured, a dozen or more were hurt.

Mr. A. Aselstine, who conducts a bus line about the city, was at the Grand Trunk Railway station with his large bus for the purpose of conveying passengers by the 9.10 train to the city.

The train was some 25 minutes late and it was nearly 10 o'clock when Mr. Aselstine, drove away from the station with his conveyance filled with passengers, the majority of whom were commercial travellers bound for various hotels.

Shortly after leaving the depot, en driving to one side of the road to pass another vehicle, so we are told, the wheels of the bus went over a pile of frozen mud, scraped from off the street. This caused the vehicle to sway and the tongue striking the horses frightened them and off they started at a rapid gait. Although the driver did all he could to check the speed of the animals it was of no avail. They had not proceeded far when another pile of the frozen mud was struck and Mr. Aselstine was thrown violently to the road, sustaining some injuries to his head.

The passengers, realizing their danger, made for the door, and one after another dropped off, until all were out. By this time the horses were going at a 2.30 clip and when the gentlemen left the vehicle it was by no means in an easy or graceful manner. In fact, as one commercial traveller told us, the passengers had the time of their lives. They were in total darkness, and as the maddened horses yanked the heavy bus over the mud piles the passengers were thrown round like footballs. They had great difficulty, too, in opening the door, and all this time of weary waiting they were sustaining fractured pantaloons and losing cuticle. The upshot was that not one escaped without receiving some injuries. The animals continued on their mad career down Front street, and in making a sharp turn at the corner of Front and Bridge streets fell, when their wild run was ended. The bus suffered some little damage, and the horses were slightly hurt. The affair caused considerable excitement for a few minutes.

WAS SEVERELY INJURED.

Since the above was written we have learned that at least one of the passengers was seriously, and possibly dangerously injured. Mr. Fitzpatrick, a Kingston gentleman, sustained several broken ribs, and other internal injuries. He was taken to the residence of Mrs. Harold, to whom he is related, and to-day left for his home in Kingston. It appears that, when Mr. Fitzpatrick got out of the bus, he fell and was run over by a horse and conveyance which was following.

Some of the other gentlemen who were in the bus say they consider themselves very lucky that they escaped severe injury. Their bruises, they say, become more painful as time rolls on, but they will be all right in a few days.

The Christian Conference

The closing meetings of the Christian conference in Bethel Hall were held last night, and although many had left the city for home, yet the Hall was filled. Mr. Marshall, of Scotland, gave a very rousing and helpful address, and Mr. Morton and Mr. Crombie gave also interesting and profitable addresses. All present evidently enjoyed the meeting. The conference altogether proved itself to be one of the largest and happiest conferences held in the Hall and those from a distance expressed themselves delighted with the meetings and kind hospitality extended to them. Mr. Marshall is staying over for to-day and will preach in the Hall to-night (Wednesday), to which meeting all are cordially invited.

LAST ACT IN THE BERRY TRAGEDY.

UNFORTUNATE MAN WAS BURIED HERE TO-DAY—HIS FATHER IN THE CITY.

The final chapter in the case of James B. Berry, the unfortunate man whose body was found in the river on Monday, was closed this morning, when the remains were interred in the cemetery here. Last evening the dead man's father, Mr. James P. Berry, of Lindsay, arrived here, and, although he was unable to identify the remains as those of his son, the effects upon the body with the postal receipt, were sufficient to complete identification.

It appears that the unfortunate man was 24 years of age and was born in Scotland. Since the age of 12 he had been home only at intervals, but during that time had always remembered his parents by sending them regular remittances. During the recent Boer war the younger Berry was in South Africa, where he did military duty and remained in that country some time after the war was over. Since that time he had travelled quite extensively.

In conversation with the father an Intelligencer representative was informed that the deceased had no reason for going under the name of Cameron, and the old gentleman appeared to be much surprised to find out that his son had at times assumed that name. The deceased had not been home for some months, and during the winter, owing to his mother being seriously ill, an effort was made to locate him, but no trace of his whereabouts could be found. It was owing to the fact that Mrs. Berry is ill at the present time that it was considered prudent to have the remains interred here instead of taking them to Lindsay.

The elder Mr. Berry is a man upwards of 70 years of age, and it was apparent that the unfortunate affair was a severe blow to him.

Their Easter Thank-Offering Entertainment

The annual closing Easter Thank Offering entertainment, in connection with Holloway St. church W. M. S. was a time of interest worthy of notice.

The President, Mrs. Magrath, presiding, prayer was offered by the pastor, and an excellent programme was rendered by the Junior League and Primary S.-S. class. The Cradle Roll, numbering 35, were given a reception by the President. Master Harold Cauniff, the senior member, gave an appropriate recitation in response Master Adrian Magrath, the first member, delivered a practical eulogy and then presented to the Secretary $25, with the request for life membership. This evoked an ovation.

Miss E. Price sang a most appropriate solo, and Mrs. Leitch gave a map talk, eliciting interest in Africa's missionary needs. The thank-offering exceeded any former year, being over $36.

The President, Mrs. Magrath, was taken by surprise, and in consequence of shortly leaving the city for some time, was suitably addressed by Miss Martin, the secretary, and asked to accept an address, which was beautifully illuminated on parchment, and framed The address refers to the long, patient and loving service rendered so devotedly to the Society and church by the president, and commended her to further usefulness in the distant field.

Mrs. Magrath most appropriately and feelingly responded. Mrs. L. Grills, a charter member, leaving also for the west, was presented with a most useful portfolio. Mrs. Grills was not able to be present.

Thus happily and hopefully closed another chapter in the history of one of our most honorable and useful church societies.

Broke His Leg.

An Englishman named James Booth, who has been a resident of the city for some months, yesterday afternoon met with a painful accident. It appears that the unfortunate man accidentally fell at the Windsor House, and as a result his left leg was fractured. Booth was taken to the hospital where the fracture was reduced. He is an unmarried man.

An Appreciative Word

Rev. R. H. Leitch, pastor of Holloway St. Church, writes: "The address given in connection with the Easter programme in Holloway St. Sunday School by his Hon. Judge Deroche, will reflect credit upon the speaker, upon his acquaintance with the Word of God, and the reverend and respectful method of calling attention to its first place. He will be always welcomed at Holloway St. Church.

San Francisco Is Again In Trouble

FIRE LAST NIGHT CAUSES DAMAGE TO THE EXTENT OF TWO MILLIONS AND A HALF.

San Francisco, April 3.—(Special).—The destruction of the electric light and power house of the San Francisco Gas and Electric Light Company by fire last night, plunging almost the entire city into darkness, resulted in the injuring of five firemen, at least one of whom will die, and caused a loss estimated at $2,500,000.

The Alien Labor Cases.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

My Dear Sir, — The Corby Distillery cases. The law which permits an appeal from the decision of a magistrate to the County Judge is most unfair to the magistrate. In the above cases, I heard all evidence adduced, and decided the cases upon that evidence. Defendant then appealed from my decisions to the County Judge. In all fairness to the magistrate, only the evidence which had been adduced before him should have been heard by the appeal judge. What happens? Upon the hearing of the case before Judge Fraleck a number of witnesses giving most material evidence, who never appeared before the magistrate at all, were called, and gave their evidence before Judge Fraleck. Had this evidence been brought before myself, it is quite possible I might have came to the same conclusion as did His Honor Judge Fraleck. Yours, etc.,

JOHN J. B. FLINT.

County Court

In the County Court without a jury, held here yesterday before Judge Deroche, one case was tried, namely, Allen vs. The British American Development Co. The plaintiff, who resides in Madoc Township, claimed $141.75 for a certain amount of wood which the defendants received and used. The defendants alleged that the wood was purchased from Allen by one Wilson, without the defendants' authority, and they were not bound by any contract he made. They also alleged that the wood was not of proper quality or quantity. After the evidence had been submitted judgment was given in favor of plaintiff for the amount claimed and costs. Mr. A. A. McDonald and Mr. Carnew for plaintiff Mr. W. D. McPherson for the defendants.

Fine Easter Sunday School Service.

The following was delayed in transmission:

Easter services at Holloway St. Sunday School Sunday last attracted a record crowd, just about the largest turn-out this S. S. has ever had. The session was an open one, consisting largely of Easter music, etc., by the S. S. scholars, and a stirring address from His Honor Judge Deroche, his subject being an Easter topic. Of special interest to scholars and visitors was his review of the origin of our present day Easter emblems. His address traced the life of Christ from birth to His death and resurrection. His address was listened to with great profit to young and old. The large orchestra of 15 pieces rendered inspiring music and the Easter offering was very large.

An Absolute Cure for Rheumatism

If the skin or bowels are unhealthy, they won't throw off enough urea. This urea is changed into uric acid—carried by the blood to the nerves—and causes Rheumatism.

Fruit-a-tives surely cure Rheumatism and Sciatica

because they act directly on bowels, kidneys and skin—and so strengthen and invigorate these organs that there is no urea and uric acid retained in the system to irritate the nerves and bring Rheumatism, Sciatica and Neuralgia.

"Fruit-a-tives" are intensified fruit juices with tonics and intestinal antiseptics added.

MONTREAL IS HAPPY.

Large Increase In Customs Revenue In Canada's Premier City.

Montreal, April 3.—The fiscal year 1906-7, which has just closed, has been a banner one in the history of the Port of Montreal, the collections of Customs duties on imports having been greater than ever before since Montreal became a Customs port, which is quite a number of years.

The heaviest month in this year was November last, with $488,068, and March just ended was a good second, with an increase of $207,577.90 over March in 1906. December last was the poorest month, when only $1,107,148.78 was gathered in for the national treasury.

The increase for the nine months just ended over the corresponding months of the previous year totals $1,502,528.25. Total collections for the same months were $11,427,595, against $9,925,067 for the previous fiscal year.

GIVEN HIS SEAT.

S. J. Donaldson Takes His Place In Saskatchewan Legislature.

Regina, Sask., April 3.—For the first time in the history of Canada, a seat was given to a member in a Legislative Assembly without the polling of votes.

The Saskatchewan Legislature yesterday afternoon declared that Samuel J. Donaldson, Provincial Rights candidate in Prince Albert district, was duly elected.

The decision of the Legislature was made on account of the revelations showing the most brazen crooked work in the election of Mr. Donaldson's opponent, among the acts being the marking in the bush by deputy returning officers of enough ballots to give the Government candidate a clear majority.

KILLED BY DYNAMITE.

Italian on Railway Work Meets Death Near Ancaster.

Hamilton, April 3.—Tony Panzini, an Italian employed by Nicholson and Riley, contractors, on the Hamilton-Brantford Electric Railway, was killed yesterday evening by an explosion at Herning's Mills, near Ancaster. Panzini was engaged blasting rock. A charge of dynamite did not go off as quickly as he thought it should and he started towards the spot where the charge was set to see what was the matter. He got within a few feet of it when there was an explosion, and he was blown about a hundred feet. He was unconscious when assistance reached him and died shortly afterwards.

ALFONSO'S MOTHER ILL.

Queen Cristina Has Serious Attack—Sacraments Administered.

Madrid, April 3.—Queen Cristina, King Alfonso's mother, is confined to her bed with a very severe attack of grip, her temperature reaching 40 degrees centrigrade (104 degrees Fahrenheit). She has received the last sacrament, and her physicians refuse to make any prediction as to the progress of her illness.

Queen Cristina, who is 49 years old, was about to go to Cartagena with King Alfonso to meet King Edward. Her illness, coming at this time, is especially unfortunate, owing to the interesting condition of Queen Victoria, her daughter-in-law.

McINTOSH BROS.

H. R. EMMERSON RESIGNS

But Absolutely Denies Grave Charges Brought Against Him.

Enters Libel Actions to Vindicate His Character—Hyman Must Also Explain, Laurier Assures Parliament—Western Men Complain of Tariff on Reapers—Schaffner Amendment to Customs Act Defeated.

Ottawa, April 3.—Before the orders of the day were called yesterday Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

"I have a communication to make to the House. For some time past, my hon. friend and colleague, the Minister of Railways and Canals, has been subjected to insinuations and rumors of a most injurious character—rumors and insinuations hitherto impalpable and intangible, but which have at last taken the form of a very injurious newspaper article. This article, I have no doubt, is familiar to members of the House.

"My hon. friend, the Minister of Railways and Canals, absolutely denies the truth of the allegations set forth in that article and, in order better to vindicate his character, has tendered his resignation, which has been accepted.

HON. H. R. EMMERSON.

Mr. Emmerson Denies.

The Premier abruptly took his seat, but Mr. Emmerson at once rose and addressed the chair. He spoke as follows:

"It will, perhaps, be necessary for me to add a word to the announcement made by the Prime Minister. I want to be definitely clear as to what my statement should be and, with the indulgence of the House, I shall read it, so that there need be no misapprehension as to the words."

Mr. Emmerson then read as follows:

"I desire at this time to repeat my denial explicitly and unqualifiedly of the charge which has been made against me by The Fredericton Gleaner, and to say I have taken steps to secure vindication before the only tribunal having jurisdiction in the premises, the established courts of the land.

"To this end, I have given instructions for the issue of writs for libel against The Fredericton Gleaner, The Halifax Herald and The Toronto World, and I have been advised of service in at least one of these cases. It is but a question of hours now as to the other two cases, if, indeed, at this moment service has not yet taken place."

Hyman's Resignation.

A few moments later R. L. Borden asked the Prime Minister if there was any further information with respect to the tendered resignation of the Minister of Public Works. He thought there should be some statement from the Prime Minister, and that the period was approaching when there should be some finality about the matter.

"I have no information whatever to give the House at this moment," said Sir Wilfrid. "I have received no further communication from Mr. Hyman, either direct or indirect.

"It is quite certain that the Minister of Public Works will have to take action before he can enter this House again. He has already given us notice of his intention, and I have no doubt he will make his intentions good of appealing to his constituents for vindication."

Tariff Questions.

After the Emmerson statement and the Hyman enquiry the House took up the tariff. Mr. Schaffner (Con., Man.) spoke to the item of reapers, binders and mowers. The Government had promised to reform the tariff.

They had, it is true, brought down a bill embodying changes in the Customs Act, but the changes, were those of form; they were not changes in substance. It would seem as though the Liberals, being unable to improve on the tariff, had re-enacted it, holus bolus.

Both parties were committed to a high protective tariff. Nevertheless, he hoped that members on both sides of the House would vote for a reduction upon agricultural implements.

Move to Reduce Duty.

He moved an amendment reducing the duty on reapers, binders and mowers, from 17 1-2 to 10 per cent.

Mr. Staples (Con., Man.) supported the amendment.

Dr. R. N. Walsh (Con., Que.) said that he spoke for Eastern Canada. His constituents and farmers generally demanded relief. He preferred to go further than the amendment and to reduce the duty upon all agricultural implements.

Mr. Henderson (Halton) pointed out that more agricultural implements were exported than imported. This showed how strong was this industry. Did it need an excessive protective duty? Statistics showed than our Canadian manufacturers had almost a complete monopoly of the home market.

R. L. Borden said the farmers of Canada were complaining that it cost no more to manufacture these implements in Canada than it does in the United States. Why, then, were the retail prices so much higher in this country. In the absence of information as to the cost of production, the prices charged abroad and at home, etc., he could not support the amendment.

Amendment Lost.

Dr. Schaffner's amendment was then put and lost by a vote of 56 to 26. Among those who voted with the majority were Messrs. Sproule, R. L. Borden, Foster, Taylor and Daniel.

On the third reading, Mr. Borden moved to amend the clauses giving the governor-in-council power to extend the intermediate tariff to any country. He claimed that these changes in the tariff were properly a legislative function, and should not be delegated to the executive.

Mr. Fielding replied and the discussion was carried on by Mr. Foster and the Minister of Customs.

Upon division the Borden amendment was defeated: yeas 36, nays 54—a party vote. The Customs Act was then read a third time and passed.

Held Fast in Train's Path.

Emmerson, Man., April 3.—With his foot caught in a frog and unable to extricate himself, Brakeman Fyvie, who runs on the mixed train between this town and Winnipeg, was run down and killed yesterday in the C. P. R. yards.

He was a resident of Winnipeg and leaves a widow and grown-up family.

China Orders 2,000,000 Rifles.

Berlin, April 3.—According to a despatch received here from Shanghai, the Chinese Government has ordered, through a German firm at Tientsin, 2,000,000 rifles for the uniform equipment of the Chinese army.

ANNUAL MEETING OF ASSOCIATION.

FOR PREVENTION OF CONSUMPTION, BEING HELD AT OTTAWA CONSIDERING THE TERRIBLE RAVAGES OF THE WHITE PLAGUE.

(Special from Ottawa.)

At the annual meeting of the Canadian Association for the Prevention of Consumption, held in Ottawa a few days ago, the death rate from consumption in Canada was shown by the annual report to have increased in ten years from 15.5 to 18. per thousand. This is an alarming showing. The report referred with some degree of pride to the fact that a decrease of 810 lives in the last year of the decade was shown. This is undoubtedly a noble and worthy work, and deserving of every encouragement. But while this great and worthy Association is doing this, Psychine, the greatest and most universally successful consumption cure of this or any other age, is going on its quiet and unobtrusive way, curing thousands, yes, tens of thousands, of cases of consumption every year. Many of them are in the incipient stages, and many in the most advanced stages, when the best physicians had pronounced the cases hopeless. If the officers of the Association, even though they are chiefly doctors, were to spend one hour in an honest and unprejudiced investigation of the great work Psychine is doing, and the unassailable evidence of its wonderful cures. Dr. Sheard, Medical Health Officer, of Toronto, and Chairman of the Provincial Board of Health, in his address on "The Home Treatment of Consumption," would, we feel assured, have recommended Psychine as the greatest and most reliable home treatment the world has ever known for the cure of Consumption and all wasting diseases.

The following letter from a prominent Corporation Official of the City of Toronto, who does not wish his name used in the public press at present, but will be furnished privately to anyone interested, is but one of thousands of such cases:—

Dr. T. A. Slocum, Ltd.,—Some years ago, my daughter, Mrs. ——, was pronounced a hopeless case of consumption by several eminent physicians of this city. She had been for years somewhat delicate and easily contracted colds, coughs, etc. I was informed by the physicians that nothing could be done for her, and that it was a hopeless case. I decided as a last resort to try Dr. Slocum's Psychine and Dr. Slocum's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil. The Psychine was given to her as directed, three times a day, and the Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil three or four times a day. Before she had finished the first two bottles of these valuable preparations she was able to sit up in bed, and gradually began to improve until she became quite strong again, and before many months had elapsed she was able to be out and apparently was in perfect health. I can assure you I feel very grateful for what these remedies have done for my daughter; although years have elapsed since, she is in the enjoyment of fairly good health, which goes to show that the relief she received was of a permanent nature. I shall ever feel grateful to you for this valuable medicine, and shall ever esteem it a favor to recommend them to any person similarly afflicted, as I consider it a duty that I owe, not only to you as the proprietor of these remedies, but also a truthful recommendation may be the means of inducing some other sufferer to use Dr. Slocum's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Dr. Slocum's Psychine.

(Signed) ————.

Psychine is the greatest preventive of, as well as cure for, consumption. It quickly breaks up coughs, colds, bronchitis, catarrh, pneumonia, and all throat and lung troubles. It is the greatest of all tonics, curing all forms of stomach troubles. At all druggists, 50 cents and $1.00, or Dr. T. A. Slocum, Limited, 179 King St. west, Toronto.

BANDS ATTACK TOWNS

Bulgarians Maltreat Servian Women and Children.

Servia Incensed at Neighboring Nation—Seven Men Killed and Thirty Houses Burned—Fanatical Rustics Released From Their Oaths — Villages Razed by Artillery — Fifty Peasants Killed In Disorders.

Belgrade, Servia, April 3.—It is reported that a band of Bulgarians have attacked the old Servian towns of Rudnik and Topilcha, burning thirty houses, killing seven men and maltreating a number of women and children. Increasing bitterness is being displayed here toward the Bulgarians owing to the belief that while the powers have called the attention of the Governments of Servia and Greece to the atrocities perpetrated by Servian and Greek bands, they have made no protest to the Bulgarian Government against the actions of Bulgarian bands.

Released From Their Oaths.

Bucharest, April 3.—The Metropolitan of Bucharest will issue shortly a pastoral letter releasing the peasantry from the oaths which they took on enrolment in the insurgent forces. This is expected to assist in the work of pacification, many fanatical rustics having sent in word that they could not cease plundering until absolved from the oaths.

Quiet continues to prevail in Moldavia, but the troops will remain under arms until the peasants resume the cultivation of the land. Agitation is still rampant in some of the Danubian districts and mountainous regions of Valseia.

Four villages in Mehodintzi are reported to have been razed by artillery fire with considerable loss of life. Some reports say that hundreds of peasants were killed or wounded. Investigations of similar sensational figures regarding casualties, in the case of previous bombardments, have always proved them to be greatly exaggerated.

More Agrarian Disorders.

Nishni-Novogrod, Russia, April 3.—Agrarian disorders have broken out in the Sergachevsk district. In an encounter with troops Monday fifty peasants were wounded and a rural guard killed.

STILL FIGHTING DEATH.

Speaker St. John's Condition Has Not Improved—Outlook Unfavorable.

Toronto, April 3.—"Mr. St. John's condition has not improved during the day, and the outlook is distinctly unfavorable."

This bulletin was issued by the physicians in attendance on Hon. Speaker St. John at 1 o'clock this morning.

At 3 o'clock this morning the hospital attendance reported that there was no change in the patient's condition. From other sources it was said that it was extremely doubtful if Mr. St. John would survive the night.

The unfavorable reports from the hospital would seem to indicate that there is very little hope for the recovery of the distinguished patient. From the bulletin issued at noon yesterday his friends were led to entertain considerable hope. The bulletin read:

"Mr. St. John passed a fairly good night. His condition this morning is about the same as yesterday. Although still very critical, it is thought his condition is not hopeless."

During yesterday, however, the hoped-for progress did not materialize, and it is doubtful if Mr. St. John's vitality will hold out much longer.

TEHERAN IS TROUBLED.

Arrival of Russian and British Troops Creates Consternation.

Teheran, Persia, April 3.—Indian native mounted troops have entered Persian territory for service at the British Consulates in the south.

This news, together with the arrival of Cossacks at Teheran and at the Russian Consulates in the north, a report—as yet unconfirmed—of the appearance of a British man-of-war in the Gulf, and the presence of a Russian transport with troops off the Caspian port of Enzeli, has created great excitement in the Persian capital.

Duncan In Penitentiary.

Kingston, April 3.—The penitentiary's colony of former bankers and loan company men was further added to yesterday afternoon by the arrival of John B. Duncan, formerly manager of the Bank of Commerce at Ayr, to enter upon his term of four years.

Duncan was stylishly dressed and is a decidedly fine looking man, considerably under middle age. He was brought down by Sheriff Charles Huber and Deputy Tracy, both of Berlin.

After dining at an hotel, the trio sat around the lobby for a short time, smoking, and about 2.30 o'clock proceeded in an open carriage to the penitentiary. Duncan was not shackled.

This Is Earthquake Time.

London, April 3.—Prof. Belar, the seismologist, director of the Laibach Observatory, announces that the general unrest of the earth has been growing during the past three days, and connects the fact with the presence of large sunspots. Comparing the earth shocks during the first quarter of 1906 with those of the corresponding quarter this year, he remarks that the intensity of these recorded in 1907 was less than half the intensity of those of the preceding year. He adds:—"If the disturbances of the equilibrium of the earth's surface are to result in the average compromise we must await the earthquake now due with some anxiety."

Killed In Explosion.

Cincinnati, Ohio, April 3.—A despatch from La Porte, Ind., says: It is reported that five men have been killed by a powder explosion at Aetna. The surrounding country was badly shaken.

Premier Heads Off Debate On "Women, Wine and Graft."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Gags Bourassa For This Session—Speaker Rules Motion Out Of Order—Borden Protests In Vain, Seeks to Make Fowler Prove Charges—Appeal To House Voted Down.

Ottawa, April 4.—Henri Bourassa in the House yesterday made his second attempt to have an investigation of the Fowler charges. He presented a motion quoting the charges describing them as reflecting on members of the House, and calling upon Mr. Fowler to prove, retract or stand censure of the House.

The Speaker at once ruled the motion out of order, on the ground of its similarity to the previous motion of the Labelle member.

Mr. Bourassa, speaking to the point of order, argued that his previous motion had been made upon a question of privilege, or had not been dealt with as a question of privilege. "The House has not decided whether the member for King's should define his charges or not.

R. L. Borden Criticizes.

R. L. Borden criticized the Bourassa motion as peculiar. He knew of no English precedent for censuring a member in advance. At the same time he urged that the motion should not be set aside on any technicality, and a fair discussion prevented.

The Speaker ruled that the question of privilege had already been dealt with, and that the motion covered ground already traversed.

The Labelle member suggested that the Government ought to have something to say. He asked that the House give leave for a discussion as a matter of great public importance.

The Government still remained silent.

Backed Up Bourassa.

Hon. George Foster thereupon rose and, discussing the point of order, backed up Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Borden. He urged the abandonment of the strictly technical view and a discussion of the broad question.

The Speaker again ruled, at which Mr. Foster took the ground that the present Bourassa motion differed from the one already passed upon.

The next speaker was George W. Fowler, who declared that Bourassa had treated him with scant courtesy in not supplying him with a copy of the resolution.

"No Power to Censure Me."

"This House has not power to censure me."

"That, of course," said the Speaker, "is another question."

Dr. Sproule took the question up. He asked for a discussion. The Labelle member saw the end when Sir Wilfrid got up, and "to maintain the traditions of the House and of Parliamentary Government," upheld the ruling.

The Premier's Duty.

The Premier said that he always regarded it as his duty as leader of the House to support the chair unless the ruling was grossly wrong. The rules of the House were the result of long experience in the wisest of Parliaments. The House could not err in following the rule that a member could not be impugned without cause being shown and a formal charge made. There was no reason for a general inquisition. If any member had disgraced himself, it was open to Mr. Bourassa to bring a charge.

This argument of speech, Mr. Bourassa protested, had nothing to do with his present motion, which did not ask for an investigation.

The Premier answered that it led to one.

"It leads, retorted Bourassa, "to the member for King's proving his charges or withdrawing them."

The Speaker gave his final ruling against Bourassa, and the latter at once, despite a mild suggestion by the Premier that he couldn't, appealed to the House.

House Sustains Chair.

The House sustained the ruling on a division of 104 to 37, all the Opposition voting with Bourassa and Lavergne except Messrs. Hughes, Lancaster, Broder, Wright (Muskoka), Crockett and Morin. The essence of this point of order, to which George Fowler had attached weight, was that words "not taken down" when uttered should not be subsequently referred to.

This rule was immediately heard of again.

R. L. Borden got up with the Hansard of the Emmerson speech of yesterday. He quoted the Emmerson statement that the public press has sent detectives after him and other Ministers, and that without resorting to bought evidence, there was evidence already existing against members of the other side of the House.

Aspersion on Members.

"This," said Mr. Borden, "casts an aspersion upon 70 or 75 members of this side of the House. The hon. member for Westmoreland has said too much or too little. It is his duty to say more or to withdraw what he has said."

If Mr. Emmerson had any charge affecting the honor or status as a public man of any Conservative, Mr. Borden would give him every assistance toward an investigation. If there was any such charge, it had not come to his (Mr. Borden's) ears. If Mr. Emmerson knew anything of what he had insinuated, Mr. Borden hoped he would go further with it.

This, the Premier said, showed the propriety of the previous ruling, that words passed over without being officially taken down ought not to be referred to.

Bring Editors to Bar.

The Opposition leader did not agree. He quoted a newspaper statement as to threats and counter-threats and agreements between members, declared the statement to be untrue, and said that he was ready to go to the utmost limits of the rules in order to have the insinuations dealt with.

Col. Hughes proposed bringing editors to the bar of the House.

The Premier reaffirmed his admiration for the rule already mentioned, whereat Mr. Borden said that this rule was drawn up in ante-Hansard days, and should not now be regarded with too much importance.

The subject dropped for the time, and the House went into consideration of the new Alberta and Saskatchewan schedule.

THAW'S TESTS NOW OVER.

Insanity Board Very Cordial—Expected Trial Will Be Resumed.

New York, April 4.—To-day brings another critical stage in the case of Harry K. Thaw, when he either will be officially proclaimed insane and ordered to a state asylum, or else his trial will be resumed before Justice Fitzgerald.

The commission completed its work last night and will be ready to report to Justice Fitzgerald this morning.

Thaw underwent a private mental and physical examination for more than two hours yesterday afternoon. In this last crucial test he was entirely alone before the commission, even the district attorney and the members of his own counsel being barred.

When the three members of the commission—David McClure, Peter B. Olney and Dr. Leopold Putzel—had completed their final examination, they in turn cordially shook hands with Thaw. He went back to his cell in the Tombs with a light heart and later told his counsel that he felt the commission would surely declare him sane.

The attorneys shared their client's optimistic view of the situation. Jerome would not commit himself in any way.

Thaw's counsel declared they were ready to proceed with the case and said Mr. Delmas might begin his summing up before noon to-day.

In that event, they said, Mr. Jerome would address the jury on Friday and a verdict might be expected before the week end.

Dr. Putzel conducted the brief physical examination to which Thaw was subjected. He was given all of the standard tests of the reflexes, the pupils of the eyes, the Romberg test for evidences of locomotor ataxia, etc. Thaw is said to have undergone all of these tests in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

SHAKEN BY EARTHQUAKE.

Panic Stricken People Fly From Villa Franca In Azores.

Ponta Delgada, Island of St. Michaels, Azore Islands, April 4.—Violent earth shocks prevailed throughout this island during last night. The worst disturbance occurred at Villa Franca, where the panic-stricken people fled to the outskirts of the town. The wealthier inhabitants are leaving Villa Franca, the ancient capital of St. Michaels, which was twice previously destroyed by volcanic eruptions, being practically swallowed up by an eruption of mud in 1522.

St. Michaels, or San Miguel, is the northern island of the eastern group of the Azores, and Ponta Delgada is the principal city of St. Michaels, and commercial capital of the Azore Islands. It is well built, is situated on a plain extending about two miles along the shore, and in 1890 contained, including the suburbs, about 17,000 inhabitants.

The Town of Villa Franca is of considerable importance. Three and a half miles north is a crater named Lagoa De Fogo, with fifteen fathoms of water in it. Villa Franca is situated fourteen miles east of Ponta Delgada, and in 1900 had a population of about 7,500.

What is it that makes happy homes, and helps to keep marriage from being a failure? Here is one view of the matter, from the Montreal Gazette: "Judge Cleland, of the Chicago municipal court, says that food served by indifferent wives in indifferent styles has more to do with sending husbands to saloons than anything else. He claims, also, that his judgment is based on experience. There is precedent also for the ground he takes, "feed the brute," being an old strong-minded lady's recipe for keeping the bread earner in good humor and tractable."

Answer: Rule 1 of section 14 of original by-law No. 703, the same being entitled "A by-law respecting the public health," seems to cover our correspondent's question. It is identical with the Statute in that behalf, and is as follows:

"Rule 1.—No privy-vault, cesspool or reservoir into which a privy, water closet, stable or sink is drained, shall be established until the details of such establishment shall have been submitted to and obtained the approval in writing of the medical health officer, who shall, from time to time, determine with the approbation of the Board, the method of disposal of excreta, sewage and other refuse, to be adopted within the district.

Judging by the following, from the Hamilton Spectator, it would appear that Belleville Portland cement stands very high; also, that the best things do not always get the best treatment. The Spectator says, with truth very much on its side:

"It seems to be impossible for the Hamilton City Council to make a contract for a supply of cement in a businesslike way. The lowest tenderer for the year was the Owen Sound company, at $1.87 a barrel. The next two were the Lakefield company and the Belleville company, each offering at $1.88. These three men submitted to the test, and the Owen Sound sample failed to stand it, while of the other two the Belleville cement passed the better test. Then came the juggling. The Lakefield company was given a chance to amend its tender figure to $1.87—why this unbusinesslike proceeding we don't know. But the Belleville company, which showed the best sample of the lot, was given no such chance. And the contract was given to the Lakefield company. There is neither business, justice nor common honesty in that transaction."

Unless there have been many untrue stories in circulation, the various local civic committees (or most of them) had overdrafts last year. It may be interesting to note that His Worship Mayor Stewart, of Hamilton, has been talking to a reporter about the overdraft practice, which, it seems, has prevailed in the Ambitious City. This is what Mayor Stewart had to say, and it is just possible that his remarks may contain a useful hint for public men of other places:

"There will be no overdraft this year," said Mayor Stewart again this morning. He has a scheme by which the chairmen of all the spending committees must give him a statement of the financial standing of their departments each month. "The trouble is," said he, speaking doubtless from experience, "that the committees spend money too freely at the beginning of the year, knowing that the fixed charges have to be met anyway." As soon as he sees that there is any sign of extravagance he will put his foot down."

The peculiar smelling drama which is being enacted at Ottawa just now is, as it should be, a matter of particular interest to all Canadians How do they view it? In different ways, of course. The hide-bound Liberals will view it through party spectacles. The shilly-shallying of The Globe is a fair criterion of what strong Grit party men will say and do in the matter. But how do independent citizens-at-large view it? A fair answer to that question, perhaps, may be found in a recent article in The Toronto Telegram, an independent journal which spares nobody and delights to hammer friend and foe alike. Here is what The Telegram says of the matter:

"The Premier of Canada cuts a poor figure in the proceedings. A Premier has every right to require his Ministers to pursue wealth and pleasure without bringing scandal upon his Government. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has shown a high example of personal integrity and private conduct. So did the Prophet Eli. Example is not enough. It is charged that some of the Ministers of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's political household have been "vile and he restrained them not." Such a charge suggests that the fault of Laurier is the sin of Eli and every other weak, well-meaning trifler with the solemn realities of public life.

"Public life, even in Canada, has its solemn realities. Cynical smartness is not always the idol which Canadians ignorantly worship. The tragedy of H. R. Emmerson is pitiful. There may be other tragedies. Let them come. The tragedy of individual suffering in the fires of publicity is not the worst of tragedies. The most deplorable tragedy in a country's history is the slow, sure assassination of a nation's conscience with the theory that the realm of politics is free from the restraints that bind men to honesty, that bind men to decency, in private life.

"The tragedy at Ottawa has reached its inevitable climax. Canada owes a great debt to Henri Bourassa, assuredly, and even to G. W. Fowler, M.P., for the good that has come out of the evil that he spoke. Canada in this crisis has owed little to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. To-day Canada owes the Premier still less for his support of the technicality that utilized a trick of Parliamentary law to silence Henri Bourassa."

From all parts of Ontario and the west comes the cry for help on the farm. The young men from older Ontario are going west, and their places are hard to fill. Those who go west go for the purpose of taking up land on their own account, and being their own masters. The immigrants are sought eagerly in the hope that some can be secured to till the fields and assist in the dairying business. Wages ranging from $18 to $30 and board and lodging are offered, but the response is not sufficient to satisfy the demand. As an esteemed contemporary points out, The call of the country grows louder every year. It will yet be heard above the hum and roar of the machinery of trade and industry in the cities so clearly that there will be an equalizing of the conditions of employment. There will be a better supply of workers on the farms and less pressure for places to earn a living as clerks in stores and offices. The rural districts of Canada grow steadily more attractive, always more favorable for full and rounded life. The country is coming slowly but surely into its own, for work and for residence.

All attempts to introduce the English skylark into British Columbia have up to this time failed, says the Vancouver World. The birds when turned loose, disappeared and their sweet songs were not heard. A gentleman of Steilacoom, Washington, turned loose a flock of 22 skylarks after keeping them in a room all last winter and is now rewared by hearing their songs pouring down from heaven from a height that makes the singer invisible. It is believed that the acclimatization of this lovely songster has at last been accomplished.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

The Postal Conference.

The conference between Postmaster-General Meyer of the United States and Postmaster-General Lemieux of Canada, with their deputies, which was in progress at Washington, has produced results that favor more our American neighbors and give the United States publishers an additional privilege. Canada submitted certain proposals, but they were rejected, and the conclusion was that publications could be mailed from the United States at the transient second class rate which the individual citizen now enjoys. The American publishers are granted this additional privilege in that they can mail in bulk packages, at rate named, separately addressed newspapers and periodicals intended for delivery to subscribers at one post office. The cost to publishers in the United States will be at least fifty per cent. less than if the postal rate should be applied.

It was hoped by some that out of the postal conference would emerge greater restriction on the introduction of a certain class of American journals into Canada, but all hope in this regard has been shattered. There are coming into Canada today from the United States newspapers that are too highly sensational, that are known as "yellow journals." While these newspapers have no effect on the matured mind, and may provide interesting reading for some, still to the youthful mind they have a rather deteriorating influence. The immature mind often becomes saturated with the outstanding features of such newspapers, with a result none too hopeful.

This is not saying that all American newspapers are of an undesirable type: far from that. But it has reference only to those newspapers that deal in sensationalism and that awake the moral senses. It would be better for the youth of our land if such papers were prohibited from coming into Canada. There are certain American newspapers at present under the ban, and there are others that well could follow.

The postal conference of which so much was expected has failed to produce the results desired, and it rests with the authorities to pursue some other course in protecting the youth of our land.

Tax On Whiskers Is Latest Foolishness.

New York, April 3. — The Times' correspondent at Trenton, N. J., has sent the following special: Assemblyman Cornish of Essex introduced in the House to-day a bill which provides a tax for wearing the hair on the face as follows, to be paid to the tax collector yearly; Ordinary whiskers, $5, side whiskers, $8; Van Dyke beard, $10; mutton chops, $15; "billygoat," $50; red whiskers, 20 per cent. extra. The tax collector is to receive 25 per cent. for collecting the tax. Speaker pro tem. Elvins sent the bill to the Committee on Fish and Game.

The Thaw Case.

(Mail and Empire.)

The appointment of the lunacy commission is, in itself, a bit of tragic humor. The greatest experts in the country have sworn themselves black in the face while the trial was in progress—result, nil. Then they issue a batch of affidavits, with the end that they create a doubt. The efforts, however, are held to exhaust them, and they pass from the scene. It is necessary to call in a couple of lawyers and another doctor to finally decide the question, men who would not be accepted as medical experts in any court in the land. Before this court the trial must be repeated. Lawyers will examine and cross-examine, and object and protest and browbeat, and take exception. Finally the commission will report to the judge, and then comes the final touch of humor. The judge is at liberty to accept the verdict of his own commission or to reject it, as he pleases. So that after all it is the opinion of Judge Fitzgerald that decides the fate of Harry Kendall Thaw. The people themselves, represented by the twelve good men and true on the jury, are left entirely out of the consideration of a case that interests them more than any event of a decade.

THE REAL CAUSE.

The Ancient Scalp-Fever Theory Exploded.

At one time dandruff was attributed to the result of a feverish condition of the scalp, which threw off the dried cuticle in scales.

Professor Unna, Hamburg, Germany noted authority on skin diseases, explodes this theory and says that dandruff is a germ disease.

The germ is really responsible for the dandruff and for so many bald heads. It can be cured if it is gone about in the right way. The right way, of course, and the only way, is to kill the germ.

Newbro's Herpicide does this, and permits the hair to grow luxuriantly, just as nature intended it should. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. Two sizes, 50c and $1.00. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

A Hundred Wives.

MATRIMONIAL BUREAU SCHEME UNEARTHED AT PHILADELPHIA.

New York, April 3.— The Herald has received the following despatch from Philadelphia: Asserting that James Marshall, alias James Ross, had married her at a matrimonial bureau here six weeks ago, Mrs. Marjorie Friel caused Marshall and his daughter to be held on the nominal charge of false pretense today. They are under heavy bail.

The daughter conducted the matrimonial bureau, according to Mrs. Friel, and turned over applicants to her father, who had been advertised as a "well-to-do gentleman anxious to find a wife."

On the witness stand Mrs. Friel said Marshall deserted her two days after the wedding. Evidence is being collected by detectives she put on the case and the United States postal authorities, in an attempt to show that Marshall married most of his applicants and that he now has one hundred wives scattered over the country. Reports from out of town have brought charges of bigamy against Marshall in many places. That Marshall married six persons within the last month is one of the things Mrs. Friel expects to prove.

Mrs. Friel averred that she had been cajoled by Marshall into turning over to him all of her money and valuables just before his disappearance, and expects to prove that this was his method of procedure in scores of other cases.

A Royal Blackguard.

While it is in human nature to sympathize with the stricken king of the Belgians, it must be admitted that he is one of the men whom the world could very well spare. In his youth an inveterate roue, he has continued his vices long after any excuse for them in the matter of youthful passions has passed. He has spent upon his pleasures much of the inheritance of his daughters, and he has set an example for his people in loose living which they can hardly be blamed for following. He has exploited the Congo which was entrusted to his care by the civilized world in order that slavery might be put down and the natives protected from the Arab raiders, and he has shamefully betrayed that trust. He has appropriated the richest part of the territory to his own use, and he has virtually enslaved the whole population of 30,000,000 souls.

When a royal commission, appointed to investigate the complaints of missionaries and others—some of them his own subjects—reported that the stories of horrible atrocities, murder, mutilation and pillage, were true, King Leopold, instead of taking steps to put a stop to the frightful state of affairs, had another commission appointed of members whom he could depend upon to report favorably to him. Then when the United States and the powers of Europe became insistent on reforms, the Belgian king attempted to head them off by interesting a number of American multi-millionaires in the Congo, giving them enormous concessions, and enabling them to plunder the helpless natives in the same way that he had done himself, hoping that these men would have influence enough to prevent the United States from interfering.

It is hard to remember a single benefit that has accrued to civilization through the king of the Belgians. The world might have been better had he never been born.

His Narrow Escape.

(Chicago Tribune.)

Mr. Ferguson, two of whose downtown friends had just dined with him, had taken them into the library for a smoke.

"I must tell you a good one on my wife," he said. "She's been roasting me because I look at the headlines in the papers once in a while to see if anything important is happening in the Thaw trial. Well, the other afternoon, while the girl was away, she put a pan of biscuits in the oven to bake, and while she was waiting she picked up a paper and began to read the stuff herself. She got so interested in it that she let the biscuits——"

At this moment Mrs. Ferguson came into the library for a book.

"And the joke of it was," continued Mr. Ferguson, without a moment's pause, "that they found the cow next morning in a forty acre lot."

"Ha, ha, ha!" roared the guests, laughing till the tears ran down their cheeks—but not at the story.

THE CANADIAN PICTORIAL.

In view of the show of the Automobile Club of Canada, which opens in Montreal on April 6, much space is devoted in this issue to motors and motoring. There is an article on the sport and another on what to wear, and even the jokes revolve around the latest means of locomotion. The illustrations include cars of the years of the past, an auto. at the foot of the Pyramids, the London motor show, well known Montrealers in their cars, an auto. in a farm yard, an auto. driven for hire by a woman in the Paris boulevards, an auto. at an Irish castle, while the cover picture shows a car climbing a hill covered with a deep mantle of snow.

Other subjects are not neglected. Thousands have not yet received a picture of Miss Maxwell, the heroine of the Hochelaga school fire. A full page portrait is given and also a large picture showing the crowds as the funeral procession reached the Cathedral. The Hon. Frank Oliver, Minister of the Interior, figures in the series of Canadians in public life. Sports are dealt with by pictures of sensational jumping on skis, and Eddie Durnan, the Canadian champion oarsman, now in Australia. Royalty figures in several pictures—the King and Queen at the opening of Parliament and the Prince and Princess of Wales at the opening of the new docks at Devonport. A page is devoted to scenes at the funeral of Dr. Oronhyatekha, the greatest Canadian Indian of his day. Seasonable are the pictures, Easter in the churches and the Awakening of the St. Lawrence. In the woman's department, Easter weddings and entertainments, spring millinery, the latest modes, the invalid cookery are dealt with from a Canadian woman's point of view. There are the usual patterns, news features, jokes, etc.

Learn Dressmaking.

IN TWO WEEKS.

We teach you everything from the plainest shirt waist to the most elaborate toilette that can be found in the fashion books. We show you how to put together not only the lining but all the outer goods in coats, skirts waists, wrappers, sleeves, children's dresses, collars, etc. Why spend months at a shop where you do nothing but hem, overcast, sew on hooks and eyes, and then after you have served your time there, what do you know about cutting? Absolutely nothing! For you will know no more how to cut out a dress at the end of a year than you did the first day you went there; so why spend your time there; you can come and try for a week and see for yourself what it's like, and as there is nothing to be paid in advance, you certainly would not lose anything by trying.

We have taught over 2,000 in this way within the past six years, and all recommend it very highly; we teach you how to use a chart the first day you are with us; also guarantee that the waists made by this chart will not draw nor pull out of place when raising arm.

Charge for full course is only $10, to be paid when course is completed, if satisfied, including one of the most perfect fitting systems in use, which we give free.

We will teach at Belleville from April 8th to April 20th. Hours for day class from 8.30 to 5. All wishing to learn or for full particulars, be sure to see us at the KYLE HOUSE, on Saturday, April 6th, between 10 and 5 o'clock. An evening class will also be taught; in this class we teach shirt waists, sleeves and dressing sacques only. Terms $4 and hours from 7 to 9. Remember there is no pay in advance, you can all come and try.

A Pretty Wedding In Tyendinaga.

A very pretty wedding occurred on March 27th, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Phillips, 3rd concession of Tyendinaga, when their daughter, Ida, was united in marriage to Mr. Albert Latta, of Thurlow. At nine o'clock a.m., while Miss Effie Esmond played the wedding march, the bride entered the parlor, escorted by her father, after which the Rev. S. J. Rourke performed the impressive marriage ceremony. After congratulations all sat down to a sumptuous wedding breakfast. The bride was attended by Miss Emma Latta, sister of the groom, while Mr. Percy Mott, of Sidney, did the duties of best man. The bride was becomingly attired in cream woolbertize, trimmed with lace, and carried a bouquet of white carnations, the bridesmaid wearing a similar dress and carried pink carnations. The bride and groom, together with the waiters, started for the city by carriage, amid a shower of rice, where the bride and groom took the noon train for New York, Syracuse, Weedsport and other eastern points. The bride and groom are a very popular young couple, as was evinced by the beautiful presents they received. Mr. and Mrs. Latta, on their return, will make their home in Thurlow.

Address & Presentation.

On Wednesday afternoon the members of the Young Ladies' Bible Class of Bethel Sunday School, Rawdon, with a number of the officers and teachers of the Sabbath School, gathered at the school house and presented their teacher, Miss Annie R. McKenna, who is leaving, with the following token of their affection and esteem:

Sine, Ont., March 27, 1907.

Dear Miss McKenna, — Knowing that you are about to bid adieu to the section you have served so long, we, your Bible Class and friends, feel that we cannot permit you to go from our midst without showing in some degree our appreciation of the time and energy you spent in directing our study of the Bible.

You came to our midst a stranger, bent upon performing your duties as public school teacher. You were not willing to alone follow the calling of the noblest of professions. You looked for something even better. You saw a chance to assist in the noblest of all noble works and, irrespective of creeds, doctrines and denominations, you labored untiringly for the cause of Him who created all and ruleth all. It was a labor of love. The result of your efforts no man can judge, but your Christ-like spirit and example must undoubtedly elevate and purify the hearts of your pupils and friends.

Sorry, indeed, are we to know that your weakened physical condition is forcing you to leave us and for a time at least to abandon the calling you so ably fill. We hope and pray that our dear Father will find it his pleasure to soon restore you to health.

We ask you to accept this ring and these vases as a token of our affection. May the vases contain emblems of the love which God is surrounding us, and the three topaz, bound by a band of gold, remind you of the bond of affection that binds our hearts together after three years you have spent with us.

Rest assured that in our hearts you claim the warmest affection, and that the return of your strength and your success will always be a source of joy for us. May the golden band of friendship never be broken until we go to form a band around the "diamond jewel" of our hearts, and our sorrows are no more.

Signed on behalf of Bethel Sabbath School

MRS. J. G. GREEN,
BERTHA GREEN.

Miss McKenna, who was taken completely by surprise, in a few words thanked the donors for their kindness to her on each and every occasion.

HUMOR

THEY MEANT WELL.

But He Was Not at All Offended at What Was Told Him.

"Say, old man, I don't want to butt in or poke my nose into other people's affairs or anything like that, but there's something I feel it my duty to tell you. I hope you'll not be offended at what I say, for I assure you that I speak as a friend. You are a very busy man, and you find it necessary to be out of town a good deal, so, of course, you can't be blamed for not seeing some things that other people have noticed, and, as I said before, I hope you won't think I am unduly meddlesome or"—

"For heaven's sake, what is it? Speak out."

"Well, the truth is that—now, I want you to fully understand that I am urged only by the purest motives to say this—the truth is that something has been going on for several weeks past that has worried your friends a good deal and that they think you ought to know. I can understand why you haven't noticed it yourself, and if I were in your place and any one came to me and said what I am about to say to you I'd be likely to get excited and perhaps cause trouble, but I hope you'll be calm and remember that it is only the feeling of friendship I have for you that urges me to"—

"Say, if you don't speak out I'll—I'll"—

"Now, don't get excited. That's just what I've been trying to keep you from doing. To come out plainly, old man, your wife has been seen in company with young Woodson a good deal lately. He's been taking her to matinees, to lunches and to"—

"Oh, ha, ha, ha! Is that all? He's half crazy about our daughter and thinks it is necessary to get solid with her mother in order to become a member of the family."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Candidate's Device.

A candidate for a provincial town council could neither compose a speech nor deliver one if composed for him, but he was a shrewd fellow and got rid of his difficulties, the local newspaper states, in an ingenious way. He bought a ready made speech for 2s. 6d. and then hired a gang of men to interrupt his meeting. As soon as the reading of the speech began the hired "taxpayers" became unruly. The speaker did not persist in the attempt to deliver the speech. He handed the manuscript to a friendly reporter, and the speech of Mr. —— at such and such a meeting was duly placed before the electorate.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Bright Side.

"Oh, this poverty!" wept the beautiful wife when her shifty eyed husband came home. "The gas and electric companies have shut off their service because you have not paid their bills."

"Well, we can use candles," consoled the husband.

"And the telephone company has disconnected our instrument because we owe it two months' rental."

"So much the better. If any one tries to ring us up to spend the evening with us, they will think we are not at home."—Judge.

View Masculine.

"My sympathy," remarked Mrs. Shopperton, who had been reading a heavy magazine article, "is with the downtrodden masses."

"Mine isn't," growled her husband.

"Why not?" queried the alleged better half of the matrimonial outfit.

"Because," he answered, "they ought to know better than to all try to reach the bargain counter at once."—Bohemian Magazine.

Horrible Suspicion.

Marjorie—Well, and what does Aunt Jane think of her photo?

Reggie—Eh? Oh, she's jolly wild about it.

Marjorie—Why? Doesn't she think it's like her?

Reggie—Well, I think she's afraid it is.—Ally Sloper.

PLAY THE GAME.

(Henry Newbolt.)

There's a breathless hush in the close to-night—
Ten to make and the match to win
A bumping pitch and a blinding light,
An hour to play and the last man in,
And it is not for the sake of a ribboned coat
Or the selfish hope of a season's fame,
But his captain's hand on his shoulder smote—
"Play up! play up! and play the game!"

The sand of the desert is sodden red—
Red with the wreck of the square that broke—
The gatling's jammed and the colonel dead,
And the regiment blind with dust and smoke,
The River of Death has brimmed its banks,
And England's far, and Honor a name;
But the voice of a schoolboy rallies the ranks:
"Play up! play up! and play the game!"

This is the word that year by year,
While in her place the school is set;
Every one of her sons must hear,
And none that hears it dare forget.
This they all with a joyful mind,
Bear through life like a torch in flame,
And falling fling to the host behind,
"Play up! play up! and play the game!"

An examination of 1,500 children recently made in the west shows that thunderstorms are by far the worst terror of childhood. Afterward, in the order set down, come snakes, strangers, darkness, fire, death, disease, wild animals, policemen, water, insects and ghosts. In the fear of rats and mice girls exceed boys in the ratio of 75 to 16. In boys fear begins to diminish after the fifteenth year, in girls after the eighteenth.

Motive power is just now in a period of critical transition. Reciprocating engines are threatened by turbines, and if favoring facts fit in with welcoming theories, turbines are also threatened by gas engines that double the power and quadruple the radius of effort by halving the weights and utilizing expensive and necessary construction spaces as fuel tanks. In warships the promised absence of funnels will further multiply areas of all-around gun fire.

TO REMOVE BASTINGS.

Threads Should Be Clipped at Intervals of Three Inches.

The proper removal of bastings from the completed garment is as necessary as the proper putting in. Many a dress has been ruined by a hasty, ill calculated pull. Did you ever watch a novice catch the end of a thread and then, after pulling up the seam of a skirt in a hard bunch, bring all her strength to bear to break the thread or perhaps even to bite it off? And did you ever see the seam of the skirt afterward?

If you have, you probably know that the pristine beauty of the material was gone forever. If it was silk or lawn there were holes in it all up the seam, possibly pulled places part way across the breadths. If the goods was so stout as to defy such cruel treatment, then it was probably wrinkled so badly that pressing would never bring the defect out entirely.

Basting threads should be clipped at intervals of three inches, and each short length should be removed without wrinkling the goods in any way. Indeed there will be no need, for, clipped in this way, the thread will yield to the slightest pull. If any one thread seems obstinate, do not jerk. There is probably a slight knot somewhere and another clipping will remedy the evil. An ivory or bone stiletto is a most convenient thing to have in one's work basket, especially when bastings are to be removed.

CARE OF BATHROOM.

Sanitary Precautions That Insure Good Health to the Family.

Many women think that if the bathroom is well swept and tidied up every day their whole duty to that department is done, but of all the rooms in the house this one requires the most lynx eyed care. The plumbing should be most rigorously looked after, the taps should be inspected and thoroughly flushed each day at least once, by the mother herself.

In the autumn, when fever and such maladies are prevalent, it is customary to lay the evil to the fall weather or to some form of malaria contracted while away in the country for a vacation. In reality it is mainly because the waste pipes have not been flushed all summer and are full of deleterious gases.

Before again taking up residence in a house which has been closed for a greater or less period every faucet should be opened and the water allowed to run freely for not less than an hour. This is particularly true of the bathroom, though the kitchen should have its share of care as well. After this has been done ammonia should be poured down and allowed to remain in the traps for some time.

Ungraceful Habits.

Many a woman, although plain of face, commands admiration on account of her graceful carriage and well poised figure. But women are so apt to neglect this fact that they pass over the importance of bodily poise in cultivating their facial beauty. Eight out of ten women have a disjointed way of walking. The hips are allowed to sag, making the abdomen prominent. The shoulders droop, and the head is poked forward instead of being held erect. Many women have a habit of coming down heavily on the heels, jarring the whole body and making the hips and shoulders move in an ungainly way, says an exchange. Another bad habit is that of turning one foot in, and sometimes both feet, giving the body a crablike motion that is anything but graceful. It is a mistaken idea that one's walk is like one's features, unchangeable. On the contrary, any woman can have an erect, well posed, graceful figure if she be willing to take the time and trouble to correct bad habits.

The Origin of "Etiquette."

The French word etiquette really means a "label" or "ticket." How, then, comes it to denote "conventional forms of ceremony," which is the definition given in Nuttall's dictionary?

It is said that a certain Scottish gardener, in charge of Louis XIV.'s garden at Versailles, was very much put out because the courtiers walked over his beds. To keep off these trespassers he placed labels or tickets—etiquettes—at various spots, with instructions as to the proper path. At first the haughty courtiers did not deign to notice these placards, but a hint from high quarters that their walks in future must be within the etiquettes compelled their obedience.

Thus, according to the story, originated our present use of the word "etiquette."

A New Corset Cover.

A pretty little fancy with the girls is the pompadour ribbon corset cover found among the lingerie and which is worn under sheer blouses.

It is fashioned of two strips of wide ribbon sewed together lengthwise and cut in three pieces—two for the fronts and one for the back—and joined under the arms with fagoting.

The shoulder straps are made of lace insertion, beading and narrow edging. The waist is finished with batiste beading threaded with ribbon.

White silk petticoats with flowered silk flounces are sold along with these gay covers and are intended for use with lingerie dresses, so many of which are being pressed into service for evening wear.

How to Make Your Own Linoleum.

Tack tightly to your kitchen floor an old carpet. Rag carpet is the best. Spread thickly over this a thick paste of flour and water. When dry add another thick layer. Then paint in some dark color. This can be scrubbed and will wear a lifetime.

THE WORD PARLOR GOES.

Living Room Takes the Place of Old Time Parlor.

"If I had my way," remarked the motherly looking woman, with conviction, "I should eliminate the word 'parlor' from the dictionary. Why, I know ever so many good women, well intentioned, hardworking and self sacrificing, who run this parlor idea into the ground and are so uncomfortable to live with that their children and husbands go out to spend the evenings to get away from the stiffness and discomfort of their own homes.

"I have a family in mind right now who only heat their parlor on Sundays. The furniture is too good for everyday use. The daughter can't practice on the piano because the glorious sunshine would fade the carpet, even supposing she wouldn't take her death of cold. Why, if they have evening callers, they have to take them into the dining room until the parlor's heated.

"I have another friend with a genius for creating the true home spirit. Her big front room is warm and comfortable all the time. A large table in the center, around which the family sit, is provided with a drop light, soft and brilliant. Magazines in abundance are ready to the hand, and a soft couch with innumerable pillows—not very ornamental, but, oh, so comfortable—occupies a cozy corner. Everything is gracious and homelike, and the faces are all so happy and contented.

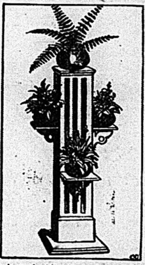
"The average household in moderate circumstances is sufficiently limited for room without reserving the largest and airiest apartment for company use.

"Nothing too good for the family is my motto," finished the comfortable looking woman.

FOR THE HALL.

A Flower Stand and How It Is Easily Constructed.

A flower pedestal suitable for a hall or spacious landing on a stairway is illustrated. It should be about four and a half feet high and the four uprights made from good pine one inch and a half square. The base must be made as heavy and solid as possible, and can best be built up of inch boards, with the edges neatly beveled to form a molding. It should be eighteen inches square, and the four uprights must be firmly screwed through from underneath and further strengthened by four pieces of inch material six inches wide, as shown in the illustration. The shelves, top and brackets are also of inch wood. After it has been sandpapered smooth a suitable finish would be to paint it ivory white, with an eggshell finish. Two or three coats must be given, and the sandpaper should be again used before the final coat. Five glazed earthenware pots will be required of a pale peacock blue color, and thick felt mats of the same color should be placed on the shelves for them to stand on. The result will be a most pleasing color scheme, the ivory white and pale blue well setting off the delicate green foliage of ferns and perhaps some dainty pale blossoms.



Place For Post Cards.

After every ardent collector of post cards has filled a few albums she begins to yearn for another mode of classifying and arranging her still growing fad. And, knowing this, a clever person has evolved the charming idea of utilizing these decorative cards in house decorating purposes with amazingly artistic results.

One has a chance for great ingenuity and originality in the making of screens, panels or boxes—small ones for gloves and handkerchiefs and large ones for one's delicate blouses, pretty corner cupboards, mirror frames, friezes for the nursery, with appropriate cards, or for one's own dainty bedroom with quite another sort of cards, or still another kind for a billiard room or a man's small library.

Hair on the Arms.

By using depilatories for removing a growth of soft hairs from the arms you will create for yourself a fine output of bristles. It is absolutely impossible for any external application to actually kill a hair growth, for the hair creating papilla is often a fourth of an inch below the surface of the skin, and this papilla goes on creating a hair until the papilla itself is destroyed.

She was about to speak, but checked herself.

"And I will tell you why. First because I love you and I love no one else. You do not believe it. You ask for deeds, not words. In the future you shall have them. And second, because you, Denise, love me, yes, love me."

"Have done, have done with this mockery!" she cried.

"Tell me," was his answer, "on your word of honor, that it is not so, tell me that you do not love me and never will, tell me that you love another and on my word as a gentleman I will never speak of love to you again."

Dead silence. Andre waited quietly.

"I refuse," she said, slowly, picking the words, "to be questioned in this manner. But as you insist, I repeat—I do not love you."

Andre bowed. "One word more, Denise, if you please," he said, "one word and I leave your presence for ever."

She drew herself up. "Yes," she said, "leave me for ever." But for all that she, as he, seemed spellbound to the spot.

Andre deliberately drew from his pocket the letter that she had thrown in his teeth and faced her. "Thank you," he said, very calmly. "Now that I know you mean what you said, I, too, know what I must do." He walked away.

"Give me that letter," she said with a swift flash of command. "It belongs to me."

"Pardon," he answered, quietly, "yesterday the Comte des Forges was killed by a friend of his whose honor he had betrayed. The letter belongs to the lady to whom it was written, the lady who will be the Vicomtesse de Nerac."

A faint cry escaped from Denise's lips. For the moment she leaned faint against the chimney-piece, white and sick.

Andre looked at her, but he made no effort to offer her either sympathy or help. Then he walked back, Denise watching him, and flung the letter into the fire. Denise started, but she said nothing, though her great grey eyes were eloquent with half a dozen questions.

"The letter has served its purpose," Andre said. "Adieu, Marquise!"

"What does this—this trickery mean?" she demanded, hotly.

"You must forgive one who loves you," was the calm reply, "for love laughs at tricks. The Comte des Forges is alive and well: he has a wound in his shoulder which is only a scratch, for the poor Comte is always believing that some one is betraying his honor and Madame the Comtesse has a fickle heart. Yesterday I was his second, so I know."

"Then—then—" she cried and stopped.

Andre bowed most courteously. "You refused to believe me, Mademoiselle: I returned the compliment and refused to believe you—and I proved it by a lover's trick, if you choose to call it such. That is all, but it is enough."

"Ah!" She crumpled up the fan in speechless indignation.

"No, Denise," he said softly. "I shall not trouble you now or soon, but—" he had caught her hand—"you shall yet be mine, I swear it. You think you do not love me, but you shall be convinced—you shall."

He kissed her fingers with a tender reverence. "Adieu, Marquise! I go to my duty and revenge," he said, and he left her there under the spell of his feet, and the flames of fire pointing to the motto "Dieu Le Vengeur!"

CHAPTER V.

Andre rode at a walking pace down the slope to the village, for he wanted to think. He had always prided himself on his knowledge of women; he had imagined he knew Denise as well as himself. She was of his class, lovely, high-spirited, proud, patriotic, and best of all a true woman. Hence it was a sore and surprising blow to his pride to discover that she should reject his love because he had lived the life of his and her class. He had gone to the chateau to confess everything, to swear that from this day onwards no other woman, be she beautiful as the dawn, as enchanting as Circe, could ever occupy five minutes of his thoughts. And he meant it. Those others, the shattered idols of a vanished past, had simply satisfied vanity, ambition, a physical craving. But Denise he really loved. She inspired a devotion, a passion which gripped and satisfied body, soul, and spirit; she was that without which life seemed unmeaning, empty, poor, despicable. But why could not she see this—the difference between a fleeting desire and the sincere homage of manhood to an ideal, between the gallant and the lover? What more had a wife a right to expect than the love of a husband, brave, loyal, faithful? It was unreasonable, for men were men and women were women. Yet here was a woman who did.

But he would—must—win her. That was the adamantine resolution in his breast, all the stronger because she had scorned and defied him. Yet he would win her in his way, not hers. Yes, he would conquer her against herself. For him life now meant simply Denise—the heart and the soul and the spirit of Denise—the conquest of a woman's will. The hot pulses of health and strength, of manhood, his noble blood and ambition throbbed responsive to the resolution. He thanked God that he was young and a soldier, that there was war and a prize to be won. Yet he also felt that this love meant something new, that it had transformed him into something that he had never dreamed of as possible. And victory would complete the change. So as he rode the fierce thoughts tumbled over each other in a foam of passion, in the sublime intoxication of a vision of a new heaven and a new earth—from which he was rudely awakened.

He had halted for the moment at the door of the village inn. In the dingy parlor sat the Chevalier, one leg thrown over the table, a beaker in his hand resting on his thigh, while his other hand was stroking the chin of the waiting wench, a strapping, tawdry slut.

Andre kicked the door open. "Am I disturbing you?" he said, pitching his hat off as if the parlor were his own.

"Not in the least," the Chevalier replied without stirring, though the girl began to giggle with an affectation of alarmed modesty. "My wine is just done"; he drained off the glass. "I will leave Toinette to you, Vicomte, for," he put on his hat, "it is time I returned to the chateau."

This studied insolence was exactly what Andre required. "I thank you," he said, freezingly "but before I take your place, you and I, Monsieur le Chevalier, will have a word first."

"As you please, my dear Vicomte," said the young man, swinging comfortably on to the table and peering at him from under his saucy plumes. "You will have much to say, I doubt not, for you must have said so little at the chateau. Run away, my child," he added to the wench, who was now staring at them both with genuine alarm in her coarse eyes, "run away."

Andre closed the door. "You will not return to the chateau," he said quietly.

"My dear Vicomte, you suffer from the strangest hallucinations, stupid phantoms of the mind, if you——"

"Perhaps," was the cold reply, "but the point of a sword is a reality which exercises any and every phantom."

The Chevalier laughed softly.

"Yes," Andre continued, "I say it with infinite regret, because you are young, you will not return to the chateau, for I am going to kill you, unless——"

"Unless?" The Chevalier slowly swung off the table.

"Unless you will give me your word of honor now that you will leave France to-morrow and never return."

The young man reflectively put back one of his dainty love curls. "Ah, my dear Vicomte," he answered, "I say it too with infinite regret, but that I cannot promise. So you must kill me I fear. Alas!" he added with dilatory derision, "alas! what have I done?"

"Very good"—Andre fastened his cloak—"in three days we will meet in Paris."

"In Paris? Why not kill me here?"

"Here?" Andre stared at him in astonishment.

"Here and at once." He walked to the door. "Two torches," he called, "two torches."

When he had lit them the Chevalier marched out. "This way," he said politely; "permit me to show you, with infinite regret, where you can kill me."

Half expecting a trick or foul play Andre followed him cautiously until he stopped in a deserted stable yard, paved and clean, and completely shut in by high walls. The young man gravely placed one torch in a ring on the north wall and the other on the wall opposite.

"That," he said, in the pleasantest manner possible, "will make the lights fair. You"—he pointed to the west—"will stand there, or here, if you prefer, to the east. You will agree, doubtless, that to a man who is to be killed it is a trifle where he stands."

The torches flared smokily in the April dusk. He was mad, this boyish fool, stark, raving mad. But how prettily and elegantly he played the part.

"See," the Chevalier said lightly, "there is no one to interrupt—the murder. Toinette knows neither my name nor yours; she will hold her tongue for money and in half an hour you will be gone—and I"—he shrugged his shoulders—"well, it is clean lying here, cleaner, anyway, than under the grass in that dirty churchyard."

"You mean it?" Andre asked slowly.

The Chevalier took off his saucy hat and fine coat, hung them upon one of the rusty rings in the wall, and turned back his lace ruffles. A flash—his sword had cut a rainbow through the dusk across the yellow flare of the torches. "I am at your service, Vicomte," he said with a low bow. "And I shall return to the chateau when and how I please, and I shall be welcome, eh?"

"By God!" Andre ripped out. "By God! I will kill you."

He too had flung off his coat and cloak and took the position by the east wall. A strange duel this, assuredly not the first in which the Vicomte de Nerac had fought for a woman's sake, but the strangest, maddest that man's wit or a boy's folly could have devised. Andre was as cold as ice now, and he calmly surveyed his opponent as he tried the steel of his blade. How young and supple and insolently gay the beardless popinjay was; but he had the fencer's figure, and the handling of his weapon revealed to the trained eye that this would be no affair of six passes and a coup de maitre. Yet never did Andre feel so calmly confident of his own famed skill and rich experience. No, he would not kill him, but he would teach him a lesson that he would not forget.

For a brief minute both scanned the ground carefully, testing it with their feet, and marking the falling of the lights from those smoking torches, the flickering of the shadows in the raw chill of eve. All around was deathly still. Not so much as the cluck of a hen to break the misty silence.

"On guard!"

The Chevalier was about eight paces off. He now came slowly forward, eagerly watching for the right moment to engage. A swift movement as of a strong spring unbound—a flash—and steel clashed on steel. Yes, the young man could fence. The true swordsman's wrist could be felt in his blade, the swordsman's eye in his point, and his passes came with the ease of that mastery of style, swiftness, and precision that the fencer can feel but not describe. For a couple of minutes both played with the greatest caution, for they were both in the deadliest earnest. True, this was idle flummery at present; each had still to know the ground, to learn the secrets of those cruelly baffling lights, to get the measure of the other's powers. A false step, a misjudged lunge, a gust of wind, a foolish contempt might mean death. And for one, at least, the issue was Denise.

So Andre, who had always relied on his fire and quickness to disconcert, flurry, and tempt, kept himself sternly in hand, offering no openings and disregarding all. The moment would come presently, the divine moment, and then!

They were both shifting ground slowly, and in their caution they gradually edged and wheeled until the Chevalier almost stood where Andre had started.

"Bah!" the young man cried, "this is tedious," and he suddenly changed his tactics. He was now attacking with a fiery swiftness which made Andre's blood warm, and stirred his admiration, but he noted with joy how reckless his opponent was growing. Twice the lad only saved himself by the most dexterous reversing of his lunges.

"Fool!" Andre muttered to himself, "that is not the game to play with me; in three minutes he will be mine," and he, too, began to press his attack. Ah! —ah!—only by the swiftest convolutions of that supple body had the Chevalier saved himself. Andre began to nerve himself for a final assault. Should he give him the point in his sword arm—his shoulder, or his lungs? And then the torch light flared right into his face.

In a second he saw what it all meant. By those superb reversed lunges he had been lured on till he had been manoeuvred into a place where both torches fell in his eyes and that young devil had the lights behind him. He—he, Andre de Nerac, had been outplayed by this beardless youth! And now he was in a corner of this damned courtyard with the cursed flicker from the walls making lightning on the crossed steel. "Diable!" he growled, "you would!" and he flung himself on his opponent in the madness of despair and wrath. It was now almost a melee corps a corps, but the Chevalier would not give way. He had penned Andre to the place he desired and he meant to keep him there.

"Hold! Je touche!" he cried.

How had it happened? One of the torches had gone out in a puff of air. Andre's sword was on the stones and the Chevalier had his foot on it. By an infernal Italian trick he had dropped on one knee, the lunge that should have gone through his heart had passed over his head and by some superhuman secret he had twisted the weapon from his opponent's grasp. Yes, Andre had lost Denise and death was upon him.

With a quick gesture the Chevalier pitched the sword over the wall and stood sword in hand facing the defenceless Andre. The breeze stirred his dainty love locks.

"Monsieur le Vicomte," he said cheerfully, "will perhaps permit me now to return to the chateau. I have had my lesson." Andre clenched his fists sullenly. "Tionette," the young man called, dropping his point, "Toinette, bring another torch, and assist Monsieur le Vicomte with his coat. You are a good wench, Toinette, and a discreet, is it not so?"

"Curse your Italian tricks," Andre growled, "curse you and your Italian tricks."

"Yes, it was a trick, learned in Italy from a great master in the art. But all is fair in war—and in love! I did not wish to be killed and you are too good a swordsman for any one to beat in half an hour, and that is all I had. Come, Vicomte, we have had our little encounter. Can we not be friends?" He offered his hand.

Andre stared sulkily, yet feeling somewhat ashamed.

"I am not going to the chateau," the Chevalier added quietly. "I too, am going to the war with my master and yours, the King. If it will satisfy you, I will promise not to speak to Mademoiselle the Marquise de Beau Sejour until we both return."

"You can do as you please with regard to Mademoiselle la Marquise," Andre said sharply.

"And will you do me a favor?" the young man pleaded. "I beg you that for the future you will not speak of our meeting here to any one."

"Why?"

"Simply because I regret now that I prevented myself from being killed by a low trick. Life to the young is sweet —it is my sole excuse to a better swordsman than myself."

"Very well," Andre answered, touched to the quick by the faultless delicacy with which the compliment was paid.

"I thank you. Perhaps now you will give me your hand?"

"With the greatest pleasure."

The Chevalier had for the moment stormed his heart with the same superb grace that he had robbed him of his sword.

"Adieu!"

And then in the sorest dudgeon Andre strode out in search of his sword. To his surprise the wall of the court where they had fought backed on to the churchyard, and a few minutes' groping revealed his sword by the strangest accident lying in the damp, matted grass that sprawled over the tombstone of the little Marquise Marie. Yes, at that bitter moment he could have shed tears of shame as he recalled the defeat and the humiliation inflicted on him by that beardless boy, on him, a Capitaine-Lieutenant of the Chevau-legers de la Garde, on him who had never been vanquished yet. And he had sworn to win Denise! Why was he not lying under the sod, forgotten and dead to the pain of the world, like little Marie?

A figure was creeping past him in the dark—a woman.

"Who is that?" he cried sharply, plucking at her hood.

"Monseigneur, it is me—me, Monseigneur."

"Yvonne!" He let the hood go as if he had been stabbed.

"But yes, Monseigneur, Yvonne of the Spotted Cow." She kissed his hand, humbly.

To be continued.

One Old Maid

By LEE MITCHELL.

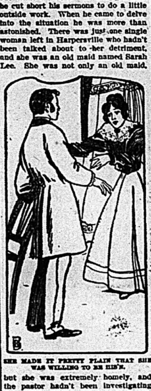
Copyright, 1907, by P. C. Eastment.

During a certain period, lasting about three years, if any one had asked what was the chief feature of the village of Harpersville he would have been told it was gossip and scandal. It had come to such a point at last that hardly any two families were on speaking terms, and a number of people had sold out and moved away in disgust.

The social state of affairs could not have been much worse when the Rev. Henry Bates received a call to fill the pulpit of one of the two churches. He was a man of thirty and single, and he promised to be popular. It wasn't a month, however, before there were stories floating around to his detriment. He had come from the west, and it was said that his congregation had been pleased to get rid of him, and there were other sly statements and innuendoes calculated to make his position uncomfortable.

There is more or less gossip in every village in the land, but as to who starts it is always one of those things that can't be found out. Mrs. White hears it from Mrs. Black, and Mrs. Black from Mrs. Green, and Mrs. Green from Mrs. Brown, and so it goes, and the fountainhead is seldom located.

When the Rev. Bates came to find out what a hotbed he had got into he cut short his sermons to do a little outside work. When he came to delve into the situation he was more than astonished. There was just one single woman left in Harpersville who hadn't been talked about to her detriment, and she was an old maid named Sarah Lee. She was not only an old maid, but she was extremely homely, and the pastor hadn't been investigating long before he thought he had located the fountainhead. In another week he was sure of it.



SHE MADE IT PRETTY PLAIN THAT SHE WAS WILLING TO BE HIS'N.

The old maid was not a church member, but the pastor called on her just the same and threw out broad hints that the gossip and the scandalizer would have hard work to squeeze into the better land when the time came. Sarah agreed with him and two days later cooked up another canard.

She was in command of the situation up to a certain point. She was well to do, and she had wealthy relatives to stand by her. The minister saw that he must go slow and bide his time. There are clergymen who study the subject of religion alone. There are others who study human nature as well. The Rev. Bates was one of the latter.

"An old maid," he reasoned, "is a young woman who has been overlooked in the scramble or got left in the shuffle. This fact has soured her temper and made her envious and jealous. The only way she can get even is to use her tongue. She is down on all her sex and on the married men of the other. The tongue of one old maid can stir up more mischief than five ministers can smooth over."

"What is the remedy for a tattling, gossiping, slandering old maid? Remove the cause and the disease is cured. In other words, if she can be married off the spirit of spite will be laid and she will have no reason to interfere with the peace of mind of others."

The line of reasoning was up to date, and the philosophy weighed full sixteen ounces to the pound. One may reason a thing to a logical conclusion, however, and yet find that only one difficulty has been removed. The Rev. Bates was pitted against Sarah Lee. It was Lee versus Bates. He realized that he would have to go at the end of a year or Sarah Lee would have to be provided with a husband. Not only was the instinct of self preservation appealed to, but if the question had been submitted to any lay mind the answer would have been that one minister was worth ten times as much to any community as an old maid. The Rev. Bates did not turn conspirator. It takes two to conspire, and he did not take any one into his counsel.

His very first move almost brought about his downfall. He made a second call on Miss Lee, and during that call he brought the conversation around to the subject of matrimony. It was the duty of men and women to marry. The world would be a savage desert without homes. Race suicide would end in a state of barbarism. For good reasons of her own, he supposed, she had neglected this great duty, but he hoped and trusted that those reasons would soon be removed. He himself was still single, but he was happy to state—

Before he could make his statement the old maid was in his arms, or would have been if he had not quickly increased the distance between them. She made it pretty plain that she was willing to be his'n and would do her best to make life happy for him. When he closed the conversation by saying that he was engaged to a lady in the west he was almost turned out of doors, and Miss Lee started three or four new stories about him.

The pastor felt sure that he had struck the keynote, however, and a week or two later he was writing a letter to an acquaintance in his former parish. The man he wrote to was not a church member. He was an old bachelor who paid pew rent, contributed to the heathen, attended Sunday school picnics and let it go at that. The pastor had once talked with him on the subject of matrimony and had been given to understand that there had been no marriage because the right woman had not been found.

"Referring to a subject once discussed between us," wrote the Rev. Bates, "let me say that there is a young woman resident here who seems to have many of the qualifications to fit her for wifehood—that is, she has the best of health, is worth several thousand dollars, and she has assured me that she would do her best to make a husband happy. Were you to pay me a visit and meet her she might prove to be the one you long have sought. Did you not know my radical ideas on the subject of race suicide I should not have mentioned this matter to you. While I mentioned that the lady had money, it was only incidentally, and that fact will have no undue influence, I trust."

Ten days later James Perkins appeared in Harpersville as an old acquaintance and the guest of the clergyman. The Rev. Bates did not boast of being a hustler, but within twenty-four hours he had introduced his guest to Miss Lee. Mr. Perkins had no reputation as a hustler, but within forty-eight hours he was speaking words of flattery that made the old maid smile like a June day. She couldn't forego what she had come to believe was her privilege, however. She told Mrs. Jackson, and Mrs. Jackson told Mrs. Taylor, and Mrs. Taylor told Mrs. Beebe and the rest of the town that she believed Mr. Perkins had had two wives and killed them both by smothering them with a pillow. The story reached the parsonage and the ears of the guest within a day, and the guest was wroth, but the good pastor sat down with him and argued.

"James, the gossip of women is as the breeze that bloweth. Give it no heed. I incidentally learned today that the exact amount of wealth possessed by Miss Lee is about $12,000, and all in bonds drawing fair interest. I am also assured that she is a great worker in her own house, has no extravagant habits and that she would have no objection to a home in the great and boundless west. Perhaps I should not have mentioned the exact sum of money, but I know you will receive it as only incidental, James—only incidental. If there is a marriage I hope and trust it may be founded on love alone. I shall be busy with my sermon tonight, and should you desire to call on Miss Lee I shall not miss you for a couple of hours."

There was no hustling on the part of the Rev. Bates or James Perkins, but two weeks after his arrival in Harpersville Mr. Perkins entered the minister's study one evening with a bland smile and an extended hand and said:

"My dear old friend, congratulate me. I am the happiest man in the state."

"Has—has something happened?"

"Something has. Sarah has promised to be mine, and she has set the marriage day for only six weeks ahead. How can I ever thank you for bringing us together?"

Something like a smile appeared at the corners of the pastor's mouth; but, of course, he let it spread no further. When he found that the happy couple were to go west to live he tendered his hearty congratulations and likewise offered up his thanks mentally. The marriage came off, the old maid became a wife, and Harpersville knew her no more. Then the calm that settled down was indeed blessed—no more gossip, no slander, no lying; in place of them, peace, harmony and contentment. And if the conscience of the Rev. Bates ever pricked him he had but to say to himself:

"Isn't it better to marry off one old maid than to have a thousand people made unhappy?"

The Volley Over the Grave.

The firing of a volley by soldiers over the grave of a dead comrade is a survival of a very ancient custom. In days gone by, when superstition was practically universal, it was generally believed that making a noise kept away evil spirits, and the passing bell came into vogue for that reason. When firearms were invented volley firing was substituted for the passing bell, the belief being that the sound of battle would be more efficacious in the case of a soldier.

FOUGHT FOR HIS LIFE

OFFICER'S DESPERATE STRUGGLE WITH A LEOPARD IN INDIA.

Was Returning From a Day's Hunt, When the Infuriated Beast Attacked His Wife—Could Not Shoot For Fear of Killing Her—Grapples With the Animal and Finally Overcomes It Without Aid.

The story of an officer's desperate encounter with an infuriated beast comes from Lucknow. Lieut.-Col. Hutchinson, of the Second Ghurkas, had a thrilling fight with a leopard, which attacked his wife while on a shooting trip near Dehra Dun.

They were returning after a day's shooting, and the beaters had gone on some distance ahead. Mrs. Hutchinson was walking about ten yards in front of her husband. She deviated slightly from the path, and surprised a young leopard, which immediately attacked her.

Col. Hutchinson instantly raised his rifle to shoot the beast, but dared not fire for fear of wounding his wife.

Then, seeing that the only way to save her life was to drag the leopard off, he dropped his rifle and attacked the beast with his hands.

A Desperate Fight.

The leopard first attempted to seize his arm, but missed, and Col. Hutchinson was able to keep it at bay while his wife rose and ran to call the beaters. Meanwhile, the animal sprang again on Col. Hutchinson, and a desperate fight between the man and the beast followed.

Col. Hutchinson eluded its spring with marvelous agility. He made several attempts to regain his rifle, but the leopard was on him before he could pick it up. Then he thought of his revolver, and was placing his hand on his hip to draw it, when the leopard sprang on him again, and seized his right arm. Desperate as the position was, Col. Hutchinson did not give in, and, although he was suffering terrible agonies, he grappled with the beast. They rolled over several times, the leopard still clinging to its hold on his arm.

Rifle Does the Work.

At last Col. Hutchinson freed his arm and succeeded in getting his revolver. Then he shot the leopard in the eye. The animal let go its hold, but the shot had only blinded it.

Before it could spring on him again Col. Hutchinson had gained possession of his rifle, and succeeded in killing the beast just as the first of the beaters came back.

Col. Hutchinson was by this time so exhausted from loss of blood and the struggle that he was in a state of collapse. He was carried back to his bungalow, and his arm, which was terribly lacerated from the shoulder to the wrist, was attended to.

He is now progressing favorably.

BARBARIC RELICS FOUND.

Massive Bracelets and Armlets of Solid Gold That Once Adorned Warriors Bold, In Good Preservation.

Workmen engaged in a sandpit at Crayford, Kent, England, have unearthed a number of massive bracelets or armlets of solid gold, supposed to be portions of the barbaric ornaments of ancient British chiefs.

The supposition that the sandpit was the burying place of the chiefs is supported by the discovery of bones at the same spot and of weapons of stone and flint close by.

The armlets were found at a depth of three or four feet from the surface. Their value as gold alone is estimated to be from $1,250 to $1,500, but their antiquity and historical associations make them priceless.

They are in a perfect state of preservation, and bear inscriptions on some of the jewels, which have not yet been deciphered. Experts are of opinion that they date from a period long before the Christian era.

They have been deposited at Scotland Yard as treasure trove, and are now the property of the Crown.

In May last eight similar bracelets were found near the same spot, and the finders received as their share of treasure trove a sum equal to about $110. Those bracelets are now in the British Museum.

Ventilating London.

Skyscrapers were advocated by Mr. A. Hudson, at a lecture at the Surveyors' Institution, for the purpose of ventilating London.

The best natural ventilator of London, said Mr. Hudson, was the Thames. The London parks were also most important ventilators.

The action of motors in stirring up germ-laden dust was a very serious item. In future, windows in many streets might have to be used purely for the admission of light. In that case the ventilation would chiefly have to be derived from shafts running down the middle of the house.

Mr. Hudson thought that tall blocks of buildings here and there throughout London would constitute health resorts for those who lived in the upper storeys, whilst those who lived in the neighborhood of these high buildings would have the ventilation of their houses vastly improved by the eddies round these lofty buildings.

Fear In Children.

An examination of 1,500 children recently made in the west shows that thunderstorms are by far the worst terror of childhood. Afterward, in the order set down, come snakes, strangers, darkness, fire, death, disease, wild animals, policemen, water, insects and ghosts. In the fear of rats and mice girls exceed boys in the ratio of seventy-five to sixteen. In boys fear begins to diminish after the fifteenth year, in girls after the eighteenth.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Soubrette.

"She smiles so sweetly when one sends her a bouquet."

"Yes, confound it, no matter who sends it!"

STILETTO IN ENGLAND.

Revolver Is Growing In Favor as a Weapon.

Is the revolver becoming the stiletto of England? The question is prompted by the recent appalling list of crimes committed by this cheap, easily-used and easily-procured weapon in England. The list might have been said to culminate in the murder of Mr. Whitely but for the fact that since then there is a case in which a young railway porter is charged with shooting and wounding a girl.

An Impulsive Age.

The tendency of the age is undoubtedly toward quick decisions and active measures. The old-time deliberate, non-impulsive habit of the Briton has been influenced by the restless energy of the day. In restless, badly balanced minds the sense of proportion is lost in the need for instant action. Many deeds of violence, done on quite inadequate grounds, are reported which never would have taken place if the perpetrator had had the patience calmly to consider whether or not his method of righting his wrong, real or fancied, was in proportion to the offence.

In many murder cases tried recently it has been shown that the deed had not been deliberately premeditated. The murderer seems to have provided himself with a revolver, so as to be ready for any emergency, just in the way the Italian seems to carry a stiletto.

Act Decreases Sales.

Extensive enquiries made revealed the surprising fact that the gunsmiths' books show a falling off in the sale of revolvers of at least two-thirds since the act of 1903 was passed. That act requires the production of a license or other authority by a would-be purchaser, while the seller has to keep a careful record. The act has diminished remarkably the shooting crimes by gangs of young ruffians, such as those who made Clerkenwell infamous a few years before it was passed, but has not prevented suicide or crimes in which passion of some kind acts as the spur. There was a well-known case not long ago of a man obtaining a license to carry firearms from a postoffice, walking along to a gun shop, buying a revolver, proceeding a few yards farther to an hotel smoke-room, and shooting himself. The series of events occupied about twenty minutes.

Rural Training Cause.

A suggestion was thrown out by a member of a leading firm of gunsmiths that it is, as a rule, the man who is country-bred who uses the revolver when he means to injure or destroy life.

"I think if these cases were investigated," he said, "it would be found that the men concerned had either had a country training or were in the habit of going out shooting. The pure-bred townsman knows nothing of weapons; he would sooner use a knife or poison. But the man who has lived in the country has seen or has engaged in the destruction of animals by firearms. He is familiar with them, and hence his liking for the revolver."

The view was supported by one of the leading detective officers, though it struck him as being novel. He could hardly recall a case in which the man who shot to kill had not had country experience. Usually, however, it was slight. The true sportsman, if he commits suicide, uses one of his favorite guns, and hardly ever the revolver.

SCHOOLS VERSUS CRIME.

Elementary Schools In Great Britain Reduce Number of Criminals.

Since the year 1870 millions of money have been spent on elementary schools in Great Britain. Have the great results which were then anticipated been realized? It is very pleasant to note that the highest hopes of promoters of education thirty years ago are accomplished facts to-day.

In 1870 there were 30,000 people in jail, nearly 6,000 more than there had been ten years before. Now, though the population of the United Kingdom has increased by over fifty per cent., we have to-day only some 20,000 people in prison. That this good effect is due to our elementary schools is strongly suggested by the following table:

	1870.	Present day.
Population	22,500,000	34,000,000
Number of persons under sixteen in prison, reformatories, etc.	11,733	2,321
Total per 100,000 of the population	52	7

Photographs, again, will point out the improvement that has been brought about in Council School children's appearance.

Where, in 1870, we saw forbidding little semi-savages, we now see clean, neat children, with happy and intelligent faces.

Proper Way to Churn.

The agitation in churning should be as violent as the form of churn will admit, says Farm Progress. The churning is to be stopped while the butter is in the granular form. In order to have as thorough churning as possible the temperature of the cream should not be over 53 degrees.

The buttermilk should be drawn from the churn and the butter washed. The butter must be removed from the churn and salted while yet in the granular form. The amount of salt should be to the taste of the customer. For most people one ounce to the pound is required.

Bottled Love Letters.

Missouri girls are still throwing bottled letters into the Missouri river to see what will turn up. A year ago a Carroll county girl cast a message on the waters at St. Louis. Recently she received an answer from a young engineer in the employ of the Government river improvement service stationed a few miles below Memphis, Tenn. The letter stated that the bottle had been found in a crevasse by workmen engaged in the work of repairing the levee.—Kansas City Times.

HOLLOWAY NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. Ban Lowery, of Trenton, have been renewing old friends and acquaintances around here.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Bass have returned to Norwood where Mr. Bass is engaged as cheesemaker for Killarney factory.

Mr. John Wilson is preparing to build a new barn this spring.

Miss Collins, of Belleville, was the guest of Bessie Jose on Sunday last.

The cheese factory will open here on Monday the 8th, under the able management of Mr. John Lloyd.

The contest held here by the Epworth League on Thursday evening proved very interesting. Miss Daisy Townsend received first prize; Mrs. Geo. Cadman second and Clara Garrison third.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wickett were the guests of Mrs. Wm. Donaldson on Thursday last.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Grills spent Sunday last with Mr. and Mrs. Fred Buskard.

The Thurlow cheese factory will be an up-to-date one after this spring, as there are being considerable improvements made.

Mrs. J. C. Sutton and son Archie, and Miss V. Lucas, Yarker, spent Easter with Mr. and Mrs. O. Clement, of this place.

Mrs. S. Sutton entertained friends from a distance on Easter.

Mr. Fred McDonald spent Easter with friends at Wellman's Corners.

Mr. Arthur Wright and Arthur Dolbey went to Shannonville on Easter Sunday.

Mr. Schrimshaw, of Shannonville, spent Easter with his daughter, Mrs. Walker, of this place.

Mr. Coulter, of Brampton, spent Easter with his old friends on the Second Line.

THIRD LINE BREEZES.

The sap run is very short this year, which makes syrup quite a luxury.

The roads are in a terrible condition, as the frost is drawing out.

Mrs. Frank Thompson, of Belleville, and her sister, Miss Jennie Wilson, of Picton, were the guests of Mrs. A. Ruttan a few days ago.

Mr. Gilbert Clapp has moved on the Badgley farm, which he purchased. We are pleased to have him as a neighbor.

EUREKA!

Yes, I Have Found it at Last.

Found what? Why that Chamberlain's Salve cures eczema and all manner of itching of the skin. I have been afflicted for many years with skin disease. I had to get up three or four times every night and wash with cold water to allay the terrible itching, but since using this salve in December, 1905, the itching has stopped and has not troubled me.—ELDER JOHN T. THE AUTO HARMLESS.

Oh, innocent bystander, gaze at the auto!
This is your glorious time of the year.
Look at the auto, the fast whizzing auto.
Why do you tremble? You've nothing to fear!
Stand and admire;
Look at the tire;
Notice the spark plug, the wonderful gear;
Gaze if you will;
The thing's standing still.
Be not alarmed! There's nothing to fear!

Gaze at the auto, the wonderful auto.
Here is a place that from danger is free.
Harmless the auto, the gasoline auto.
Yes, sir; the armory's safe as can be.
Stand and behold
The cooler so cold.
This is a two cycle engine, you see.
Be not alarmed;
You cannot be harmed,
The engine's not going. You're as safe as can be.

Bystanders, hurry; come look at the auto.
Here is a chance to see what it is.
When it's in action you get but an odor;
If it goes by you it goes with a whiz.
Come; stand and admire;
Examine the tire;
Look at the auto and see what it is.
Look at the gear;
You've nothing to fear.
It's on exhibition, not tending to biz.

KITCHEN ECONOMIES.

A Substitute For the Fish Kettle and Other Makeshifts.

If you have no fish kettle tie the fish in a piece of coarse muslin before cooking it, so that there may be no delay in lifting it out when done. Rub it slightly with vinegar or add a little to the boiling water, as it whitens the fish and makes it firmer.

Small mustard tins make good spice boxes if a neat label is placed on the front of each tin. An earthen pan is the best receptacle for keeping bread fresh, but if this cannot be obtained a large tin with a good lid makes a capital substitute.

For the cutter which is used for stamping out rounds of pastry use lids of tins, tops of tumblers or wineglasses. A good set of weights and scales should find a place in every kitchen. Quantities may sometimes be guessed pretty accurately, but there are many things which must be weighed.

A salamander is used to impart a brown color to any preparation. The instrument is made red hot and held close to the preparation till it is browned. A fire shovel made red hot will do as well. If you have no tongs for turning steaks and chops, this can be done with two spoons.

Every housekeeper knows that by using a fork the juice runs out and is wasted, and the meat will look white inside.

When pinched with the spoons it should feel soft; if hard, it is too much cooked; if spongy, it is underdone. A chair placed upside down on another chair makes a very good stand for a jelly bag. A tall music stool is still better. Cheesecloth folded four times makes a much better strainer than the old fashioned flannel bag. Dip it first in boiling water and let the straining be done before the fire. If an egg whisk is not possessed, a plate and a long handled knife will do as well.

Covering Furniture.

An original idea for covering furniture has been tried and proved successful by a woman who wished to have some unsightly chairs in her furnished flat improved. She bought a lot of Roman blankets with wide dark blue and red stripes and had an upholsterer cover her sofa and chairs with them, just as though he were using tapestry or velours. These looked so well that she has had her bedroom chairs also covered with blankets having alternate pink and floral stripes. She has had portieres and inside curtains made of blankets matching those on the chairs, and the effect is really charming, and, as the blankets are very cheap, they cost much less than one would suppose. She says that everything depends upon the color of the blankets chosen. Of course very pronounced stripes would be ugly upon furniture, but the more subdued or delicate colors give a most satisfactory appearance to a room. Here is an opportunity for the amateur upholsterer to try her hand.

Rhubarb Recipes.

Rhubarb and Orange Marmalade.—String and cut in pieces one inch long two pounds of rhubarb. Peel half a dozen oranges and shred the yellow rind. Put it into a preserving kettle with the oranges, rhubarb and a pound and a half of granulated sugar and place over a slow fire. Cook and stir until it is the right consistency and then pour into jars, but do not cover until quite cold.

Rhubarb Jam.—To each pound of cut rhubarb allow one pound of sugar and one lemon. Peel the lemons as thin as possible and slice them, removing all seeds. Cut the rhubarb into pieces an inch long and into the bowl on top of the lemon and the peel, then put the sugar on top of the rhubarb, cover and set away in a cool place overnight. In the morning put the mixture into a preserving kettle and let it simmer gently for three-quarters of an hour. Remove it from the stove, allow it to cool and pack into jars, covering it with paraffin or brandied paper.

Dressmaking Hints.

New cotton often causes needles to break because of its exceeding harshness. This difficulty may be overcome by rubbing along the part to be sewn with a dry piece of soap. The plan answers equally well whether the work be done by hand or machine. Don't hang skirts wrong side out when putting them away. They are bound to crease, and with light ones, so a professional dressmaker says, whatever dust has been collected by the lining and clung in spite of your brushing is bound to sift through to the right side and stick. Go over skirt linings every couple of months with a cloth wrung out—as hard as you can—of water. That cloth should be just one tiny remove from perfectly dry. But the amount of dust it will collect from what you probably thought was a perfectly clean lining is astonishing.

Fireproofing.

Muslin, net and gauze may be made incombustible by using half the weight of whitening with the starch. Another plan is to dissolve half an ounce of alum or salammoniac in water and add to it the water in which the material is to be rinsed. Wood may be made noninflammable by soaking it in a solution of equal parts of isinglass and alum.

Wrinkled Clothing.

A satisfactory way of taking wrinkles out of a coat and skirt, and one that is often more convenient than pressing, is to hang the garment in the bathroom over the tub. Close the windows and turn on the hot water. In two or three hours they will be thoroughly steamed, after which they should be hung in the fresh air.

Squalls.

The difference between a "white" squall and a "black" is that the former causes no diminution of light and is consequently more likely to find a ship unprepared.

Butterflies.

Butterflies have been noticed in the Andes up to height of very nearly 27,000 feet.

A Hare at Sea.

An English coast guard saw a hunted hare, which had been lost by its pursuers, swim in from the sea and land. She appeared to be violently sick, probably from the effects of swallowing salt water. She then cleaned herself thoroughly all over and went quietly on her way, having thus effectually thrown off her hunters.

Steam Vessels.

So long ago as 1737 Jonathan Halls published a pamphlet describing a method of propelling a vessel by steam.

First Circulating Library.

The first circulating library belonged to Pamphilius, presbyter of Caesarea, who lived in the third and fourth centuries A. D. He collected 80,000 religious books for lending to his flock.

Lost Island.

Cephalonia, in the Ionian islands, was known as "Lost Island" to the ancients.

The Footman.

The original footman ran before his master's carriage for the purpose of bespeaking changes of horses, etc. He carried a cane with a large silver knob. The knob was hollow and contained wine for the man's refreshment.

The Phoenicians.

The Phoenicians were the first colonists, and evidences of their talent for colonization are to be found all along the Mediterranean and the seaboard of western Europe and northwestern Africa.

Smoking In Argentina.

Argentinians, who smoke almost continuously in their waking hours, roll their own cigarettes as they need them.

Explosives.

The chloride, bromide and iodide of nitrogen are the most powerful explosives known, but their instability is so marked they are utterly useless. A mere jar will send off chloride of nitrogen with fearful and uncontrollable violence.

The "Dark Lady."

It is claimed that the "dark lady" to whom twenty-eight of Shakespeare's sonnets were dedicated was the notorious Miss Mary Fitton, maid of honor to Queen Elizabeth.

Bee Scouts.

Each hive of bees possesses an intelligence department which sends out scouts to discover where honey and other good things are to be gathered.

Artificial Eyes.

The artificial eyes proposed by Ambroise Pare were thin carved plates of gold, painted and enameled to match the sound eye. Glass eyes seem to have been of more recent origin. Pare's suggestion first appeared in his "Methode Curative des Playes de la Teste Humaine," folio 226, Paris, 1561, where he gives four illustrations showing the back and front of a right and left eye.

The First Derby.

The first Derby was run on May 4, 1780, and won by Sir Charles Bunbury's Diomed.

What Causes Snow.

Snow is the condensed vapor of the air frozen and precipitated to the earth. When the air is nearly saturated with vapor and is acted on by a current of air below the freezing point some of the vapor is condensed and frozen into snow. The largest flakes are formed when the air abounds with vapor.

Marmalade.

Marmalade, then made only of quinces, was known in Henry VIII.'s reign. The word is derived from "mermelo," a quince.

Rubies and Emeralds.

The ruby is found in Burma, Siam and Ceylon, those of the first named country being the finest, the so called "pigeon blood." Emeralds are found in the Ural mountains of Russia, in Peru and in Colombia, the latter—in the Andean region—producing the finest, that termed "Spanish emerald."

Belgium's Fruit.

In ordinary seasons the kingdom of Belgium, which is not larger than the state of Maryland, after supplying a population of 500 to the square mile, exports 105,000,000 pounds of fruit.

Telegraphy.

A telegraphic line consisting of twenty-four wires, each representing a letter, was established by Lesage at Geneva in 1774, and in the same year Bishop Watson made experiments over 10,000 feet of wire near London. In Germany the invention is credited to Sommering—1809.

Meyerbeer.

Meyerbeer's happiest inspirations came when the thunder roared, the winds howled and the rain dashed in deluging sheets down the window panes of his study.

The Automobile.

The theory of the automobile was known to Solomon de Coste of Normandy in 1641. He wrote a book on the propulsion of carriages by steam power and was cast into a Paris madhouse for it by Cardinal Richelieu.

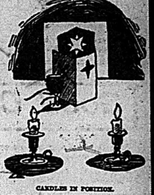
FOR YOUNG FOLKS

COLORED STARS.

How to Perform a Pretty Experiment With Cardboard and Candles.

Here is a pretty experiment that an ingenious boy can make. Get a piece of cardboard, say, 8 by 12 inches in size and bend it gently in the middle. In one of the wings thus formed cut a four pointed star, with two of the points vertical and two horizontal. Now bend this wing back upon the other and make a tracing of the star on the latter with a pencil.

Your object is to get the exact center of the star tracing, and this you may do by making a dot at the intersection of the diagonals. Now make another drawing of a star on the uncut wing, but its points must be at an angle of forty-five degrees with the first. Cut this new star out carefully and place the cardboard, as shown in the illustration, on a table bearing two lighted candles of the same height and opposite to a screen of white paper fixed to the wall.



CANDLES IN POSITION.

Regulate the angle formed by the two wings so that the luminous images cast by the stars may fall, one directly on the other, in the center of the screen. You will thus have a bright star with eight points. Now, if you cover one of the two openings with a piece of colored glass, say, green, you will have a tricolored star, with the points alternately red and green and the center white.

The piece of colored glass may be replaced by a wineglass containing any colored liquid, and the points of the star will then show alternately the color of the liquid and its complimentary hue. Some very pretty effects may thus be produced.

SAP OF THE SUGAR MAPLE.

How the Sweet Liquid Is Stored In the Tree—Warmth Makes It Flow.

There is much difference of opinion as to where the sap in a sugar tree comes from. It does not come from the ground by the roots, but is in the tree and has been all winter in the form of starch deposited in the cells of the soft wood under the bark. When the weather becomes warm enough in the spring to set in action the vital processes of the tree, this starch is changed into sugar and the cells become so full of the sweet sap as to exert a great pressure on them. The warmth of the spring sun starts this vital action, and the sap circulates through the cells on the way to the buds, which soon swell out and burst into leaf. When the tree is tapped by the sugar maker, the pressure of the sap on the cells forces it out of the opening made. There is no special current up from the roots or down to them; the tree is simply filled with sap all through the soft wood and mostly at that part of it immediately under the bark. Here new wood is formed of the matter held in solution in the sap.

The sap will flow while the ground is still frozen, for it is warmth in the air that causes the flow and not the action of the roots in the soil. Therefore it is quite useless, as some people do, to spread any little or other nonconducting matter under the tree for the purpose of keeping the ground frozen to delay the budding. If this effect be desired, the whole tree must be covered in and kept in a dormant condition by a low temperature all over.—Chicago News.

Victoria's Crown.

The lightest of European crowns is the state crown of Great Britain, which was made for Queen Victoria. Although it weighs only two pounds and seven ounces, its value is $1,500,000. One enormous sapphire came from the signet of Edward the Confessor.

A Princess of Six.

For a night, for a day,
In a land far away,
Ruled a sweet little princess of six.
What she did in those hours
In her faraway bowers
Who can say unless maybe 'twas tricks!

There is one thing she did
That can never be hid—
She mixed mustard with sugar and spice.
When her subjects so gay
Came to dine on that day
They made faces that weren't very nice.

Then she went out to walk
With a doll that could talk,
And the doll talked so loud and so long
That the sweet little maid
Said, "I'm very much 'fraid
There is something inside you that's wrong."

Then she pulled pussy's tail,
And poor puss gave a wail
And scratched her a scratchety scratch.
If you don't believe me
You can go there and see
Through the little red door with the latch.

OCULAR HEADACHE.

That is headache caused by eye-strain, and 90 per cent. of all headaches are caused by eye-strain in some form. And in most cases the vision is normal, which fact often throws the physician off his guard in his diagnosis; where the vision is much affected there is not much headache for the reason that the nerve centres are not so sensitive as where the vision is keener. Of course, small errors of refraction, especially astigmatism with oblique axis, will cause headache, but the worst forms of headaches are caused from muscle-strain, because these ocular muscles have a vital connection with the nerve centres at the base of the brain. In the latter case this strain often produces other nervous troubles, such as chorea, epilepsy, debility, insanity, etc., RANNSEY and STEVENS, two prominent specialists of New York, report numerous cases of chorea and insanity cured by wearing the proper glasses. We make a specialty of such cases of eye-strain. Consultation free.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

THE AMATEUR MINSTRELS.

The above attraction drew a great old crowd to the Carman opera house last night. It is said that, when the change was counted up, it was found that the spoils amounted to nearly $400, which, as the treasurer might remark, is going some. Of course the old favorites, Wheeler and Dulmage, were the two chief fun-makers. An amateur minstrel show, in Belleville, without Ab Wheeler, would be like a circus without the rhinocerhorse, while Geo. Dulmage's local hits are always eagerly looked forward to. Unfortunately Mr. Wheeler was in rather poor voice last night, and was at considerable disadvantage. He suffered, apparently, with a bad cold, which was strange, too, for some of his jokes were warm enough to drive any ordinary cold away. Mr. Dulmage, of course, hit everybody and everything, from the Mayor down to those two old standbys, the post office and drill shed. The arrangement of the first part was different to usual custom. Instead of sitting in a half circle, the singers were "discovered sitting at tables, as though in a roof garden. The arrangement was hardly perfectly satisfactory, for the chorus was too far back on the stage, and the sound, instead of coming out to the audience, went up into the flies, where it apparently suffered death from suffocation. However, the chorus, what one heard of it, was well-balanced and tuneful, the boys' voices (of whom there were a dozen or so) sounding sweet. Mr. John Mackie was interlocutor, and, of course, filled the position with credit. He always does. The end-men were: Tambos, Ab Wheeler and Geo. Jones; Bones, Geo. Dulmage and Bob Sills. The end songs, of course, called forth all sorts of laughter. The jokes were fair. Some were new and very good; some were of middle age, and some were probably in the almanac which Noah took with him when he set forth on his cruise. However, they were well "gotten off" and every one brought a laugh, which is the main object, after all. The balladists were rather above the average of the usual Belleville amateur minstrel performance. Some of the songs were really first-class, some were not quite so good but all were well received and encored. Here is the programme of the first part:

Grand Opening Chorus, Wetmark Minstrel Overture, No. 4, introducing entire Company.
When the Robins Nest Again ——— .... Mr. Harry Brown
Where is Brown? ... ... Geo. B. Jones
In the Dear Old Fatherland ——— ... ... Mr. Sandy Burrows
Slumberland ... ...Master Bert Bell
Never, Never go More, Geo. Dulmage
In Lover's Lane, Mr. Kenneth Taylor
Clover Blossoms ... Mr. Vincent Doyle
Toot, Toot, Goodbye ... Ab Wheeler
When the Bell in the Lighthouse,—rings Ding, Dong, Mr. Teddy Austin

Without making any invidious distinctions, it may fairly be stated that two of the most pleasing features of the evening were the songs by the two boy sopranos, Masters Bert Bell and Gerald Moffatt. The former youngster sang in the first part and the latter in the olio, but both did well and were loudly and deservedly applauded.

The second part of the programme introduced, first of all, Mr. Ab. Wheeler in a monologue and song. Barring the huskiness which affected his beautifully trained baritone voice, "Ab" was in fine form, and it was shown that he has lost none of his power to amuse.

Mr. Thos. Gloster did some light and heavy balancing feats, which were applauded.

Mr. J. A. Halpany sang a serio-comic song and told some dialect stories in first-class style.

The two eminent tragedians, Messrs Wheeler and Dulmage, appeared in a musical sketch, "Skidoo," which caused roars of laughter. Mr. Dulmage appeared as a young lady, in a red silk shirtwaist, with picture hat. Female attire is beautifully suited to Mr. Dulmage's peculiar style of architecture, and he made an instantaneous hit. His companion in crime, Mr. Wheeler, might justly have been termed a lily, for Solomon in all his glory was never arrayed like "Albert." The sketch was full of local hits and gags, and caused much merriment.

Next, and last, came "Tenting on the Old Campground," sung by a male quartette, Messrs. Doyle, Brown, Taylor and Burrows. The boys rendered several selections in really fine style, and then made way for Master Gerald Moffatt and a boy chorus of six. Little Gerald sang "Baby Bunting" in a sweet and tuneful way and the little chaps who assisted him sang and marched in fine style. It was a pleasing wind-up to the programme.

Taken altogether, it may fairly be said that the performance was better than many amateur minstrel shows given in this city, but hardly the best. It had, however, a lot of good features, and there was plenty of nice singing and many good chances to laugh. What more can anyone ask in an amateur minstrels, where the parties who do the more or less thrilling stunts are fellows you know and like? To give the boys their due they put up a show which whiled away two hours and a half very enjoyably.

The manager, Mr. Harry McIninch has another success to his credit.

An orchestra of six pieces played pleasingly, and quite filled the bill. It was composed of; Miss Mabel McIninch, piano; Mr. E. O'Rourke, violin; Prof. Denmark, clarinet; Mr. R. Ittaind, cornet; Mr. J. Weese, bass viol; Mr. Aselstine, trombone.

Painters May Go Out On Strike Soon.

There are indications that the painters employed in this city may go out on strike on the 15th inst. The brush handlers are demanding that on and after that date the scale of wages shall be 25 cents per hour, 53 hours, to constitute a week's work. This ultimatum has been submitted to employers, contractors and others who have occasion to engage painters.

The McMaster Band.

The meetings at the Baptist Church, conducted by the McMaster Band, still continue to be well attended. At last night's service the church was crowded. Mr. Williamson sang, with great acceptance, "The Land of the Leal." Mr. Ray delivered an earnest and pointed address from the text, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love." Mr. Cameron, the leader of the band, then dwelt upon some of the excuses which are keeping men from deciding for Christ. Some are excusing themselves because of the inconsistent lives of professing Christians, while others are fearful that they cannot hold out. In the after service several signified their desire to accept Christ. The meetings will continue until Tuesday, the 9th inst.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Prof. Hunt meets the Glee Club at the Y.M.C.A. to-night at 8 o'clock. Any young man, whether connected with any of the choirs or not, is invited to take this course of ten lessons. The fellows are requested to be on hand by 7.45.

A recent 18 day building campaign at Indianapolis, Ind., brought a $273,000 building for that city. Business men say that it has put a new spirit into the city, which has changed from pessimism to optimism.

The last day for receiving the thank offering strips will be April 11th. All empty strips are to be returned as well. On the night of Thursday, 11th, all contributors to this fund are requested to be present to hear an excellent programme which is being prepared.

The McMaster Band held forth to a delighted audience in Albert College yesterday. To-day they visited the Marsh & Henthorn shop.

Saturday at 11 o'clock there will be a mass meeting for boys over ten years of age at the Y.M.C.A., to be conducted by the McMaster Band.

Sundays at 4 o'clock there will be another mass meeting for men in the opera house.

Former Bellevillian Does Well In the West

The Port Arthur Chronicle of March 27 has an article showing that a former Bellevillian is doing well in that thriving town. The gentleman referred to is Mr. A. L. Smith, who was at one time a clerk in Mr. R. Templeton's here, and was deservedly popular with all who knew him. The Chronicle's article says:

"A real estate deal was consummated last week, when A. L. Smith, the druggist, purchased from Mayor Clavet the property now occupied by Geo. Clavet & Son as a flour and feed store.

The property has a frontage of 30 x 100 feet, covering whole lot, with a two-story solid brick store. The purchase price was $12,000. Property is selling at $500 per foot on the same street.

"Mr. Smith will fit up the building as a drug store.

Former Picton Man Had Narrow Escape.

Picton, April 3.—Word comes from his plantation, near Norfolk, Va., of the recent narrow escape from drowning, of a former prominent resident of Picton, A. W. Hepburn, and a pleasure party. Mr. Hepburn and a party of friends were out on the river which flows by his plantation, one afternoon, when a terrific storm arose, fog settled, darkest night came on, and they were forced to spend all the night out in the open, in a small steam yacht, which the storm nearly swamped and which became disabled It was a terrifying experience. When the storm subsided, the party found their boat had drifted near shore. Mr. Hepburn is the father of B. R. and J. de C. Hepburn, general manager and passenger agent of the Lake Ontario and Quebec Navigation company, Picton.

Vital Statistics.

The vital statistics of the city for the month of March, as per register of the City Clerk, shows there were 21 births, 3 marriages and 25 deaths. The death list was exceptionally large. Of the 25, two were outside of the city limits. Of this number 4 were infants, and 6 were 80 years and over.

To-day's Market

The market this morning was well attended, in fact it was much larger than is usual on a Thursday. Prices were about the same for all produce offered for sale.

Pensions For Teachers.

THEY MAY COME SOME DAY, SAYS HON. DR. PYNE,

Toronto, April 4. — Representatives of the training section of the Ontario Educational Association waited on Hon. Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, yesterday. It was pointed out to the Minister that by the proposed abolition of the Model schools the teachers of those institutions will be deprived of their employment. The members of the deputation asked that something be done by the Government to prevent these teachers from suffering hardship. They asked that Model school masters with ten years' successful experience, or masters holding the degree of arts, and any with less than ten years' experience who pass the examination for the degree of bachelor of pedagogy or some equivalent, be granted Public school inspectors' certificates: that Model school masters who have reached the age of 55 and have at least ten years' experience be granted a money compensation; that the Government when appointing masters to the Normal schools give the claims of Model school masters on account of their special fitness just consideration.

Hon. Dr. Pyne asserted that the Government desired to improve the condition of the teacher, and thus insure better schools. The rural schools needed the first attention and the most attention. He hoped the day would come when a pension system would be adopted for the teaching profession of this province. It was a matter that would have to be approached in a very careful way. If any such scheme were adopted it would have to be actuarially correct in its working out.

The speakers included Principal Merchant and Vice-Principal Dearness, of the London Normal School; Dr. W. Pakenham, Principal of the Toronto Technical High School; J. B. Dow, Whitby; Rev. J. R. Bell, of Orangeville, and A. A. Jordan, Port Hope.

Ancient Sawmill Fell Into the River.

At an early hour on Sunday morning last the greater portion of the Sutherland sawmill, situated at the upper end of Canifton village, collapsed and went into the river. This was owing to high water and ice and the fact that the structure was ancient, having been erected nearly a century ago. A new portable mill will be erected as soon as possible. This is considered necessary, as there is considerable custom sawing to be done, and there is no mill in the near vicinity.

FIRE IN M'ADOO TUNNEL

Several Hundred Underground Workers in Great Danger.

Dangerous Blaze in New York Causes Severe Injuries to Five Men—Damage to Extent of $50,000—Engine Houses in Great Excavation Burnt—Air Supply Was Cut Off—Volunteers Manned Hoists.

New York, April 4.—Fire caused by a spark from one of the boiler rooms in the excavation for the McAdoo Tunnel terminal at Dey, Fulton and Church streets yesterday, did damage estimated at $50,000, and a delay of 30 days in the completion of the work on the huge terminal buildings will result. Five men were injured during the fire by being caught in one of the deep caissons, two of them so severely that it was necessary to take them to a hospital. The fire started on a high wooden structure, midway between Dey and Cortland streets, used to support a hoisting engine. By the time the fire apparatus arrived the shower of sparks and embers from the burning boiler house had set fire to a dozen other boiler houses and similar structures in the excavation. These, together with several big derricks, were badly burned, and the temporary wooden flooring over the surface of Dey street covering the excavation was ruined.

Many Thrilling Rescues.

There were many thrilling rescues and several instances of personal bravery during the progress of the fire. Deep down under the ground in the 100 and more caissons which are being sunk for the foundations of the big terminal buildings to rest upon, were between 500 and 600 men at work. When it was seen that there was danger of the fire spreading to all of the engine houses south of Dey street, shutting off the supply of air, the pressure of which enabled the men to work under ground, and the withdrawal of which would mean serious danger, if not death, to many of them, the danger signal was given, and the buckets lowered into the caissons to bring the tunnel workers to the surface. Around some of the derricks used to lower and hoist the buckets the flames raged fiercely, and in two instances the men in charge of the donkey engines lost their nerve and deserted their posts, leaving the men eighty feet beneath the surface of the ground to their fate. The deserted hoists were quickly remanned by volunteers, however, and the new men stuck to their posts with the flames roaring around them until the last one of the tunnel workers was brought up to safety.

Stricken With Paralysis.

Montreal, April 4.—Dr. William Henry Drummond, one of Canada's best known literary men, author of the "Habitant" and other volumes of verse, was stricken Tuesday with paralysis at Cobalt, where he had gone in charge of work on the Drummond mine, owned by his brother and himself. The best medical aid obtainable has been hurried to Cobalt from this city. The condition of the stricken man is said to be serious.

Year In Central.

Toronto, April 4.—Joseph Gurofsky, manager of the Chestnut street branch of the Bank of Toronto, charged with feloniously wounding Dominico Trevanni in a fracas in the "ward" on Thanksgiving Day last, was sentenced to one year's imprisonment by Judge Winchester.

The verdict was a great shock to the relatives and friends of the prisoner in the court.

Five Died In Flames.

Passaic, N. J., April 4.—A mother and four of her children perished in a tenement house fire here yesterday. The victims were Mrs. Philomena Setupo, 26 years old; Mary, aged 7; Libriabe, aged 5; Antonia, 3; and Joseph, aged 7 months.

McINTOSH BROS.

LIQUOR LICENSE ACT

Amendment to Afford Further Protection to Minors.

Government Will Investigate Title of Canada Co. to Mineral Rights on Land—Defence of Provincial Rights—Ministers to Receive Increase In Salary—Succession Duties and Other Bills Read Third Time.

Toronto, April 4.—The belligerent attitude which the Government has assumed towards any interference by Dominion legislation with Provincial Rights was further demonstrated at the Legislature yesterday in the ready approval Hon. Mr. Hanna extended to the bill of Mr. P. H. Bowyer (East Kent) to amend the Liquor License Act.

Mr. Bowyer's bill prohibits, under penalty, the supplying of intoxicating liquor to any one under 21 years of age except by parent, guardian or physician.

Its other clause seeks to put a stop to clubs going to Ottawa for incorporation to escape jurisdiction of provincial license regulations.

"They go to Ottawa to escape the Railway Act, they go to Ottawa to get Sunday cars, now they go to get clubs' licenses and if they keep on they'll go to Ottawa on the ditches and watercourses or municipal acts," declared Mr. Bowyer, and the House applauded.

Hon. Mr. Hanna concurred. It was proposed to insert Mr. Bowyer's amendments in the general act. "Within three miles of this House," observed the Provincial Secretary, "a hunt club secured incorporation at Ottawa as an organization of national importance in order that it might have the privilege of dispensing liquor."

Clubs Obtain Charters.

Hon. Mr. Graham, the Liberal leader, also endorsed the principles of Mr. Bowyer's bill. It was a step in the right direction, he said.

Charters or acts of incorporation for clubs in the province contain a prohibitory clause against the sale of liquors. At least one club—a hunt club of Toronto—has gone to Ottawa for a charter. Charters granted at Ottawa contain no prohibitory clause. Under the Ontario License Act license commissioners shall grant licenses to clubs whose charters do not expressly forbid the sale of liquor. Mr. Bowyer's bill makes it necessary for the license board before granting such a license to obtain the consent of the Provincial Secretary in writing, or really makes idle and of no avail for the purpose of license-getting, a Dominion charter.

Mr. Bowyer withdrew his bill on Hon. Mr. Hanna's assurance that the object would be dealt with in the Government amendments to the License Act to be brought down at a later date.

Sales of Land Bill.

Mr. McCoig (West Kent) moved the second reading of his bill respecting sales of land by the Canada Co. Mr. Matthew Wilson, K. C., was present at the Legislature in the interests of the Canada Co.

Mr. Auld (South Essex) spoke vigorously in support of the measure. He declared the Canada Co. had "bled the people almost white." Although there was nothing in their charter entitling them to do so, as soon as oil was discovered they reserved the mineral rights and sought to bleed the people further.

Hon. Mr. Foy said the measure, in his opinion, should have been presented as a private bill. In its present form the Legislature had no power to deal with the matter. The Attorney-General stated that the Government had been giving the grievance—which they believed to be a real grievance—considerable attention and he suggested to Mr. McCoig the withdrawal of the bill, which was impossible in its present form. Hon. Mr. Foy declared that the Government were prepared to engage good legal talent to investigate the whole matter, go to England if necessary and trace up the history of the original charter. The Minister said the Government was willing and prepared to bear the full expense of the investigation and any litigation that the property holders agree upon. He urged that they agree upon a test case.

Farmers Will Help.

Mr. McCoig said his constituents would be very grateful to the Government for the course taken. He hoped action would be taken at as early a date as possible. Immediate action would meet the hearty approval of the people, many of whom were men in humble circumstances. The farmers would give the Government every assistance in fighting the matter. Mr. McCoig adopted the Attorney-General's suggestion and withdrew his bill.

Hon. Mr. Foy said he would be glad to receive any information or even suspicions that members had that would assist him in the conduct of the case.

Mr. McNaught's bill to amend the act respecting investments by trustees got its second reading.

Bills Finally Passed.

The following bills were read a third time and finally passed.

To amend and consolidate the law relating to the payment of succession duties—Hon. Mr. Matheson.

To amend the Ontario Insurance Act—Mr. Hoyle.

Respecting Burlington Beach—Hon. Mr. Hendrie.

With the approval of the whole House, Hon. Mr. Hendrie's Provincial Rights bill respecting certain railways and other corporations, passed its committee stage.

Hon. Mr. Graham took occasion to endorse the measure on behalf of the Liberal side of the House. It was taking the position always maintained by Liberals, he said.

Hon. Mr. Whitney—"It is in direct opposition to the Liberal leaders at Ottawa."

Hon. Mr. Graham—"I can't help that."

Senate Interference.

Hon. Mr. Whitney declared it passed his comprehension to note the Senate at Ottawa endeavoring to interfere with provincial rights. "It remains to be seen," he declared, "whether the jurisdiction of the province is to be brazenly swept aside."

And both sides of the House applauded.

Mr. Preston (Brant) asked what position the Government would take if the present legislation was disallowed at Ottawa. Would Ontario make a direct appeal to the Imperial authorities?

Hon. Mr. Whitney thought it would be unwise for Ontario to show its hand to its antagonists. The future would depend on the position taken by them. He might say, however, that if the legislation were disallowed the first step taken would probably be to re-enact it.

Increase Minister's Salaries.

The Prime Minister introduced a bill to increase the salaries of the Cabinet Ministers by $2,000 each.

"The Government takes the full responsibility for this bill," declared Mr. Whitney. "We have not consulted the Opposition in the matter because we did not deem it proper. Without casting aspirations on how such matters have been dealt with elsewhere, I may say that it naturally breathes suspicion when both sides get together and whisper over it. I have simply secured the permission of the Lieutenant-Governor to introduce the bill."

Mr. Whitney said a salary to the leader of the Opposition was discussed but it was felt if that matter was dealt with it should be dealt with by itself. It would not be proper to join them.

Mr. Graham concurred. For himself he could not accept a salary even if it was offered, but he agreed with the increases to the Ministers. If they were not worth the new salaries they were not worth anything.

SHOT HIS TWO CHILDREN.

Father Turns Revolver On Little Ones—Then, Attempts Suicide.

Montreal, April 4.—William Simpson, residing at St. Charles, near Hudson Heights, murdered his two children, one aged two years and the other two months. The little ones were shot with a revolver, which he afterwards turned upon himself. While badly wounded, the man, who is only 23, is still alive. He was brought into the city by train, and is now lying in the General Hospital. He had been married three years, and, according to friends, the family was a happy one. No cause is assigned to the crime.

THE SPREADING RAIL AGAIN.

It Sent a C. N. R. Train Into Ditch At Rosthern.

Rosthern, Sask., April 4.—The Canadian Northern passenger train going north was derailed here at 5.50 yesterday morning. Only one car remained on the rails and the mail car is overturned in the ditch. Mail Clerk George Hawkins received injuries to his back and is badly shaken up, but not seriously injured. Several passengers were shaken up, but none hurt badly. Engineer McLeod and Fireman Walpole stuck to their posts and neither was hurt. A spreading rail was the cause of the accident.

1,600 Coal Miners Strike.

Amherst, N. S., April 4.—All the men employed at Springhill mines went out on strike yesterday morning. A short time ago notices were posted around the works by the P. W. A. asking that all non-union men must join the union before April 1 or the union men would refuse to work with them. A number did comply with the demand, and a meeting of both Pioneer and Mechanics Lodges was held, and yesterday morning no one went to work. About 1,600 in all are out.

The only men working are the firemen, who were allowed to remain to keep up steam. It is thought that the matter will be satisfactorily adjusted in a day or two. There is no issue at all between the men and the management.

Toronto, April 4.—Hon. Dr. Pyne told a deputation yesterday that the model school teachers displaced by the new arrangements would be promoted to normal school positions where possible. A pension scheme might be considered in the future.

The deputation which spoke for the training section of the Educational Association, was introduced by Vice-Principal Dearness, London. It was pointed out that many teachers would be left idle by the abolition of the model schools. Those with ten years' experience, and holding arts certificates, and those under ten who were bachelors of pedagogy, it was suggested, should receive inspectors' certificates. Those over 55 should receive a money compensation.

Slightly Improved.

Toronto, April 4.—At a late hour last night Mr. Speaker St. John seemed slightly improved.

An official at the hospital said the vitality shown by Mr. St. John was something remarkable, and that in the face of the strong fight he had already made for life, it was impossible to give up hope. This is the feeling of all the doctors. They do not attempt to minimize the very critical state the patient is in, or the developments which a few hours may bring about, but unite in saying that the case is not yet hopeless.

Cuban Leader Assassinated.

Havana, April 4.—Jos. E. Ayala, ex-chief of police of Guines, Havana Province, was assassinated at Guines yesterday. He led the Government forces near Guines during the August revolution, thereby incurring so much enmity that he went to Mexico, from which country he had just returned.

Eaten By Cats.

Vancouver, B.C., April 4.—Herbert Lobley, a well known resident of Central Park, was found dead on the floor of his house, with his face and hands eaten off by cats. He had not been seen for a week. His brother went to the house and found his dead body on the floor, with three cats in the same room.

PORT CREDIT INQUEST.

No Fresh Light As to How Elliott Came By Death.

Port Credit, April 4.—The mystery surrounding the death of Edward Elliott on the Grand Trunk between Port Credit and Clarkson early Good Friday morning is no nearer a solution, and despite the fact that at the reopening of the enquiry yesterday nine witnesses were closely examined by County Crown Attorney W. H. McFadden, nothing of a tangible nature was adduced to show how the unfortunate sectionman met his end.

At this stage of the investigation four theories present themselves, any one of which prove the solution of the mystery. The first and most probable theory is that Elliott was done to death by some person or persons unknown. The second is that he fell from a westbound train. The other two are that he was killed by the way freight, the brakeman of which saw him signaling to the train, or by another train, which immediately preceded it, bound in the same direction.

The evidence of Dr. Sutton, who performed the autophy, will not be heard until next Wednesday, owing to his indisposition. It was also understood that Harry Gallagher, the man with whom Elliott left the section camp at Clarkson to go into Toronto, was to be brought from Hamilton to give testimony, which, is was expected, would materially assist in explaining how Elliott was killed.

Farmer Victim of Runaway.

Douro, Ont., April 4.—Morris Condon, a farmer of this neighborhood, was the victim of a runaway accident yesterday. While driving to Lakefield his spirited team became frightened and got beyond control. He was thrown violently into a ditch, and besides having his arm broken, received serious internal injuries. The wagon was demolished.

Burned to Death.

Vermillion, Alta., April 4.—George Walker, an engine wiper, lost his life, and a companion was seriously burned, in a fire which destroyed the C.N.R. oil-house at this point last night. The origin of the fire cannot be learned at present. An inquest will probably be held.

MURDER CHARGE LAID.

Three Prisoners Held For Causing Death of Toronto Woman.

Toronto, April 4.—A charge of murder was sworn out by Acting Detective Murray yesterday morning against Jennie Long, Joseph Clegg, and Robert Kenmore, who are alleged to be responsible for the death of Fanny Catone, who died in the jail hospital. The Crown have evidence to show that a fight occurred in the house of Joseph Clegg, and the Catone woman was thrown out of the house. When the police found her she had several serious wounds. Her condition was not considered serious, but she rapidly grew worse and death resulted.

Yesterday the Crown took action and the three prisoners were taken into custody charged with aggravated assault.

Magistrate Denison refused bail pending result of coroner's inquest.

Alimony Only for Cruelty.

Hamilton, April 4.—Judge Monck ruled that a wife has no right to leave her husband and demand alimony unless he beats her repeatedly.

James J. Morden of Bullock's Corners, who was ordered by a magistrate to pay his wife $3 a week alimony, appealed against the ruling. Morden claimed his wife's favorite term of endearment for him was "Drunken brute," and that she said she hoped his soul would shrivel in hades.

Evidence was produced to show that, after repeated bickerings, Mrs. Morden purposed to attend church with her husband and sit in the front pew. Then, she alleges, he beat her.

The judge allowed the appeal of the husband.

Michigan Reduces Railway Rates.

Lansing, Mich., April 4.—The Senate yesterday passed a bill requiring a two-cent-a-mile passenger fare on all Lower Peninsula railroads whose net earnings exceed $1,200 a mile. Upper Peninsular fares, which are four cents, are restricted to three cents a mile.

A three-cent rate is provided for Lower Peninsula roads earning less than $1,200 a mile.

Closes Legislature.

Regina, April 4.—The Legislative Assembly was prorogued with the usual ceremonies by Lieut.-Gov. Forget yesterday.

Baby Burned to Death.

Cobalt, April 4.—A shack took fire yesterday while five children were inside. The log building is in the French quarter on the Nipissing property, and the owner is a miner named Lavois, working in Cobalt Lake mine. The mother had gone to early service at the Catholic Church, and left the children, the eldest eight and the youngest not a year, alone in the house. Three of the children walked out, but the eldest had to be carried. The baby had been left in a high chair, and its body was not recovered until the fire had been put out, it then being almost burned to ashes. Neighbors fought the fire with pails of snow, but the house was down before water could be turned on.

Physician Shoots Himself.

Berlin, April 4.—Made melancholy and morbid by serious differences with his fellow physicians, Dr. Huetzler, head of the Gisela Children's Hospital at Munich, committed suicide Tuesday there by shooting himself with a revolver. News of the physician's death was a shock to the other heads of the institution, and as a result of the tragedy the Princess Gisela has resigned as protectoress.

Dr. Huetzler was a native of New York. His mother, Sarah, who died some years ago, was well known in German circles as an authoress. She was twice married, her second husband being Josef Kainz, the actor.

Perished In The Flames.

Twenty Burned to Death in San Francisco Hotel.

Many Were Injured--Spectators Did Noble Work--Rescued Buried Victims From Blazing Ruin--Caught While Asleep and Roasted to Death--Men Leapt From Windows--Loss Estimated at $40,000.

San Francisco, April 5.—Twenty men were burned to death and twenty others injured in a fire which destroyed an Italian hotel at Seventeenth and Connecticut streets, in the Potrero district, early yesterday. The injured were of the laboring class, and were asleep in their rooms when the fire started. Before they could be aroused, the flames had spread through the building. The walls fell and the inmates were buried in the ruins, twenty being taken out dead and dying. People from other hotels in the vicinity rushed to the assistance of the buried victims and succeeded in rescuing all of them from the flaming timbers. Automobiles brought into service and the injured rushed to the Potrero Emergency Hospital, where several died while awaiting treatment.

Fire Started In Kitchen.

The fire that destroyed the Geneva Hotel is believed to have started in the kitchen, and had gained great headway before it was discovered. There were over 100 lodgers in the building, which burned like tinder, and most of those who lost their lives were caught while asleep and roasted to death. So rapidly did the fire spread that it was impossible to do much in the way of rescue, and even when the fire apparatus arrived, the blaze was so fierce that the firemen were hardly able to place ladders against the walls. They did, however, manage to save a number of people on the very top storey. In the work of rescue W. A. Cole, a fireman, was thrown from a ladder, and it is believed fatally injured.

Jumped From Windows.

The majority of the injured were hurt in leaping from the upper windows. A number of women are reported to have been in the building, and all of them are believed to have perished.

The exact number of the dead cannot yet be ascertained, but the proprietor of the house is quoted as saying that it is more than twelve.

One of the women who met death is said to be Mrs. Filipo, wife of the proprietor.

An adjoining lodging house, at 118 Kentucky street, also was destroyed. There were forty-five men sleeping in this place, but all of them are believed to have escaped.

The property loss is estimated at $40,000.

Besides the known dead, these are missing: The cook, Mrs. Rosa Bezola, an unknown woman, and a boy of four and a girl of eight.

THIRTY FIREMEN HURT.

Explosion At New York Fire Threw Debris On Them.

New York, April 5.—Thirty firemen, among them Chief Croker and Deputy Chief Guerin, were injured by falling debris, and damage estimated at $50,000 was caused by a fire in the five-storey building at 159 Maiden lane yesterday. Only two of the injured men were severely hurt. They are Andrew Swerts, assistant foreman, and David Murphy, a fireman. Both are in a hospital with badly crushed and lacerated bodies. Nearly a hundred firemen were at work on the burning building when an explosion ripped off the roof, tore out the front wall of the building from the fourth storey up, and shook portions of two other walls down into the street. At the sound of the explosion the firemen fled, but thirty of them were caught in the crush of falling debris.

TWELVE MEN INJURED.

Molten Metal At Dominion Steel Co. Went Over Them.

Sydney, N.S., April 5.—An explosion occurred at the open hearth furnaces of the Dominion Iron and Steel Co. yesterday morning, in which twelve men were injured, of whom many had been so badly hurt as to cause their removal to the hospital.

The door of one of the furnaces could not be opened when the heat was ready to be taken out, in consequence of which the metal exploded scattering molten iron and brick in every direction.

The men were working about, and those nearest the furnace were the more seriously injured. Two of those taken to the hospital may be fatally injured.

Influx of Immigrants.

St. John, N. B., April 5.—The C. P. R. steamer Montezuma, in command of Captain Birschman, arrived in port Wednesday with 2,161 passengers. This is the largest number of passengers ever landed here from one steamer, and it is also a record from the fact that there was not a single case of sickness during the voyage.

The passengers were all steerage, the larger portion being Galicians and Italians, with a sprinkling of Germans, Hollanders and Belgians. All but 78 are going to the Canadian west.

The Donaldson liner Cassandra, the big new boat of the Donaldsen fleet, also reached port yesterday morning from Glasgow with 785 passengers.

Little Hope For Drummond..

Cobalt, April 5.—Dr. Drummond is in a critical condition. Dr. Schmidt of Cobalt reports that his patient has a fighting chance, but the outlook is not regarded as promising.

Dr. Drummond had not been feeling well all Monday morning and went to his room about 11 o'clock. He was found on his back unconscious and he has remained in that condition ever since. His right side is completely paralyzed.

STREWN WITH THE DEAD.

Roads of Roumania Are In a Terrible Condition.

Bucharest, Roumania, April 5.—Tranquility has been restored in most of the revolting districts. Disturbances, however, are reported from the Jalomak district, hitherto quiet; also from the Oltenic district. Troops from Moldavia have arrived in the Mehedinintze department, where the devastation has been widespread. The village of Operishoru has been bombarded.

Rabbi Moses Gaster states that his private advices indicate that the horrors of the Roumanian insurrection far exceed the accounts given in the press despatches. The newspaper correspondents, he says, have not been allowed to go out and see for themselves, but have been forced to put up with the official accounts. "I have just received a letter," said Rabbi Gaster, "from a person who witnessed a conflict between the peasants and the troops in one of the Wallachian townships. He writes me that the roads were covered with the corpses of peasants shot down by the soldiers by means of artillery as well as with rifles. The condition of portions of Wallachia must be terrible. The cheerful optimism of the authorities does not count much to me."

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

Young Woman Tries to Take Her Own Life.

Toronto, April 5.—Jennie Goldbeck, a young woman of comely appearance, was arrested yesterday afternoon on a charge of attempting to commit suicide. Until recently she has been living with two other girls above a Chinaman's laundry on Church street.

Her companions were married one day last week, and the other on Tuesday to two Chinaman who visited the laundry.

Miss Goldbeck was taken in hand by the Salvation Army, and for the past few days had been living at the army's home at 25 Esther street.

Shortly before noon yesterday one of the attendants missed her, and on investigating found her lying on the bed of a room with the gas jet turned on.

Medical attendance was summoned, and the young woman revived. She was afterwards taken to No. 3 police station.

HIT AT THE RAILWAYS.

To Take Action at Instigation of Lord's Day Alliance.

Toronto, April 5.—At the suggestion of the Lord's Day Alliance, Crown Attorney Drayton will take action against at least two, and possibly three, of the Canadian railways.

These actions will be lodged to prevent making up trains on Sunday, shunting, forcing employes to work seven days a week, and unnecessary repair work.

A special effort will be made to secure relief for telegraphers. One case is reported of a man who has worked 15 years without a day off. To fag, on the part of operators, many accidents were traceable.

Sir Wilfrid at Montreal.

Montreal, April 5.—The Ministerial special reached here last evening from Ottawa at 6.30 and five minutes later the special left for St. John, N. B.

On board were Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Frederick and Lady Borden, Hon. L. P. and Madame Brodeur and their attendants.

The train left earlier than was expected, hence a great many people who intended to greet the Prime Minister failed to reach the depot.

Sir Wilfrid, although thin, seemed hale and hearty, and there was no sign of anxiety on his face.

TIMELY TOPICS.

It's a mighty short time between winters, these days.

Tenders have at last been called for for the erection of the Belleville drill shed. Let us hope there may be no more undue delay, and that the needed building may be speedily erected.

Winnipeg's water rates are to be increased 65 per cent. Must be a lot of people on the wagon in the 'Peg.

Time flies; which reminds us that the mosquitoes will also soon be flying.

• • •

With the tax rate going up, there is no use saying anything about a public swimming bath this year. That settles it.

Perhaps Hon. Mr. Hyman is waiting for another California earthquake before he comes home.

There was some talk of having a special meeting of the Council last night, for the purpose of bringing down and passing the estimates for the year, but the idea was abandoned. Ald. Marsh, chairman of the Executive, says the estimates will be brought down and the tax rate struck next Monday evening, the regular meeting night of the Council. Any of the taxpayers who are sufficiently interested can attend and hear the explanation of why the rate will be higher this year than last. And if they don't want to attend, they can read all about it, the next day, in this great family journal.

We hear of a matter which is likely to prove quite interesting to many followers of John Wesley in this district. It appears that the Methodist church, like several other bodies, is finding it hard to obtain sufficient laborers in that part of the vineyard known as the Northwest. Sufficient ministers cannot be secured for the great and growing field, and at the last Conference, we are told, a committee was appointed, the object of which was to see if something could not be done in the way of consolidating the work in Ontario and thus freeing certain ministers who might then be utilized in the Northwest. The committee, we are told, has investigated conditions in this district, and will, at the next Conference, recommend that Sidney circuit be wiped off the conference map, and that its three appointments be merged in Holloway St. church, Belleville; Grace church, Trenton, and the Foxboro Methodist church, with the object, of course, of freeing the Sidney circuit divine for labor elsewhere. The minister in charge of the Sidney circuit, is Rev. H. W. Foley, a bright and popular young gentleman, whose parishioners are much attached to him, and who do not, by any means, take kindly to the plan which practically proposes to wipe away their entity.

A Chicago paper prints an interview in which a reporter asks what becomes of all the bad eggs and the answer is that bad eggs go to tanners and papermakers. They don't in Toronto.

An animal cargo which arrived in New York the other day included one flipferd and two muntjacs. Without prejudice, says the Buffalo Express, it may be observed that the man who caught them did better work than the man who named them.

A prisoner in the jail at Williston, N. D., offered to carry out the ashes for the sheriff and the officer let him. When he failed to return immediately, the sheriff thought he must be sifting the ashes and did not go after him. And that's the kind of sheriffs they have in the "bad lands!"

"This kind of weather makes me feel poetic," says the man on the next block. "It's a joy to just be living in this old world, when the robin flies o'er the landscape and the gardener sings at his work—provided you are a good, safe distance from the work.

Spring is her own milliner — wears real roses in her hair, and trims her own dresses with violets, and with a green couch to lie on, spring fever can't be beat! But it's apt to make you rheumatic afterwards.

A Western Ontario editor thus sizes up the Thaw case, and his opinion will probably be accepted as correct by most people. He says:

"My opinion of the Thaw case is that Stanford White was a libertine, that Thaw was a fool and a murderer, and that his wife was a silly-pated young doll, and that Jerome is a faker. Delmas is in legitimate business. He is out to save Thaw's neck at so much per, and I think he will earn the money."

Now the Lunacy commission has declared Thaw sane, and the trial will go on. In the end he will probably be acquitted and patted on the back. It's lucky for him he didn't shoot White in Old England.

Judging by the following, from the Whig, Kingston has one feature of the "growing time," anyhow: "Rents in Kingston are soaring high this spring. Any kind of a house suitable for a family of five or six cannot be had now less than from $15 to $20 per month."

It has often been a cause for wonder among philistines, how that holy man, the reverend editor of the Toronto Globe, could ever have found it in his heart to forsake his former sacred calling and be satisfied to mix with the boisterous and unsanctified men who make up the fourth estate in Canada. And surely, since his advent among them, the said laymen have lost little by comparison with the "reverend brother," who fiercely denounces others for making what he terms "innuendoes," and in the same paragraph makes worse innuendoes himself; who turns up the whites of his eyes, like another Stiggins, and proves himself a bigger hypocrite than the immortal Pecksniff. Globe readers must have poor stomachs for their meals these days, after perusing the shuffling and time-serving editorials of The Globe.

Jim Hill says that the improvement of the waterways is the sole remedy for the freight pressure. Most railway men are opposed to the waterway. The history of the waterway is that it can always be used as a check on the railways. It may be made to relieve congestion and to cut rates. Having performed so much, it is apt to fall into disuse by reason of the improved condition of the railways. Not a dollar spent in canals or other waterways is ever wasted. Hurry along the completion of the Trent canal.

DIED IN DAKOTA.

FORMER RESIDENT OF THIS CITY PASSED AWAY AT GOOD OLD AGE.

Sarah H. Townsend, relict of the late Daniel Y. Dyer, died at her home at Casselton, N.D., on Friday, March 22. Deceased was born near Picton, Prince Edward County, on Oct. 20th, 1828. With her husband she went to Tweed about 1857, where Mr. Dyer conducted a carding and fulling mill. They moved to Belleville in 1873, where Mr. Dyer died in 1879. In the fall of 1863 Mrs. Dyer and her daughter, Almeda, moved to Casselton, N.D., to be with her married daughter, and had resided there ever since that time. She was a remarkably active woman up to the time of her last illness, when she contracted a severe cold, followed by grip and pneumonia. Her vitality was great, but disease was greater, and after seven weeks' illness she sweetly went to sleep. Mrs. Dyer was converted at a campmeeting in Lowrey's woods, near Tweed, in September, 1865, and has since lived a consistent Christian life. Her funeral on Sunday March 24th, was largely attended. As her pastor said: "The whole city was a friend of Grandma Dyer." She occupied the same place in church for years, and at the usual Sunday morning service a stand draped in white and covered with beautiful white flowers was placed by her vacant seat. Flowers in profusion and sympathetic messages were sent, kindly words spoken, and friendly aid given, in loving memory of Grandma Dyer. There are left of her nearest relatives to think of her with love, six sisters, one brother, her daughters, Almeda and Elmir Dyer Morton, Mr. R. Morton and four grandchildren.

Eye Strain
CAUSES
Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

Sir Wilfrid's Poor Memory

Sir Wilfrid Laurier made a speech at the Ottawa banquet to the Right Hon. Mr. Bryce, British ambassador to Washington, in which he showed a disposition to "forget some things."

Was it quite courteous of the Premier of this Dominion to hold slighting language regarding the diplomacy of Great Britain, and beard the representative thereof at a social function in this country on the "blunders" of the past, to threaten the nation's guest that anything in the nature of "sacrifice" would not be tolerated? Such language might more properly emanate from one of less political importance and responsibility.

And in very truth Sir Wilfrid is one of the last of our public men who should speak boldly on this topic, except in the terms of a repentant. He speaks of "concessions" as the base of friendly relations. On what was his electoral campaigns of 1887, 1891, and even of 1896, based, if not on the "concession of our markets to the United States?" His policy of commercial union meant nothing less than the domination of Canadian interests by that country, with discrimination against Great Britain. If he had ridden into power on that hobby Canada would not be in the great independent position that she is to-day, holding the whip hand of the future progress of half the American continent.

Sir Wilfrid referred to the blunders which the map of Canada exhibited in the diplomacy from 1793 to 1903. Others have cast the eye of censure farther back into history, to 1774 to wit, when the Quebec Act secured to the French-Canadians all the rights and immunities, legal and religious, which they had before the conquest, as if, indeed, they had been the conquerors. Such leniency has been called a "blunder" of British diplomacy, but this is not now the language of patriotic Canadians.

As to the map since 1793, it is to be borne in mind that much of the confusion and misunderstandings as to boundaries leading to "concessions" arose through the denial of the Marquis de Vaudreuil, in a letter written in 1761, that he had ever given the British authorities any definite boundary of the surrendered territories at the capitulation of Montreal.

If Sir Wilfrid means that Lord Alverstone committed a serious blunder in the award of 1903, conceding an islet in the Pacific to the United States, which might properly hav been withheld, he forgets that his Government accepted the arbitrament of three American politicians who attended the London tribunal with their minds made up in advance. It was his duty to object to those delegates. In no court of law are jurymen accepted if they are pledged beforehand to their verdict. Neither should Sir Wilfrid have allowed that court of arbitration to be packed with jurors predetermined as to what they would and would not accept.

As to the map of Canada as it stands, it has room and verge enough for all the ends of a great people for a century to come, far more, in fact, than the right hon. gentleman has shown capacity to govern to their honor and truest profit.

HOCKEY.

Whitcroft Home Again.

Peterboro Review: Wearing a red scar on his forehead and bearing several other souvenirs of the strenuousity of Western hockey, Fred Whitcroft arrived home from Kenora last night, after having spent over two months in the Lake of the Woods town, assisting the Thistles in the defence of the Stanley Cup.

"Never felt better," was "Whitty's" cheery greeting to a bunch of friends, and his looks bore testimony to the fact that he was not telling an untruth. Apparently the Western climate has agreed with him. The fact that he will return to Kenora next season to play with the Thistles is sufficient proof that Fred likes the West, and that the West likes Fred, including the brand of hockey he puts up. Fred is being warmly greeted by his many friends around town, and needless to say they all want to know about his hockey experience in the West, and all about the Thistles defence of the Stanley pewterware.

Regarding the report that appeared in a Montreal newspaper to the effect that Whitcroft made an assault upon Johnson of the Wanderer team, after the last game at Winnipeg, Fred states that it is a deliberate falsehood. "Whitty" was a surprised man last night, when he was told of the report that had been circulated, and at once characterized it as untrue. "Johnson is no pink tea hockeyist," said Whitcroft to-day, "and he and I mixed it up somewhat during that second game. But anything that happened was when the game was in progress, and not after the match was over." About five minutes before the match was finished, Johnson wound up a series of attacks on the Peterboro man by charging him with his stick and Whitcroft retaliated by handing the Montrealer a tap on the head. Johnson was not laid out, however, and was able to continue playing. After the game, Johnson came up to Whitcroft and wanted to fight, but was told that the Kenora player did not want to mix up with thugs. This was all there was to the affair. The people in Winnipeg and Kenora know nothing about it, and if there was an assault they would not be slow to holler about it.

Whitcroft says that the Wanderers are a great team, but that if the Kenora players had been in good condition, they would have no difficulty in beating them. Tom Phillips has never struck his gait since he played in Montreal, the first of the season, and several other of the Thistle men had not trained as they should have done for the Cup contests in Winnipeg. The Thistles need fast ice in order to play their game, and the heavy going in the first match with the Wanderers took all the snap out of their play. In the second game, when the ice was hard they outplayed the Wanderers, and had much the better of the play than the score, 6—5, would indicate.

A new man without a reputation has to travel at a great pace to attract attention on a line with such men as Phillips, Alf. Smith and Westwick, all men of great reputation. The men with the reputation always get into the limelight. The fact that Whitcroft made such a favorable impression out West, under these conditions is ample proof he can travel as fast as the best of them, and that the Winnipeg papers were not far wrong, when they described "Whitty" as playing sensational hockey.

"The Western teams play harder hockey than they do in the O. H. A.," said Fred to-day, "the ice is keener and the gait set is a terrible one. Bumps are handed out freely and are usually taken in good grace. Alf. Smith is a good one, but Westwick's hockey days are about over.

Since the Stanley Cup games Fred has been at Kenora. The team was tendered a big reception on their return from Winnipeg, and the people of the town have every confidence that the Stanley Cup will be brought back from Montreal next winter. Whitcroft says that there is no truth in the report that Phillips will play at Ottawa next winter. He will remain in Kenora, where he is closely identified with a big lumber company, and will play with Kenora again next season, as will also practically all the members of the mining town team. Whitcroft is signed for next year, and will return to Kenora again next fall. He is well pleased with the way he was treated in the west and has nothing but good words for the people there, especially the hockey enthusiasts. They are good sportsmen, and give hearty support to the great winter game.

The Kenora Club had an excellent season, financially. The receipts were over $9,000 and they had plenty of cash on hand to pay the players' salaries and to meet all the other expenses, and had considerable to spare.

Fred will remain in Peterboro for the summer, and when the birds begin to fly south again next fall, and hockey players commence to don the steel blades again, he will hit the trail for Kenora, to help the Thistles win the western championship and to go after the Stanley Cup.

NO LONGER A FRINGE

CANADIANS PROUD OF THEIR HERITAGE AND INSTITUTIONS.

Mr. Charles Marcil Talks to New York Newspaper Men — Says There Can Never Be Political Union With the United States—Canada Is In Every Sense a Nation—Is Loyal to the Motherland.

Speaking recently at the annual banquet of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association in New York, Mr. Charles Marcil, Deputy Speaker of the Canadian House of Commons, after referring to the kindly feelings now existing between the people of the United States and those of Canada, and the peace which reigned between them for now almost a century, said:

A Great Celebration.

"I may state that we are organizing a gigantic celebration to be held in the historic city of Quebec on the occasion of the ter-centenary of its foundation, in which it is contemplated that Great Britain, the United States and France will participate, and will be represented by detachments of their navies and armies, in a grand gathering on the Plains of Abraham, on which, in the past, scenes so momentous in the history of the continent have been enacted.

An Altar of Peace.

"This will be another offering on the Altar of Peace. With peace assured through the interest and common-sense of the countries concerned, there may be relations between us of the most intimate kind. Let me say at once that we in Canada do not believe that there ever can be political union with the United States. We came to that conclusion when the British flag replaced the flag of France upon the citadel of Quebec.

Are One People.

"Canadians to-day—French, Anglo-Saxon, Celtic—regardless of their origin or their creed, are one people, faithful in their allegiance to their motherland, but loyal, first and above all, to their native country.

"Proud of their heritage, their free institutions and the stock from which they sprang, they are doing to-day for the northern part of the American continent what the people of the United States have done for their own country. They are building up a nation to share this continent with their cousins of this great republic. Canada is, indeed, to-day, in every sense of the word, a nation.

Bouquets.

"Canada is no longer a fringe of territory on the border of the United States. We are going towards the north, in the climate where strong races live and prosper. We are building a new nation in the western hemisphere, prosperous, God-fearing, self-reliant, progressive.

"Canada extends to you the hand of fellowship in the great work of making of America, the whole of America, what God intended it should be, a land of liberty, freedom and civilization.

Foster Friendliness.

"Let us all, brethren alike in our common ideals and common aspirations, resolve, each in his own sphere, to do all that in him lies to foster friendly feelings, come what may, with the mother country, the greatest empire in the world's history, and the common mother of our North American nations. Let there be peace between the United States and the British Empire and Canada, her eldest daughter, and the peace of the western world, at least, is for all time assured, and a tremendous influence will be exercised for the good of the world at large."

ESKIMO CUSTOMS.

Suicide Not Considered Wrong But Very Rarely Resorted To.

Speaking before the members of the Royal Geographical Society recently Captain Amundsen dealt with his voyage in the Gjoa to the region round the earth's north magnetic pole.

Dealing with life amongst the Eskimo tribes, he said it was not unusual to find marriages where the wife had two husbands. Suicide was not considered wrong, but it was only resorted to in cases where the pain of illness was too great to be borne. Murder was not unknown.

On one occasion a boy, aged 12, accidentally shot another, aged seven. The father of the boy who was killed immediately took the other lad out of the hut and stabbed him to death.

Kitchener's Many Narrow Escapes.

Lord Kitchener, to whom has just happened his third accident in India, has met with many hair-breadth escapes during his marvellous military career. He has, says P.T.O., been wounded four or five times in battle, he has been twice shot at by Bedouins, and once had a narrow squeak of being hanged as a spy. After the conflict at Omdurman, the Sirdar and his staff only escaped death by the merest luck, for they had hurried into the town before the order to cease firing had been given. In consequence, for several minutes shells were bursting all round the place where the general and his party had taken up their position.

During the campaign of 1888 Major Kitchener—as he then was—was hit in the side of the face by a bullet during a skirmish near Suakin. He was taken down the Nile to the hospital at Cairo, where, despite all the efforts of the surgeons, the bullet could not be located, the X-rays being then unknown. The wound was a healthy one, and very soon healed. The medical officers came to the conclusion that the bullet had worked its way out without being noticed on the passage down the Nile. One day, however, a tasty beefsteak was served to the patient, which he had no sooner attacked than he put his hand to his throat, exclaimed to the attendant, "If there is no bone in the steak, I've swallowed the bullet; I felt it go down." This proved to be the case.

Barney's Fortune

By Constance D'Arcy Mackay

Copyright, 1906, by C. H. Sutcliffe

It was spring in Ballymoran, and the turf had taken on that vivid green seen nowhere beyond the shores of Ireland. The pungent peat smoke drifted lazily against the intense blue of the sky. Thrushes sang on the boughs of gnarled apple trees that skirted the low stone walls. Barney thought he never had seen the village look lovelier; but, then, as every one knew, Barney was the most happy-go-lucky lad in the parish.

A thatched cabin of one room and a couple of pigs comprised his worldly possessions; but "Light of purse and light of heart," he often said, "is better than riches and the gout." He found only one drawback in poverty, and that was that he could not ask Eileen Kearny to marry him till he had more to offer her.

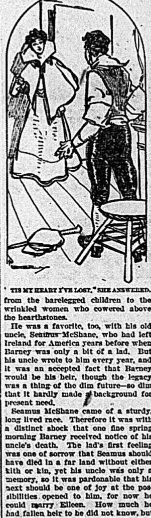
Yet hope is always astir when one is young, and Barney knew that with thrift and perseverance he could lay by enough; so, rain or shine, he worked in the peat bogs with a song on his lips, for he felt that every penny he laid by was bringing Eileen nearer to him.

He thought of this exultantly as he strolled with her in the long twilights when the wind was as soft as a caress and the scent of apple blossoms came faintly on the air.

Eileen was like an apple blossom herself, to Barney's thinking. She had the same delicate coloring and a grace as airy as the swaying of a bough. Yet if she loved him she gave no sign. If she smiled on him she also smiled on his cousin Hugh, a sullen mouthed lad far more prosperous than poor Barney.

Eileen divided her favors equally, and the village looked on and wondered which man would win. Now fate seemed inclined toward one and now toward the other.

The villagers themselves inclined toward Barney. Every one liked him, from the barelegged children to the wrinkled women who cowered above the hearthstones.



'TIS MY HEART I'VE LOST," SHE ANSWERED.

He was a favorite, too, with his old uncle, Seamus McShane, who had left Ireland for America years before when Barney was only a bit of a lad. But his uncle wrote to him every year, and it was an accepted fact that Barney would be his heir, though the legacy was a thing of the dim future—so dim that it hardly made a background for present need.

Seamus McShane came of a sturdy, long lived race. Therefore it was with a distinct shock that one fine spring morning Barney received notice of his uncle's death. The lad's first feeling was one of sorrow that Seamus should have died in a far land without either kith or kin, yet his uncle was only a memory, so it was pardonable that his next should be one of joy at the possibilities opened to him, for now he could marry Eileen. How much he had fallen heir to he did not know, but guessed it to be in the neighborhood of £40—not a large sum in itself, though it seemed like riches to the folk of that wind swept, famine ridden village.

As the news of Barney's fortune sped his popularity trebled.

"I always had a fondness for the boy," said Biddy McBride.

"'Tis a foine lad he is entoirely," agreed old Donnelly.

Barney carried himself modestly enough. He was not unduly elated at what had befallen him, though his heart sang within him at his luck, and his feet seemed scarcely to touch the earth as he went from house to house bidding his friends to the wake which he purposed having the following evening in memory of his uncle.

"'Tis no keening I want ye to do at all," he declared. "'Tis not in such mournful fashion he'd have us keep him in mind. But come and dhrink his sowl's peace with me."

No one in the village was neglected from this general invitation, and they arrived early at Barney's bare little home, where candles burned with a cheerful glow and where laughter and shuffling of feet half muffled the music played by a wandering fiddler. All the village was there save Hugh, and no one seemed to know where he had gone or what had become of him.

One of the children vouchsafed the information that he had been seen riding away from Ballymoran at a brisk canter, a piece of news to which Barney paid small heed, so engrossed was he in watching Eileen as she swung through a reel, eyes alight and step as swift as a fairy's. It seemed to Barney that he never had been so happy. He went about among his guests promising gifts to this one and that and hardly hearing the thanks they gave him in return. Presently the door opened and Hugh appeared among them.

"'Tis late ye are, avick," said Barney, "but ye're none the less welcome."

"'Tis from the postoffice I am," answered Hugh and drew from the pocket of his mud bespattered coat an official looking envelope, the seal of which was not yet broken.

"Belike it's from Uncle Seamus," Hugh went on, and the guests gathered round him, while Eileen held the candle that he might read.

Barney sat on a table near by, swinging his feet. He stole a glance at Eileen and noted the shadow the candle threw across her face and how her dark lashes swept the rose of her cheek. "Arrah, my darlint," he whispered to himself, "before this evenin's gone I'll have your promise!" Then he composed himself to listen to the letter.

It was very brief—brief as the hopes of Barney, for it was to Hugh that Seamus McShane had left his fortune. When Hugh had finished reading the letter the guests drew a long breath. Barney was the first to come forward and congratulate him.

"Shure, there's no one more deserving of it than yourself," he said steadily, but his voice was lost in the general acclaim, for Hugh had become the hero of the evening. The attentions that had formerly been showered on Barney were now lavished on him. His good fortune went to his head like wine.

"Since I'm the heir," he cried, "ye must all come home with me and drink remembrance to Uncle Seamus!" This was greeted with a shout of acquiescence. The fiddler started up "The Rocky Road to Dublin," and, singing and laughing, the guests danced out the door. A few paused long enough to say good night to their host and could not pass without a word at his expense.

"Don't forget my red petticoat," says Biddy McBride, "and the package of tay ye were for giving me."

"Nor the baccy ye promised," chuckled old Donnelly, "and the dhudheen I'll likely be smoking next week!" To which Barney answered gayly enough, smiling with set lips. He had kept up gallantly before them, yet, after all, he was only a lad, and when the last guest had gone and his cabin was deserted he sat down by the table and buried his face in his arms.

Deeper than the disappointment over the money was the thought that Eileen had gone without so much as a word. "She'll marry Hugh," groaned Barney between his teeth. "She'll marry Hugh. And, och, if there's a miserable lad in the country that same is myself!"

The door creaked on its hinges. "'Tis only the wind," thought Barney. Then something made him turn and look. Eileen stood in the doorway.

"Have ye left something?" said Barney, starting to his feet.

Eileen's eyes were very bright and tender.

"'Tis my heart I've lost," she answered.

"Hugh's a lucky lad, Eileen," said Barney, "a lucky lad, and—and—I wish ye joy, the both of yez."

"'Tis not Hugh that has my heart," cried Eileen; "'tis—ah, Barney, can ye not see—can ye not understand"—

"Shure—shure, it's never me ye mean?" gasped Barney. "Why, Eileen, girl, I'm poor"— Suddenly a light broke on him, and he caught her to his heart. "No," he cried, "I'm the richest man in the whole wide wurruld!"

Thus fortune came to Barney after all.

Two Sides to It.

"Look at this, will you?" exclaimed the real estate and house renting optimist. "In this paper there is a record of eighty-seven marriage licenses issued yesterday."

"Well, what of it?" said his partner, the pessimist of the firm, who was leaning back in a chair with his hat pulled down over his eyes.

"What of it?" echoed the other. "Can't you see? Those eighty-seven marriage licenses mean eighty-seven marriages. The eighty-seven marriages will lead to eighty-seven inquiries for houses, flats or at least eligible apartments. It's bound to stimulate business in our line, and we'll get our share."

"That doesn't follow at all. Those eighty-seven licenses represent 174 persons, don't they?"

"Yes."

"Probably all adults?"

"Undoubtedly. What of it?"

"Nothing," growled the pessimist, "except that 174 persons who have hitherto occupied 174 apartments will hereafter occupy eighty-seven. You give me a pain. Go away."

EASTER MAGIC.

(N. Y. Sun.)

Piously with downcast eyes
Out to church on Easter trips she;
Like a bird of paradise
To her pew devoutly slips she;
Heedless of her Paris clothes
Down upon her knees she goes.

As the deep toned organ peels,
Rapt in ecstacy she lingers,
While a furtive glance she steals
Through her taper, white gloved fingers
At the envious women that
Silently admire her hat.

Seems she to the swains who wait
After church to walk beside her
Saintly and immaculate;
And 'twere treason to deride her
If she cares to take the air
With the richest fellow there.

Clasping prayer book in her hands
What celestial thoughts consume her
While her ardent hopes she fans!
Who so base to loose the rumor
That this artless angel fair
Angles for the millionaire?

THE LEARNED ROAD MAKER.

(The Khan.)

Take a ride anywhere, it matters not where, and you will find the best part of the road where it oughtn't to be.

You have no idea what it costs you to put a dollar's worth of road where it ought to be, but you know what it costs you when that dollar's worth of road is in the ditch or going down the creek.

Be patient while I speak to you. It won't take me long. They say that the Gulf of Newfoundland will some day be an inland sea. I believe it. They say that the what-do-you-call-it carried down by a million streams will fill the banks so high as to reject the big water.

I believe it. For every day a road maker puts mud on the road, and, the first rain takes it into the ditch, and the ditch takes in into the stream, and the stream takes it into the river, and the river into the lake and the lake into the St. Lawrence—and there you are!

This country at great expense is engaged in the hilarious task of building a mud island in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Half our roads go there. And is there no redress? No. We will keep on till we build that island in the St. Lawrence if it takes our socks.

Will we get credit for it? No.

But we will have the great satisfaction of knowing that we put it there.

Of course, some people will say that it's a roundabout way to build an island; but some people don't know.

No, they don't know!

TO CURE THAT COLD

LOCAL DRUGGIST'S SUGGESTION.

Said Druggist J. S. McKeown, "This is the season for coughs and colds, and for the benefit of Belleville people we want to tell them the best means for a cure.

"Don't dose the stomach with cough syrups. It's no use; they only soothe a little—upset the stomach and do not heal.

"The best cure we know is Vinol, which contains in a highly concentrated form all of the healing, curative elements taken from genuine fresh cods' livers, without a drop of oil to upset the stomach and retard its work. It contains no sickening drugs whatever. Vinol heals, cures and strengthens the sore lungs and bronchial tubes. It makes rich, red blood, builds up the appetite and creates strength; in fact it is the best remedy we have ever sold in our store for chronic coughs, colds bronchitis, and all lung affections.

"We ask every person in Belleville who has a chronic cough or hard cold to try Vinol on our guarantee to return their money if they are not satisfied." J. S. McKeown, druggist.

Binghamton, N. Y., April 5.—Avery Woughter, a farmer, living near Campville, was burned to death yesterday in the fire which totally destroyed his home, barn and farm buildings. The fire started from burning grass.

A NORTHERN ROOKERY.

How the Seals Go About Setting Up House.

There are many kinds of seals, including sea-lions hair-seals, and fur-seals, the latter being the most valuable from a commercial point of view. During the breeding season great numbers make their homes on the Pribyloff Islands, in Behring Sea, and hither with wonderful instinct hundreds of thousands of seals steer their course through thousands of miles of sea at the appointed time.

The names by which seals are known are very strange. A male seal, over six years of age, is a "bull," his wives are "cows," their young are "pups," males under six years of age are "bachelors"; further, a swarm of them is called a "herd," and during the great seal season they congregate in "rookeries."

Old Bulls Arrive.

The first to arrive at the breeding ground early in May are the old bulls, some of them from 15 to 20 years old, and seven feet in length. Then in June come hundreds and thousands of other bulls and a great fight begins for suitable places on which to live with their wives and rear their children. Those who take up the best positions are attacked by the newcomers, and are often driven off to find other quarters less suitable. Some times an old veteran, heavy in shoulder and hard of sinew, will wage a dozen or more desperate battles, and come out the victor at last.

These fights take place between the males over six years of age, the others—the "bachelors"—keeping apart by themselves on the outskirts of the breeding ground. After a time the rookery is mapped out into little pieces of ground from eight to ten feet square, ready for the advent of the female seals. When they arrive the fighting among the bulls begins afresh with renewed vigor, but after a time they settle down into domestic life. A day or two after the arrival of the female seals they give birth to their young, and for the next three months the islands are one huge nursery.

Bachelors Provide Furs.

By the middle of September the old bulls have departed, and these are soon followed by the females and the young who have now learned to swim. The seal skin of commerce is obtained chiefly from the backs of the "bachelors." They are not at all timid, and it is an easy matter for three or four men to enter a herd in the early morning, pick out the finest specimens, and drive them inland to the killing ground. They are killed by being hit on the head with heavy oak bludgeons, so that the skins are not injured in any way.

To Prevent Sore Shoulders.

To prevent sore shoulders of working horses H. E. Cook recommends perfectly fitting collars, fitted to the shoulders by working the horse in them after a thorough soaking of the collars. He would avoid sweat pads under all circumstances, except where they become absolutely necessary because of lack of properly fitting collars.

MAJORITY STOPS ENQUIRY.

Motion to Summon Accountant Before Bar of the House.

Ottawa, April 5.—Once more the North Atlantic Trading Company is under the limelight.

Mr. Monk moved to bring before the bar of the House for contempt C. H. Beddoe, an accountant of the interior department, who went to Europe to audit the accounts of the company.

Mr. Monk pointed out that the House was entitled to know upon what facts the auditor found these accounts to be correct. For example one item with which the company is credited is a payment of $14,000 for "printing."

"Surely," Mr. Monk insisted, "we are entitled to know who are the printer or printers to whom this sum was paid. How can the House sanction a payment of $14,000 for printing when the Government refuses to say who did the printing?"

Mr. Oliver submitted that Mr. Beddoe was merely carrying out the policy of the Government. The Government and not Mr. Beddoe should be held responsible.

Dr. Sproule said that secrecy was the badge of this Government. The public accounts committee was a disgrace to the House. A partisan chairman ordered witnesses not to answer questions.

Armand Lavergne favored compelling the disclosure of the names of the shareholders in the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. Bourassa vigorously insisted that it was a most dangerous principle to allow a witness to defy Parliament. The trading company's contract was immoral, otherwise there would be no need of secrecy.

Hon. George E. Foster submitted that the public accounts committee was an auditing committee, and investigating committee, but for the past two years a partisan chairman and a servile partisan majority has strangled any effort to really investigate any suspicious transactions.

Upon division Mr. Monk's motion was defeated, yeas 58, nays 99. A party vote, except that Bourassa, Lavergne and Robitaille voted against the Government.

Mr. Fielding Will Act.

Ottawa, April 5.—Hon. W. S. Fielding has been appointed as Acting Minister of Railways and Canals. Although no official announcement has been made on the subject, it is understood that no appointment will be made to the vacant portfolio until the Premier's return from England.

PAID $800 SETTLEMENT.

Now Finds Himself In Jail on Serious Charge.

Owen Sound, Ont., April 5.—Last summer Dr. Parks, of Feversham, while attending the family of W. Patterson, of Collingwood Township, had his suspicions directed to the 13-year-old daughter of the house, whose mind is somewhat unbalanced. Direct questioning elicited a confession that for two years the girl had maintained illicit relations with Hugh Thompson, a neighboring farmer, who is 50 years old.

In November following Dr. Parks took the girl and her parents to the office of Mr. John Birnie, K. C., Town Solicitor of Collingwood, where depositions were made. Mr. Birnie wrote to Thompson, and as a result the latter visited the lawyer's office and made a settlement for $800, paying $600 cash and giving a mortgage on his farm for the balance.

Two hundred dollars of the amount paid Mr. Birnie handed over to Dr. Parks, and the rest he retained, the parents of the girl receiving nothing.

Recently the Attorney-General's office learned of the charge against Thompson, and Provincial Detective Greed went up and arrested him. He appeared before Magistrate Dewson, of Flesherton, yesterday and was committed for trial.

Mr. Birnie, in explanation of his retention of the money, stated that he heard rumors that the Crown was about to take the matter up, and thought it best not to pay over the money to the parents. Dr. Parks claims that the $200 which he received was in payment for professional services to the family, in addition to $160 which he had already received.

Provincial Revenue Expands.

Toronto, April 5.—Succession duties in March received by the Provincial Treasury amounted to $194,327.33. In March, 1906, the total was $35,596.74. The first three months of this year have netted $348,932.74, against $133,230.35 for the same period last year.

The Provincial Secretary's department received in the month of March $32,633. Last year in the same month the receipts were $17,328. For the first quarter of 1907 the revenue amounted to $98,667. For the same quarter in 1906 the amount was $50,104.

The large increase in the number of companies incorporated and the promptitude with which fees were paid by companies making annual returns account for the larger revenue.

Freedom For Ireland.

London, April 5.—The Tribune says: "Before the colonial Premiers separate we may expect to see them pass a resolution asking that freedom under the crown which they so fully enjoy shall be extended to Ireland. So far as the Government is concerned the resolution will be not only warmly received, but immediately acted upon.

Charged With Murder.

Montreal, April 5.—Wm. Simpson, the young farmer of Hudson Heights, who shot his two infant children and then tried to kill himself, has been placed under arrest on a charge of murder at the Notre Dame Hospital, where he lies hovering between life and death. He was reported as somewhat better last night.

DISFIGURING FACE SORES

SENSATIONAL ILLUSTRATION OF THE POWER OF ZAM-BUK

Following are the details of one of the most interesting and, at the same time, most sensational cures of skin disease ever reported, and once again the credit goes to Zam-Buk, the great herbal healer. Mr. H. Wright, of Inverness, Cape Breton, is the subject. He says: "In August, 1902, while being shaved I sustained a cut on my face just under the left ear. I was then a sailor and on the eve of a voyage. Soon after we sailed, blood poison set in and I found that sores were spreading all along the side of my head. The poison ran along like a creeping ivy plant under the skin and at intervals sending up an ulcer which discharged. I was soon in a terrible state! The steward, and everybody with a knowledge of the medicine chest, tried their best, but the ulcers and sores would not heal. I tried doctors in New Orleans where we first touched at—no cure. From thence to Hamburg, Germany—no cure. Then to North Shields, England—no cure. Back again to Canada, still suffering and trying all sorts of things in vain. Then back to Shields—no cure. Out again for Port Eads, but had to abandon the voyage through bad weather and put into London, England. While there I was treated at the leading skin hospitals, but the sores did not close, no matter how treated. From there I went to Cardiff, and while there a friend said, 'You can still be cured! Try Zam-Buk!' I hardly believed it possible, but I took a supply of Zam-Buk on board, as we were sailing for Canada that night. The sores were at that time so terribly painful that I could hardly bear to touch them. I anointed them with Zam-Buk and kept on applying it regularly. In a few days the sores showed signs of healing. Zam-Buk seemed to take out all the soreness and kill the poison. By the time we reached Montreal, to my amazement and delight, every one of the sores was closed. To-day my skin is sound and healthy. I am cured completely and I owe it to Zam-Buk. There is little wonder, therefore, that I am so enthusiastic in my praise of this great balm."

WHY IS ZAM-BUK SO POPULAR?

There are several reasons: Because it cures where ordinary ointments fail, as in the above case. Because of its unquestioned purity. Because of its herbal composition. Because it is free from all trace of animal oil or fat or mineral coloring. Because, while its application eases pain and soothes wounds and injuries, it is so highly antiseptic that it kills all disease germs instantly, thus preventing inflammation and suppuration.

WHAT IT CURES.—Zam-Buk cures pimples and face sores, eczema, ulcers, scalp sores, ringworms, abscesses, bad leg, chronic sores, piles, varicose ulcers, abrasions, cuts, scalds, burns, blood poison, itch, barber's rash and all other skin diseases. Rubbed over the chest it eases the tightness due to colds and chills, used as an embrocation cures rheumatism, neuralgia, etc. All druggists and stores sell at 50c. a box, post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price. 6 boxes sent for $2.5

THE HOME "FIRST-AID."

BY WYMOND CAREY.

Copyright (1906) by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

"Yvonne," he gasped. "What do you here?"

"I was born in this village," she answered, "my mother, she lives here. She is old, my mother."

"You—born here?"

"Surely, Monseigneur. It is the truth."

Andre shivered. Half an hour ago how near his mother, who was old too, had been to praying for the soul of her only son. And she had been spared that pain by the courtesy of a beardless chevalier.

"And what do you now in the churchyard?" he asked.

"I come to say my prayers for the little Marquise Marie. She is in the bosom of the good God, is our little Marquise, but I say a prayer for her soul when I am happy."

"And why do you pray for the Marquise Marie?" he asked.

"Because surely she is our Marquise. That other"—she waved a hand at the twinkling lights of the noble chateau—"the King gave to us, but there is only one Marquise for us here, the little lady Marie, who is dead. Dieu Le Vengeur! Dieu Le Vengeur!" she whispered softly below her breath.

"Peace, girl, peace," he said, half sadly, half angrily.

"Monseigneur," Yvonne whispered, "Monseigneur loves the Marquise Denise——"

"Who told you that?" he demanded so fiercely that Yvonne shrank back.

"It was the wise woman," she answered, "the wise woman of 'The Cock with the Spurs of Gold,' who knows everything. Ah! if Monseigneur would go to the wise woman she would tell him how he might win the Marquise Denise. Did she not give me back my lover, did she not tell me where to find again my spotted cow, did she not tell me that Monseigneur would be here to-day?"

"She told you that?" he gasped.

"Yes, Monseigneur."

Andre sat down on the tombstone in the supremest amazement and confusion. What did it, could it mean?

"I will pray," Yvonne went on in her innocent, soft voice, "to our little Marquise that Monseigneur may marry the Marquise Denise."

"Why?" Andre asked.

"Because then Monseigneur will be our lord and we will be his serfs."

"You would like to be my serf, Yvonne?" he demanded, putting his hand on her shoulder, and he could feel her tremble.

"Surely, surely," she answered.

"Then you shall—some day you shall, I swear it."

A gust of hot passion swept over him. She was not pretty, this peasant wench, but she had a noble figure, and the comfort of a woman's caress in that hour of abasement appealed with an irresistible sweetness to his wounded spirit. Something, however, checked his arm that was about to slip round her—as if Yvonne herself by a mysterious power paralysed his passion. Yet she made no effort to escape, and under his hand on her plump shoulder he could feel that she, too, was in the grip of strong emotion.

His arm dropped to his side.

"Monseigneur will go to the wise soothsayer," she said very quietly, "for she can help him better than any peasant wench."

And then Andre laughed. The gaiety of yesterday had suddenly remastered him. He forgot the shamed sword, the Chevalier, and that infernal court with its smoking torches. Denise should yet be his, and this strange girl his serf.

"Why, then, I will seek this wise woman," he answered lightly, "before I go to the war. I promise, Yvonne."

And so he left her to her prayers at the tomb of the child who should have been her lord. But she did not pray very long. Indeed, had Andre cared he might have seen her wrapped in her coarse cloak walking swiftly towards the twinkling lights of the great chateau, and she sang as she had sung on the back of her spotted cow.

CHAPTER VI.

It was a strangely superstitious age this age of Louis XV., strangely superstitious and strangely enlightened. On the one side the illuminated philosophers of the rising school of Voltaire, on the other a society ready to be gulled by every charlatan, quack or sorceress clever enough to exploit the depths of human credulity. You shall read in the fascinating memoirs of that century how the male and female adventurers tricked to their immense profit that polished, gallant, cynical, and light-hearted noblesse which made the glory of the Court. And Andre was a true child of his age. Yvonne's mystifying remarks had stirred all the superstition and awe lurking behind his hollow homage to the established religion, and human curiosity whetted this stimulus of superstition. He scented, in fact, an agreeable adventure in a visit to this mysterious witch.

But first he consulted his friend Henri, Comte de St. Benoit, like himself a Chevau-leger de la Garde, and like himself notorious for his skill with the sword and for his countless gallantries. Was it not St. Benoit who had taken his place in rousing the jealousy of the Comte des Forges and who had also been obliged to give the hot-headed husband the quietus of a flesh wound?

Henri of course knew all about the wise woman. Was she not the talk of the bel monde?

"She won't see you," he said. "She only prophesies to women, and very few of them. I tried to bring her to book, but her girl, a devilish saucy grisette with a roving eye and a skittish pout, shut the door in my face, by Madame's orders, if you please."

"And you went away?"

"No, indeed, I put my knee against the door and said that as I couldn't pay Madame I must pay her. Not the first time the hussy has been kissed, and it won't be the last. You, too, will discover the jade hasn't the dislike to men that her mistress has."

"What will you wager she will not see me—the mistress?"

"A kiss from my Diane of the ballet. I'll bet, too, Madame is not at home at all, for she comes and goes like a will-o'-the-wisp. But if you do see her she'll tell you something cursedly disagreeable. She frightened the poor Des Forges, your Comtesse and mine, into hysterics, and," his voice dropped, "she warned the Duchesse de Chateauroux she had only three weeks to live—and it was all the poor thing had. Don't go to her, my dear Andre; she'll see you in her crystal globe, face upwards in a heap of dead with an English sword in your guts."

Needless to say, perhaps, that afternoon saw Andre at the tavern called "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold," which, save for a brand-new sign-board, had all the appearance of a farmhouse hastily turned into an inn. Buried in the woods between Paris and Versailles it was exactly suited for a rendezvous to which all might repair without the world being any the wiser. Andre had carefully disguised himself, and as he rapped on the door his appearance suggested rather the comfortable bourgeois that the noble Capitaine-Lieutenant des Chevau-legers de la Garde. To his surprise he won his wager with greater ease than he had dreamed.

The saucy grisette, whose demure demeanor could not conceal the shifty falseness of her roving eyes, took to her mistress the name he gave, the "Sieur de Coutances," and then, to his joy, speedily ushered him with no little ogling into an empty, low-beamed parlor, which was simply the apartment of a woman who could indulge her love of luxury. Of the sorceress trade there were no traces unless you counted for such an enormous black cat with the most ferocious whiskers, who arched his back on Andre's entrance and glared at him with diabolical yellow eyes—a cat to make the flesh creep and bristle as did his whiskers.

"Welcome, Vicomte, welcome!"

Andre found himself staring in the dim light with intense surprise, not at a wizened hag, but at a young woman scarcely more than five-and-twenty, dressed in flowing coal-black draperies which made her wealth of fair hair, blue eyes, and dazzling skin all the more startling. Her dress was wide open at the throat and on her breast flashed an exquisite diamond cross. And what a figure! Those flowing draperies, that step forward revealed a woman perfectly shaped in every limb. It was therefore a shame that above her upper lip there was the suggestion of a dark moustache, though it added in the most extraordinary way to the weird effect of her appearance.

"Welcome, Vicomte, welcome!" she repeated, but she offered him no salute save a wave of her finely shaped hand towards a chair.

"I am not a vicomte," Andre answered doggedly.

"Then when did the Vicomte de Nerac lose his rank?" she asked quickly, and laughed at his obvious embarrassment. "Ah, Vicomte, if I were not able to divine who my visitors were I should not have a trinket like this—" she patted her diamond cross, stooped and lifted the huge cat and stroked it gently with her chin.

"And what can I do for you?" she demanded, coming closer.

"My faith, but I do not know," he answered. The faint perfume of her person was puzzling him sorely. But in truth he was familiar with the perfume of so many women that it was hopeless to expect an answer to the question.

"Nor do I," the woman answered, still laughing, and her laugh was like the purr of her cat. "In any case, Monsieur le Vicomte must wait. A lady is already here to see me. No, it is not necessary to retire. In spite of what I have said, you doubt my powers; therefore you shall listen while she and I talk."

She pointed to a large screen and Andre, now burning with curiosity, gladly seated himself behind it. The woman with the cat still in her arms promptly flung herself on to a long sofa and rang her handbell.

"Introduce Madame," she said to the girl, "Madame's fille de chambre must wait without."

The visitor, Andre decided was young. Her trim figure, the coquettish pose of her head, the graceful dignity of her carriage filled him with the liveliest regret that he could not see her face, which was thickly veiled. She came to an abrupt halt in the centre of the room—for the woman on the sofa never stirred. Clearly she, too, had expected something very different.

"Your name, Madame?" asked the sorceress abruptly.

"Mademoiselle, if it please you," the visitor corrected, "Mademoiselle Lucie Marie Villefranche."

Andre was listening now with all his ears. Where before had he heard that crisp, alluring voice?

"Bien, Madame."

"Mademoiselle—" persisted the visitor, nettled.

"Then why does Mademoiselle wear a wedding-ring?"

The visitor made an impatient movement, bit her lip, and petulantly drew off her glove. On the hand she triumphantly held out there was no sign of a wedding-ring.

"It is in Madame's pocket," the sorceress said calmly. "But it is of as little importance as is Madame's husband to her."

The visitor checked an indignant reply and simply glared through her veil.

Excellent fun, thought Andre, when you set one woman against another—and such women!

"Give me your hand," the sorceress proceeded, and she inspected it with the greatest care, the owner watching her with ill-concealed anxiety. "I see a crown in the palm which I cannot understand," she said slowly, a "crown reversed. A beautiful hand," she murmured, "beautiful and strong. The hand of a morceau de roi."

Madame Villefranche uttered a sharp cry, almost of triumph. "Morceau de roi," she repeated. "Morceau de roi. That is strange. You have heard perhaps that long ago another soothsayer also said the same."

"I must consult the orb," the other replied as if she did not hear, and she gazed long and silently at the crystal circle which she produced from its resting-place beside the diamond cross. "Yes, it is quite clear now."

"What do you see?" was the eager question.

"A great gallery—it is I think the Salon d'Hercule at Versailles—there are many men and women in it, finely dressed—I see a lady in a rose-colored satin in their centre—it is her favorite color—they pay court to her——"

"Ah!" Madame Villefranche had stood up. Her hand went involuntarily to her heart.

"One enters with his hat on"—the sorceress jerked out slowly—"he keeps it on—he advances as they bow—he takes his hat off—it is the King—he kisses the hand of the woman in rose-colored satin—she salutes——"

"Mon Dieu!" Madame Villefranche suddenly kneeled beside her. Andre, as excited as she was, crawled forward so as not to lose a word.

"I see her again"—the woman proceeded after a pause—"she gives orders to ministers—she makes generals—she tramples on all who oppose her—the King is her slave—ah! the crystal is disturbed—no—no—there is much unhappiness—the land is poor—there are jealousies, strifes, quarrels, wars—starving men and women cry out against the King and his mistress—but the woman in the rose-colored satin still wears her jewels—she does not hear them. What is this?—yes, it is—a hearse leaving Versailles for Paris—the King looks out of the window above on to the Place d'Armes—he shrugs his shoulders—I do not see the woman in the rose-colored satin any more—I think surely she is dead and no one cares—ah! the crystal has become dim." She put it down and closed her eyes.

Dead silence, but Andre could hear the deep-drawn breaths of Madame Villefranche. Her hands were twisted in supreme emotion.

"And the face—the face of the woman, did you see that?" she asked with dry lips.

The sorceress opened her eyes. "Oh, yes," she said slowly. "It is the face of Madame d'Etiolles, born Jeanne Antoinette Poisson—your face, Madame," she added as she flung her visitor's veil swiftly back. The cat leaped from her arms. Madame Villefranche sprang to her feet; the two women were confronting each other, each drawn to her full height.

Andre too had risen. Ha! At last he understood. The visitor was no other than the fair huntress of the woods who had driven to see the King, in an azure phaeton, herself clad in rose-colored satin.

"Ah!" exclaimed Madame d'Etiolles, stretching her arms. "Ah!" Then she turned on the sorceress furiously. "My woman has betrayed me," she cried.

"Oh, no, Madame"—she curtsied as to a queen—"not your woman but the crystal and yourself."

The other threw up her head incredulously. "If you reveal," she said harshly, "that I have visited you——"

"I never reveal who my visitors are," was the quiet answer, "they always reveal themselves." She sat down indolently, but there was almost insolent provocation in the simple grace of the movement.

Madame d'Etiolles turned away. "And your pay?" she demanded sharply.

"As Madame pleases," came the indifferent answer from the sofa.

The visitor placed five pieces on the table, replaced her veil, and walked towards the door. "Adieu!" she said over her shoulder, but Andre could see she stepped as one intoxicated by a sublime vision.

"And will Madame remember the wise woman," the sorceress pleaded in her soft voice, "if the crystal be found to speak the truth?"

"Yes,"; she had wheeled sharply, a merciless freezing vengeance glistened in her eyes and steeled her voice. "I will have you burned for an insolent witch. I promise not to forget."

"My thanks, Madame." She rang the hand-bell, and Madame was unceremoniously ushered out. The sorceress sat reflecting and then placed the crystal in her bosom and took away the screen.

"It is the turn of Monsieur le Vicomte," she remarked pleasantly. "It is a pity I did not ask the lady to stay and hear."

"No, I thank you," Andre answered. "I am satisfied, and so was she."

"Monsieur is not as Madame," the sorceress said, fixing a penetrating gaze on him, "he fears his fate."

"Oh, no," was the quick reply. "My fate lies in my sword and my head. I am ready to face it without fear or reproach when and as it comes. But I will not know beforehand, not even for a crown reversed."

For a brief second her eyes rested on him with approval, and indeed he looked very handsome and noble at that moment.

"But Monsieur will permit me," she said gently, and before he could refuse she had taken his hand, "I will not speak unless he wishes."

While she studied it he studied her. What a subtle pathos seemed to lie in those blue eyes, those smiling lips, that dainty head almost touching him, a pathos like her perfume ascending

To be continued.

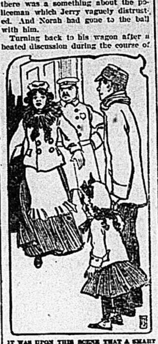
Jerry's Find.

By A. M. DAVIES OGDEN.

Copyright, 190[illegible], by C. H. Sutcliffe.

The morning, brilliantly clear, was frosty and cold. Big Jerry Callahan, blowing the tips of his fingers, red from holding the reins of the patient horse that pulled the half empty milk wagon, and contemplating the thought of arguments with angry cooks over the short allowance of milk that the weather imposed, felt his spirits sinking even lower than the mercury. And adding to his depression was the recollection of Kathleen—black eyed, pretty Kathleen—who had chosen to attend the annual ball of the Shamrock society with fat Tim Donnelly. Brass buttons have always attracted the feminine eye, and Tim as he strutted along in his snug fitting blue uniform, twisting his billy, was a fine figure of a man. Callahan admitted that, albeit grudgingly. Yet, despite his good looks there was a something about the policeman which Jerry vaguely distrusted. And Norah had gone to the ball with him.

Turning back to his wagon after a heated discussion during the course of which an irate maid had accused him of filling her bottles from the loose milk can, a subdued whimper caught his attention. On the curb, her white fur edged coat sadly dirty, her chubby face stained with tears, stood a baby, a tiny girl baby of about three years, lost clearly and sobbing softly to herself.



IT WAS UPON THIS SCENE THAT A SMART LOOKING MAID BURST.

Jerry scratched a puzzled ear. He could hardly leave her there alone. She was too small and helpless for that. Besides, the mite was shivering with fright and cold. Yet his duty was to deliver his milk. And no amount of careful inquiry could elicit more than the fact that her name was Muriel and that she lived on Fifth avenue.

After a moment's consideration he swung her to the seat, wrapping her well in an old blanket. The tot, reassured and happy, cuddled more closely under the friendly shelter and looked up with a trustful smile.

"Muriel's hungry," she announced.

When a second bottle of milk had followed the first, affairs began to look grave. Already short on his orders, the loss of two more bottles might involve him in serious trouble. But to fail those confiding blue eyes! Jerry shook his head as he whipped up the old white horse. The baby should not suffer. And he found himself watching the child with a perplexed frown. There was something oddly familiar about the little face, the rippling golden curls.

"Sure 'tis only that all babies do look alike, then," was his masculine conclusion. "They've all yellow hair and blue eyes."

Callahan's expectations were fulfilled. The last customers were very angry indeed when their full quota of milk was not forthcoming, and dire were the threats of complaint at headquarters.

"Sure 'tis my job that I may be after losing," reflected Jerry, with a rueful smile at the placid young person beside him. "But it can't be helped now," a true Irish philosophy coming to his aid. "So here goes for the station house."

In the precinct room the inspector looked up keenly as the Irishman came in, carrying a tired, sleepy bundle. Lost children were common enough, but today excitement had run wild and high.

"I found her this morning early," explained Jerry. "I met her on me round."

"White dress, white coat, pink shoes and stockings," itemized the sergeant rapidly. "It's she, all right. Why couldn't you have turned her in before?" wheeling angrily upon the startled Callahan. "Don't you know there's been the devil to pay about this?"

"Don't I know there's the devil to pay for the three bottles of milk she's drunk on me?" retorted Callahan. "How about that? It's a pity I hadn't left her to be run over by a team or an automobile. I'd have been thanked then, I suppose," with fine sarcasm.

"No talk, please," rapped out the sergeant curtly. "Send Donnelly here as soon as he comes in," he added on the telephone. "You wait," to Callahan.

It was a very excited Donnelly that half an hour later rushed into the room, a Donnelly who swore fluently and fast. Detailed specially on the case, for hours he had been scouring the streets in search of a child with white dress, white coat and pink stockings.

"And you to have had her all this time!" was his exasperated ejaculation. "I'm not sure but it'll be abduction that's charged against you. To keep me busy this way!"

"'Twas hard, I admit," agreed Jerry blandly. "It must be an unusual feeling. And whose child is it, then, that you're so keen about it?" curiously.

Tim Donnelly's face changed as though he had suddenly remembered something. With an elaborate appearance of unconcern he leaned forward to take the child from where she still nestled in Jerry's strong arms.

"Oh, sure that could make no difference to you," he said. "I'll not be keeping you any longer. Good morning, Mr Callahan."

"Good morning," responded Jerry. He had no desire to stop longer. But the baby, now broad awake once more, thought differently. She wanted her nice man; she must have her nice man. And, held by Donnelly, her disapproval found vent in no gentle manner. In vain the sergeant, the matron, sought to interfere. In vain Donnelly strove to soothe, to propitiate, while Jerry stood shifting from foot to foot. Her nice man she wanted; her nice man she would have.

It was upon this scene that a trim, smart looking nursemaid distractedly burst.

"Muriel! Oh, Muriel!" she cried, snatching the baby from Donnelly's arms. "Muriel, dear, are you cold, are you cold, are you hungry? Muriel, Muriel," in deepest reproach, "why did you run away from poor Kathleen?"

Jerry, taking in the situation, uttered a smothered gasp. So this was old Stockton's orphan grandchild, the little heiress to his millions and Kathleen's charge. No wonder Donnelly had been so anxious to get him away.

"She ran downstairs from me this morning," explained the tearful Kathleen, "and she must have slipped out under cook's very nose. Sure she might have been killed or hurted. Oh, Mr. Donnelly, how can I ever thank you enough for finding her!" with fervent gratitude.

"'Twas nothing," murmured the complacent Donnelly, "nothing at all."

Callahan turned away. Let Donnelly take the credit if he chose. It was all over between himself and Kathleen, anyway. What was the use of saying anything?

But the baby, perceiving his retreat, set up her wail.

"My nice man, my nice man," she stormed again. Jerry, reluctantly avoiding Kathleen's astonished eyes, stood twisting his hat.

"Sure, as Mr. Donnelly says, 'twas nothing," he stammered. "I—I met her on my rounds this morning"—

"An' he w'apped me up-an' took me to dwive an' dave me milk," put in the baby girl triumphantly. "He's my nice man, an' I love him. Kiss him, Kathleen."

"You—you found her?" cried the crimsoning Kathleen. "Why—but I thought—I understood," turning swiftly upon the discomfited Donnelly. "Didn't you say"—

"I said she was here," muttered the mortified policeman. "I—I telephoned she was found," his flush deepening under Kathleen's eyes.

"Oh," said Kathleen slowly. "Oh," a significant "oh," long and full of meaning. "I see. And it was very kind of you to send word, Mr. Donnelly. I thank you, Jerry." She moved closer to him, while a mute plea for pardon shone in the soft black eyes.

"Sure 'twas mistaken I've been, Jerry." The note of appeal in the wistful voice gave a far wider meaning to the simple words than their sense implied. "Won't you take us home? I'm sure Mr. Stockton will be wanting to see you." (Timidly.)

"I go with you, Kathleen, anywhere," was the loyal response.

The sergeant smiled.

"'Tis easy enough to see how it is with them," he commented, turning back to his work. "Well, I hope old Stockton will do something handsome for them."

And after a good scolding to Kathleen old Stockton did.

KIDNEY TROUBLES

The kidneys are essential organs for keeping the body free from impurities. If they should fail to work death would ensue in very short time.

Inflammation or irritation caused by some feminine derangement may spread to some extent to the Kidneys and affect them. The cause can be so far removed by using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that the trouble will disappear.

When a woman is troubled with pain or weight in loins, backache, swelling of the limbs or feet, swelling under the eyes, an uneasy, tired feeling in the region of the kidneys, she should lose no time in commencing treatment with

It may be the means of saving her life. Read what this medicine did for Kate A. Hearn, 520 West 47th Street, New York, who writes:—

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"I owe a debt of gratitude to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for it has saved my life. I suffered with Kidney trouble, irregularities and painful periods, and my blood was fast turning to water. I used your medicine for some time and it has made me strong and well."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made from native roots and herbs cures Female Complaints, such as Falling and Displacements, and Organic Diseases. Dissolves and expels Tumors at an early stage. It strengthens and tones the Stomach. Cures Headache, General Debility and invigorates the whole system. For derangement of the Kidneys in either sex Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is excellent.

Douglas Jerrold.

With his father managing two theaters and his mother and two sisters "treading the boards," it is scarcely surprising to learn that Jerrold commenced life as an actor. But the nimble, crackling, original wit for which Jerrold became so famous soon began to assert itself. At fifteen years of age he was contributing sonnets, epigrams and songs to the magazines, while ere he was twenty he had written numerous pieces for the stage. His dramas, both comic and serious, were characterized by a brilliancy which took the town by storm, while as a prose writer he proved himself of a particularly brilliant and original type.—Pall Mall Gazette.

TOBOGGANING A JOY.

Is the Winter Pleasure of Canadian Outdoor Life.

In an article on the delights of the Canadian winter, in The Morning Post, Mr. E. B. Osborn says: "It is in tobogganing that the winter joyance of Canadian life finds its ultimate expression. There is no 'Cresta Run' in the Dominion; the pastime has not yet reach such a pitch of athletic artificiality as to exclude ladies from its delights. A voyage on a well-made, well-banked slide with a cleverly-arranged jump is really a momentary heaven. Yes, and marriages are made in that heaven, as is forthwith explained.

She's in front, I behind. We are off and away
O'er the edge of the world in our tiny trim sleigh.
See that little red flag on the plain far below,
Like a clear flame of fire in the midst of the snow!
'Tis the goal of our flight on the perilous slide;
One in ten yards of fall and five hundred to glide.

Now we speed to a climax. The banks spin uphill,
From the dim gulf beneath blows a breeze silver-shrill,
The winding swift track whirls up out of the gloom,
The fir-trees fly upward like ghosts from the tomb,
Through silence all glist'ning we pass—like a star,
Down the sheer slope of Heaven that falleth afar.

Forty feet to the river! Our runners bite deep,
Then flash in mid-air as we take the great leap.
Earth reels like a drunkard, the depths of the sky
Turn swift as a whirlpool, the sun from on high
Is hurled to our feet, and the edge of the wind
Cuts keen—a sharp scimitar swung from behind.

Then backward she leans, and with sweet lips apart,
Droops her head to my shoulder; and heart beats with heart
(Like a rose in the dark is the heart of my sweet)
And the icebound deep river roars under our feet
Till we rock o'er snowdrift, and find a full stop.

The Spring Fair at Frankford Village

NEW DEPARTURE IN THIS PART OF COUNTY WAS VERY SUCCESSFUL.

Frankford, April 4.

This village was favored with the presence of many visitors yesterday, who had come in to see the Spring Seed and Stock Fair, which turned out to be highly successful in every way. The committee in charge are to be warmly congratulated. The fine weather, no doubt, helped to bring out a goodly number, and it was very encouraging to all concerned to see so many breeders and farmers interested in so important a meeting as this; for one could see the very best bred stock, such as horses, cattle, sheep and hogs, that the country can produce. The classes were well filled, not only in live stock, but also in all kinds of seed, grain, potatoes, roots, etc. These spring fairs will prove very advantageous to the farming community at large, for they are thus given an opportunity to buy the best stock for breeding purposes that money can procure, as none but registered pedigreed stock is shown. The counties of Prince Edward and Hastings have an enviable reputation for their good stock, and this was well sustained yesterday as one looked upon the many fine animals in all classes. Many sales took place, and high prices were paid for horses, cattle sheep and swine. The different kinds of grain, seeds, and potatoes were much admired, and many sales were made, also in this department, and fairs, such as this, will not only encourage the farming community in the growing of good grain and roots but also in breeding the better class of stock, and when you get that, and have it (standard) you have the very best that it is possible to get. Fairs as that at Frankford will be a great means to help the farmers on to perfection in many ways, as it is just as easy to raise the best in all lines, after one gets interested, and it proves to be far more profitable.

The Frankford Band was on the grounds and enlivened the proceedings by several selections, and the music was much appreciated by all.

The committee gave $500 in prizes and diplomas, which was an offer worthy of an effort made by the competitors in the different classes.

Below is a list of a few of the horses, their names, and owners, and the prizes each obtained.

In the heavy draught class there was only one entry, King's Pride, syndicate of Frankford, 1st.

In the cattle—Holstein—Mr. Mallory, 1st and 3rd in 1 year old; Mr. Mallory, 1st and 2nd in bull calf.

Mr. Bonisteel, 2nd, in one year old, 3rd, in bull calf.

R. H. Cole and Son—Short-horned Durhams, 1st in 2 year old bull.

Ayrshire — Stewart & Son, 1st in bull, 3 years old.

Geo. A. Ketcheson, 1st, 2 year old Stewart & Son, 1st, yearling.

PROSPERITY IN THE WEST.

Canada Is One of the Richest Countries In Natural Resources.

Writing in "Canada" recently Mr. William Whyte, who has an intimate knowledge of the Dominion west of Winnipeg, says:—With respect to my views regarding this country at the present time, at the outset I might say that the present exceedingly prosperous conditions prevailing all over Western Canada are but the realization, in part, of the hopes of those who, like myself, came to the country when it was in its infancy, and who had unswerving faith in its resources and possibilities.

Never in the history of the country has Western Canada exhibited such signs of prosperity as it has this year—the crowning of several years of pronounced advancement. The crops have been excellent, the farmers in all communities have made money, resulting in a large increase in business generally.

Happy and Contented.

Above all, the population generally appear to be happy and contented, and this is the strongest evidence I could adduce as to the general prosperity and advancement of the country, because without prosperity the people would be neither happy nor contented.

The development displayed is truly marvellous. The country is thickly settled, and there is not a town on either line that has not at least one or two business streets, well built up—the bustling inhabitants indicating that the streets were there for other than ornamental purposes.

Without Foundation.

Many conflicting reports about Canada have been circulated in the Old Country, some of them rather to the discredit of this country, but they are absolutely without foundation. Such reports could only be originated by idle, shiftless persons not having the ability to adapt themselves to the conditions of a new country, and who, instead of taking things as they found them and endeavoring to make the existing conditions fit their requirements, took the mean course of endeavoring to prejudice the minds of their countrymen at home against Canada.

One of the Richest.

In natural resources, Canada, particularly the western portion of it, is one of the richest countries in the world, and there is plenty of room and opportunities for hundreds of thousands of settlers who are willing to work.

If a man is willing to work hard he need have no fear of not attaining success ultimately. The foremost men of Western Canada to-day are living proofs that what I say in this respect is correct.

SEX AND CRIME.

Drunkenness Theory to Be Viewed With Caution.

Some striking facts are given in the "Judicial Statistics just issued in a Blue Book.

The returns as to indictable offences for the year under review show a distinct increase over the figures for 1904, over the latest quinquennial average, and over the previous ratio of such offences in proportion to the population. But taking the figures relating to all classes of crime since 1857, a gradual decrease is noticeable.

Sir John Macdonell points out that the men sentenced to death for murder since 1885 are about seven times as numerous as females. This fact is the more remarkable because the figures affecting women include cases of child murder.

The great majority of persons murdered are women. They are as three to two. Murder means to a very great extent the murdering of women by men. On the other hand the men who are killed by manslaughter exceed women by about two to one. The great majority of murders are committed by persons from 21 to 40 years old.

Most of the men and women convicted of murder belong to the laboring classes, murder by tramps or vagrants being rare.

The majority of murders appear to be committed in densely populated urban districts, seaports, manufacturing towns, and mining districts, on Thursdays and Saturdays, between 10 and midnight.

The principal causes or motives of murders during the last 20 years are as follows:—

Jealousy and intrigues, 92; Drink, 20; quarrels or rage, 68; revenge, 77; robbery, 50; extreme poverty, 39; illegal operations, 12; for insurance money, 3.

"Drunkenness," says Sir John Macdonell, "is no doubt the cause of many crimes, and is the accompaniment of many others But the theory of the close correspondence between crime and drunkenness must be viewed with caution."

Queen of the Barnyard.

Thirty-two million dollars is the contribution of the cows of Canada for this year of grace, made up of twenty-five millions worth of butter sent out of the country to help to feed the artisans of England, and for which they have paid pretty roundly. Of course, this thirty-two millions is not all, by a good deal. Not all the milk was sent abroad, and we at home have been beholden to the queen of the barnyard for butter and milk we used as well as for the millions that come in. So all hail the cow; long may prosperity attend her.—Belleville Intelligencer.

MAY HAVE TO GET COOLIES.

Canada Needs Fifty Thousand Men to Construct Her Railways.

So great is the railway construction work to be carried on in Canada during the present year that those who have the work in hand are in a desperate state of mind as to procuring the necessary labor. The lowest estimate given by contractors is that fifty thousand pick and shovel men will be needed, if the undertakings at present in view are to be gone on with. Where are these men to be had? How are they to be procured?

To Bring John Chinaman.

For months the idea has been afloat that the railway companies will use their combined influence at Ottawa to secure permission for the bringing in of Chinese coolies by the shipload to engage in this work on the understanding that the men will be deported when the work is done. In the British Columbia elections some of the Conservative speakers declared that the whole matter had been secretly arranged with the Ottawa Government to the satisfaction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, at least; that a contract had been entered into between that railway and a certain company whose agent was already in China booking thousands of men; that those men would be landed from ships at Prince Rupert and would then be engaged for railway work, thus evading the Alien Labor law. But this would not evade the necessity for each coolie to pay down $500 as an admission fee to the country, and it is said that the Government will be asked to suspend the collection of this head-tax.

Work Must Not Stand Still.

Pick and shovel men are needed in great numbers. There is no getting away from the fact that the ordinary supply will not answer. So far as organized labor is concerned there is no sense in disputing facts evident to all. Something must be done to permit the country to make progress during 1907. What can be done? If the leaders of labor object to the bringing in of the cheap labor, the inferior blood and low morals of China, what are they prepared to assent to? There is work to be done and no workers to do it. If the labor unions will recommend nothing and assent to nothing, something will be done whether they like it or lump it. Their wisest course, then, would seem to be to assent to the plan least objectionable from their point of view, which surely would be the bringing in of a specified number of white men from Europe under contract to perform a specified work and then be deported—the whole operation to be under the direction of the Department of Labor and under the eye of the fair-wage officer of that department. Let us at least have white men, an army of whom could be secured in Great Britain alone.

TO DUTY AND DEATH.

Another Name Added to the Roll of Canada's Noble Women.

Montreal has many stately monuments, but there is need for another in one of the most conspicuous places in the city. No braver deed is to be found in Canadian annals than that of Sarah Maxwell, the schoolmistress of Hochelaga, who on Tuesday gave her life for her pupils. The story is Homeric in its simplicity says The Globe.

In those few terrible minutes one woman was at work, untiring, unflinching. One after another she carried the little ones out to the windows and to safety, groping her way back each time to rescue those behind. There was not time to carry them down the narrow stairway. It was impassable with smoke and flames. Burned, blinded and bruised, she still battled with the smoke and flame until after handing out one little girl, the agony she suffered forced her to cry out, "Oh, I am burning."

But even then she did not hesitate for a moment. Back she went into the blistering heat and the roaring smoke, where, groping in search of others, whom she could not see, but whom she knew had not been saved. Fireman Benoit found her as he climbed the ladder and broke in one of the windows of the second story, himself almost blinded by the smoke and badly scorched by the terrible heat. He cried to her to come out and save herself while there was yet time, but she stayed on.

To the poet, the statesman and the soldier Canada has raised not a few fine monuments of bronze. These men are worthy of remembrance, but not more worthy, not nearly "so worthy most of them" of having their names graven on imperishable tablets as this girl, who with the agonized cry, "I'm burning," went back to duty and death.

Are the Colonies Underrated.

One hears this remark often reiterated of late, it appears to be just dawning upon the rank and file of people in this country that the policy of England regarding settlement of respective claims between Canada and the United States has brought into being a feeling among young Canadians, which may prove a source of trouble in the future. How far this is justified it is difficult to estimate, but the present expansion of Canadian affairs in every direction appears to be accompanied with a sort of awakening among English people as to possibilities of the change in the centre of gravity within the British Empire. This may sound bombastic and absurd, but British North America is daily approaching closer to the mother island, as the facilities for transport and communication increase, and a diminution in the cable rates would greatly accelerate the approach of the two countries.—The Toronto News.

Alarmist Reports.

English newspapers are full of alarmist reports of the cold in Canada and the fuel famine in the North-west, and there is a strong suspicion that some of the cables received are "inspired" by the anti-emigration party in this country, and American steamship agents who recognize that the tide of emigration is turning strongly to Canadian ports.

CANADA STILL UNCERTAIN.

In Regard to the Question of Preferential Tariff For the Colonies.

The publication of the official agenda for the Colonial Conference gives special importance to the proposal that the time had come for Canada to make some offer to the British Empire.

The official agenda shows how decisive is the attitude in all other self-governing colonies. In the Australian Commonwealth, the Government which has just returned to power after the general election re-affirms the resolutions of the 1902 conference in favor of preferential trade and adds: "It is desirable that the United Kingdom grant preferential treatment to products and manufactures of the colonies."

Reciprocal Privileges.

The Cape Colony Government, while re-affirming the resolutions of 1902 and adhering to the principle of preference for British manufactures "desires to impress upon His Majesty Government the opinion that the continuance of such preferential treatment to producers and manufacturers of Britain is largely dependent upon granting some reciprocal privileges to the British Colonies."

The Government of New Zealand, while also endorsing preference to British goods, considers it essential that Britain concede a preference to Colonial products, which are now taxed under existing British revenue tariff.

Canada Second to None.

Canada alone makes no suggestions, though, as The Times says in editorial: "Whatever form they took, the ideas of the great community, which is foremost among the States of the Empire would be received with interest and attention second to none."

It is felt that Canada's position at the Conference would be greatly strengthened if she came into line with these other Colonial utterances, by re-affirming by resolution of the Dominion Parliament her desire as was formally expressed by the Canadian Ministers at the 1902 conference that in the interests of Canada and the whole Empire, "the Imperial Government would accept the principle of preferential trade generally and grant to the food products of Canada exemption in the United Kingdom from the duties now levied or hereafter imposed."

Other Colonial Governments feel it necessary, without in any way interfering with British politics and speaking solely in the interests of their own Colonies and the Empire at large to re-affirm their attitude of 1902. A re-affirmation by Canada on similar lines would formally bring before the Conference the attitude of the Dominion Government as explained by Mr. Fielding's budget speech last November.—Windermere in Montreal Star.

FIVE DOLLARS A POUND.

Witty Canadian Barrister's Plea Carries Weight With the Jury.

There have been many witty Irish-Canadians in the legal profession. Chief among these was Mr. James O'Reilly, who was the Crown prosecutor in the case against the murderer of D'Arcy McGee in 1868. But Mr. O'Reilly had not always such stern matters to deal with and was known as the most brilliant wit at the Kingston bar. He was once employed by the plaintiff in a breach of promise case and, as his client was ugly, he saw that he must make a practical appeal to the jury.

The lady in the case was an elderly cook, fat as every good cook should be, and possessed of only one eye which had a peculiar and unpleasant glare.

Her Face Was Red.

Her face was extremely red and as Mr. O'Reilly gazed upon her lack of charms he felt that ordinary eloquence about beauty in distress would be thrown away. Her lover was a man of rather mean propensities who had faithfully devoured a large share of viands on the occasion of his regular calls. In fact, during their acquaintance he had gained forty pounds. Mr. O'Reilly obtained two photographs of the perfidious gentleman—one showing him to be a gaunt and emaciated creature; the other, after his course of applied domestic science, showing a plump and prosperous citizen. The members of the jury were deeply impressed when Mr. O'Reilly's mellifluous voice asked the question:

Avoirdupois Justice.

"To whom do these forty pounds belong if not to my client?"

The plain avoirdupois justice of the appeal aroused the calculating sympathy of the jury and it was gravely announced that, as the defendant had gained forty pounds during his courtship and as the meanest human flesh ought to bring five dollars a pound, the forsaken cook was entitled to two hundred dollars for the defendant's improved condition.—Canadian Courier.

Stay On the Farm.

They tell me that you are thinking of leaving the farm this spring. Don't do it; keep close to the soil. You are tired of feeding the cattle, the sheep and the pigs, tired of chopping the wood, tired of cleaning the stable out, tired of the store on the corner—tired of it all. You have visited the city, and its roar fascinates you. Everyone seemed well dressed and happy, and the laughter and conversation of the passers-by were music to your ear. . . . Stay with the farm, for it is a healthy spot to live on, where you get a complexion from nature's brush and an arm made strong in God's gymnasium, where you need no medicine to make you eat. Stay with the farm, where life is natural and friendship more real, where you can wear what you want when you want, and there is none who will criticize. Stay with the farm, with its spirit of trust and friendliness, from the collie who follows you up and down the line to the swallow who builds in the barn.—Charles F. Raymond in the Record.

Spring Top Coats

Because, at a pinch, a man can go without a Top Coat—sweltering in his Winter Overcoat or shivering without any over garment at all, through the early spring days—the Top Coat becomes a sort of—

Badge of Prosperity

An evidence that a man is getting on in the world. But the Top Coat must be correct in form, of right fabric and perfectly tailored. Our spring styles fill all these requirements. We have the regular "Topper" and the three-quarter length Coats.

$7.00, $8.50, $10.00, $12.00 to $16.00

The only way that you can fully appreciate the style, the beauty and the excellence of our line of Spring Top Coats is to see the Coats.

Good Clothes For Boys

The Boy has a right to wear out half a dozen times as many suits as his elders and he works the privilege to the limit.

Our lines of excellent clothes for the Boys' Spring and Summer wear await your inspection While we will not make the absurd statement that our Boys' Clothes will not wear out, we will say that we have done everything in our power to make the task of wearing them out as difficult for the young fellow as possible.

Sewed extra strong, extra good fabrics, durable linings and trimmings.

We've Splendid Suits for Boys at $2.50, $3, $3.50, $4 to $8, according to size, and we're right sure that we can meet your every desire in dressing the Boys.

HOW IS YOUR POWER HOUSE?

A prominent medical specialist of the U. S., in a recent lecture before optical students, said: "I know of no more appropriate comparison than that of Dr. Chalmers Prentice, where he compares the brain of man to a power house, or electric light plant, and the wires leading from there to the electric lights all over the city, to that of the nerve fibres running in countless numbers from every part of the body to the vital brain centre, and he compares this eye-strain to a short circuited wire, using up the vital energy to overcome the eye-strain, thus depriving all other parts of the body of its power to perform its work. I have in the past found a number of these cases with normal vision, who were sure their eyes were "allright," yet I have developed 9D of latent hyperopia. Think of the vast amount of waste nerve energy used up every day to overcome this amount, of error and still maintain normal vision." We use the "Prentice System" and Lenses in such cases with complete success. Consultation free.

Dog Poisoners In West Belleville.

Dog poisoners have recently been at work in West Belleville, and in consequence quite a few canines have been put to death. In nearly all cases hounds seem to have been the victims. A few days ago a fine hound belonging to Mr. W. Langlay was poisoned, and yesterday two, the property of Mr. W. H. Reeves, received doses. Two other parties had their dogs poisoned, but they recovered. The matter has been reported to the police, who are endeavoring to find out the culprits.

Bigamy And Perjury

THESE ARE THE CHARGES JAMES HAWLEY, OF BANCROFT, HAS TO FACE.

As an outcome of a marriage which took place in Bancroft about the 8th of February last, in which the contracting parties were Jas. Hawley and Mrs. Fred. Lott, daughter of Mr. Gilbert Boombour, of this village, says the Bancroft Times. Hawley was arrested yesterday morning on two charges, namely, bigamy and perjury. The case was called at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the prisoners pleaded not guilty to both charges.

Rev. J. W. Mitchell, pastor of Knox church, who performed the ceremony, was called.

The marriage took place at the home of the bride's parents, the only witnesses present being the father and mother of the bride and two younger sisters. Mr. Mitchell explained that the parties were all strangers to him with the exception of the father of the bride. After hearing this evidence the Magistrate enlarged the case until Thursday morning, at 9 o'clock.

An information had also been laid against Mrs. Lott, but she was ill and was not able to appear in court.

At Sign of the Scales.

DRUNK.

Charles Monahan, for being intoxicated, was fined $5 or 15 days.

PEDDLING WITHOUT LICENSE.

B. Sanford was accused of peddling without having a license. It appears that Sanford had been for two or three days selling fish about the city and it was alleged that he should have taken out a license before he did so. After some evidence had been submitted the case was enlarged for a week. Mr. Mikel appeared on behalf of the city, and Mr. O'Flynn for the defendant.

A Gruesome Find.

Yesterday afternoon, Henry and Wm. Taylor and two young Barlow boys were in the woods off from McDonald avenue, just east of the city limits, when they, with the aid of a dog made a rather gruesome discovery. The dog began to make considerable noise about a certain spot and commenced scratching away the ground. The boys assisted the canine in his search and a few inches below the surface unearthed a small box. The box contained the remains of a prematurely born child.

The affair was reported to the police, and Dr. Yeomans, coroner, visited the scene and viewed the remains. The box had evidently been only a short time in the ground. After obtaining what information was available it was not considered necessary by the coroner, to make any further investigation into the affair and the box, with its contents, was buried deeper in the ground.

AND FOR LADIES, TOO.

When the Dealer Does Not Have Them Send for a Catalogue.

There are a few stores among the 335 Slater shoe agencies where the Slater women's shoe cannot be bought. In such cases the lady who desires the incomparable shoe may easily get it by sending direct to the Slater Shoe Company, Montreal, for a catalogue. All sizes and widths are made in a hundred of the best styles.

The same fine workmanship and cultured design is evidenced in the finish of the ladies' shoe as that which has made the name "Slater" a synonym for fine footwear. The Slater shoe for men was first perfected, but the Slater shoe for ladies has been on the market for years and each year grows wider its circle of admirers.

Died In Tyendinaga.

Mrs. Mary O'Brien, a resident of Tyendinaga township, died rather suddenly yesterday afternoon, having been ill but a few hours. Deceased, who was 81 years of age, was born in the township of Thurlow, but lived in Tyendinaga the greater portion of her life. Her husband preceded her to the tomb some years ago, since which time she had resided with her son. Mrs. O'Brien was a member of the Roman Catholic church and was esteemed by all who knew her. Three sons survive, namely: Peter, of this city; James, of Campbellford, and William, of Tyendinaga.

The McMaster Band.

A good congregation greeted the McMaster Band at the Baptist church last night. A bright song service was held from 7.30 to 8.00, after which Mr. Edwards gave a very earnest and impressive address from the text:—"We have no King but Caesar." The Jews were called upon to make a choice between Christ and Caesar, and they chose the latter. Men are called upon to-day to choose between the world and Christ, and how many are making the same choice as did the Jews! The male quartette sang, "Fly for the tempest is coming," after which Mr. Cameron spoke a few words from the text Luke 9.51; "He steadfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem." Christ had a distinct and definite purpose in life, and that purpose was fulfilled through suffering. What the world needs to-day is men and women with a definite purpose. The men who have accomplished most for the Kingdom of God have been those whose lives have been the most strenuous. During the after service several signified their intention to trust the Saviour. The quartette sang a second selection entitled "The Beautiful Land."

Still Lots Of Timber In North Hastings.

Bancroft Times: Anyone who thinks that the timber is nearly all cleaned out of this country should take a trip over the C. O. R., and between Bancroft and Millbridge he will see something that will quickly disabuse his mind of any such a delusion. At every station piles of logs and cordwood are awaiting shipment, and some splendid pine can be seen. When the road is completed to Maynooth another fine tract of timber will be opened up.

Million Dollar Fire At McGill College.

ENGINEERING BUILDING, GIFT OF SIR WILLIAM MACDONALD, DESTROYED THIS MORNING.

Montreal, April 5. — (Special.) — Fire which broke out in the Engineering Building of McGill University, early this morning, damaged the building so badly that its practical reconstruction from the foundations will be necessary.

The Workman Mechanical Building immediately adjoining, was saved by a fire wall but sustained considerable damage through fire and water.

The loss is estimated at close to a million dollars, which is stated to be pretty well covered by insurance.

How the fire originated is a mystery.

The burned building was erected thirteen years ago, and was the gift to the University of Sir William Macdonald.

Case Of Mayhem at Bridgewater Village

IN A DRUNKEN ROW ONE MAN CHEWS THE EAR AND FINGER OF ANOTHER.

A most disgraceful row occurred at Bridgewater on Saturday evening between two men in a state of intoxication, says the Tweed News. The particulars were Walter Brown and Chas. Sprack, both of Bridgewater, who were drinking together and finally ended up by fighting. In In the course of the scrap Brown used his teeth and chawed Speck's ear and one finger somewhat after the fashion of a South Sea cannibal. Under a warrant Brown was placed under arrest by Constable Sedore and brought to Tweed Saturday evening. He remained in the lock-up here until Monday noon when he was taken back to Bridgewater for trial before Magistrate James. After hearing the evidence Brown was found guilty of common assault and a fine of $5 and costs was imposed. It was also arranged that both men sign a pledge to abstain from intoxicating liquors for one year.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

To-night there will be doings at the Albert College gym. The Port Hope Basketball team are here expressly to defeat the lively Waverlys of the Y.M.C.A. Our boys don't just fall in with the plan. The game is called for eight o'clock.

The Alberts have also been challenged to play the Seniors in a preliminary game. Dr. Clarke will be referee.

All the Juniors should be on hand at 9.15 Saturday for sitting for a new photo.

A mass meeting for all boys over ten years of age is to be conducted Saturday at 11 o'clock by the McMaster Band at the Y.M.C.A.

Last night going down the street there were cries of Fire! Fire! Fire! It was just twenty members of the Glee Club at the Y.M.C.A. practising. A noisy and a happy bunch!

Special for Saturday only. — Five cases of choicest canned apples, 1 gallon size, these are all first-class new stock; regular price 30 and 35c, to sell at 25c Saturday.

BAD SHOCK AT BITLIS

Earthquake Was Most Severe in Forty Years.

Eight Natives Were Killed—Three Hundred Houses Were Thrown Down—Shaken As In Jaws of Some Monster — Many Scores Wounded—Famine Prices Prevail —Great Poverty and Suffering.

Constantinople, April 5.—The following despatch was received here yesterday from the Rev. Royal M. Cole, head of the American mission at Bitlis:—

Bitlis, Turkish Armenia, April 3.—At ten o'clock in the forenoon of March 29 there burst upon us unannounced the worst earthquake witnessed in forty years in these or the Erzerum volcanic regions. Such was its force that our city seemed to be in the jaws of some monster who would shake us into shreds, as a mastiff does his game.

Down came the plastering, the furniture was overturned, cracks were opened in strong walls, roofs were shattered and rain poured in. During the first day there were fourteen shocks, and they still continue. There have been altogether twenty-eight shocks. Of the 4,000 houses here over 300 have fallen, and half of the remainder have been seriously damaged, about fifty dollars to five hundred dollars being needed to repair each house. The officials report that eight persons were killed by falling walls, but they are all unknown in Bitlis. Many persons were wounded, and many churches, mosques and Government buidings were damaged. The surrounding villages sustained heavy shocks, but it was in the day time, and so there was no great loss of life. The foreigners at Bitlis are the Russian Consul, Charlotte Ely, Lizzie Cole, and Miss Nellie A. Cole.

Famine prices prevail, and there is great poverty and extreme suffering.

The Wonderful Carp.

People marvel at the mechanism of the human body, with its 248 bones and sixty arteries. But man is simple in this respect compared with the carp. That remarkable fish moves no fewer than 4,386 bones and muscles every time it breathes. It has 4,320 veins.

McINTOSH BROS.

TO VALIDATE TITLES.

Licenses to Be Restricted—Local Measures Finally Passed.

Toronto, April 5.—By the bill presented to the Legislature by the Attorney-General, Hon. Mr. Foy, yesterday the purchasers of Cobalt and Kerr lakes are to be protected from litigation from parties alleging prior discoveries or claims.

In presenting the measure Mr. Foy explained that last year orders in Council were passed withdrawing these lakes from exploration and the present bill enacts that persons alleging prior claims may be dealt with only by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

Mr. Cameron (West Huron) and Hon. Mr. MacKay took exception to the principle of the bill. They charged that the bill was an interference with the legal claims of the Florence Mining Co.

Hon. Mr. Whitney said the alleged discovery was subsequent to the withdrawal of the lakes from prospecting operations by order in Council.

Hon. Mr. MacKay said it was a matter of principle. Either the Government sold a good title or a bad one.

Hon. Mr. Foy declared the honor of the Province demanded the protection of the bona fide purchasers.

Ontario Election Act.

The Attorney-General also introduced a bill to amend the Ontario election act—a measure technical in character.

The following measures were given their third readings:

Respecting Brampton and the Public Library Board—Mr. Smith.

To incorporate the Women's Christian Temperance Association of Belleville—Mr. Morrison.

Respecting St. George's cemetery in the township of Bentinck, Grey county—Mr. Jamieson.

Respecting the town of Berlin—Mr. Lackner.

To Limit Sale of Liquor.

Mr. Thompson (Wentworth) moved the second reading of his bill to amend the Liquor License Act, by prohibiting any retail licensee from having any agent or disposing of any liquor outside of the municipality in which he has his license.

Hon. Mr. Hanna said the bill was merely a discrimination in favor of the wholesaler, which he was sure was not the intention of the mover. He asked a withdrawal of the bill.

Mr. Thompson said a retailer in Hamilton had established a so-called agency at Dundas in competition with a retailer who paid his regular license.

Mr. Hanna replied that the case in question was now under the department's consideration.

With Hon. Mr. Hendrie, the Provincial Minister of Railways, at the helm the following railway bills were piloted through the committee stage:

To incorporate the Ontario Inter-Urban Raiway Co.—Mr. Currie.

To incorporate the Owen Sound, Shallow Lake and Wiarton Railway Co.—Hon. Mr. MacKay.

HOTEL MAN'S STORY.

Signs Declaration Denying the Story Against Hon. Mr. Emmerson.

Montreal, April 5.—Manager Brown and Mr. Humphrey, of the St. Lawrence Hall, have made the following affidavit and had it published in the local papers:

"As the name of our hotel has been mentioned in connection with the accusations recently made against the Hon. Mr. Emmerson, we wish to make a formal declaration that during the 20 years of our acquaintance with him, the Hon. Mr. Emmerson has never been turned from the door of the St. Lawrence Hall, under any pretext of any kind whatever. This accusation is absolutely false, from beginning to end, in so far as it concerns us."

NO HURRY FOR SETTLEMENT.

Scottish Advice to Mr. Bryce Re Canada and United States.

London, April 5.—(C. A. P.)—The Dundee Advertiser says if Bryce wishes a quiet life he will not aim at settlements at all. The truth about Canada is, she is becoming too big to have her differences with the United States settled for her, even if not quite big enough to settle them herself, and as the outstanding questions have lasted a long time without grave injury to anybody no great harm can be done by keeping them suspended. Meanwhile Canada will be growing up.

DEFY LEMIEUX BILL.

Striking Coal Miners Will Be Liable to Penalties Provided.

Ottawa, April 5.—The strike in the Nova Scotia coal mines seems to be going on in defiance of the Lemieux bill. The Minister of Labor telegraphed yesterday morning, pointing out that if an investigation was not asked for before a strike, then the parties would be subject to the penalties of the bill.

Huge Timber Deal.

Winnipeg, April 5.—Mr. Weeyhauser, the millionaire lumberman of Buffalo, has purchased from the Rat Portage Lumber Co. the timber limit owned by them on the Canadian Northern Railway at Banning. The deal was closed for $1,500,000, and is one of the largest ever put through.

Went a New Province.

Fort Frances, Ont., April 5.—A big mass meeting of both political parties was held at Emo Wednesday evening to initiate the movement in New Ontario of secession from the old province and forming a new one embracing Algoma, Nipissing, Thunder Bay and Rainy River districts.

THAW DECLARED SANE

On Second Anniversary of His Marriage to Evelyn Nesbit.

Lunacy Commission Reports That Oral and Physical Examination Show Accused to Be Mentally Sound—Jerome Protests In Vain—Will Appeal to High Courts—Thaw's Family Expect Acquittal.

New York, April 5.—Yesterday, the second anniversary of his marriage, Harry K. Thaw was declared sane by the commission appointed to enquire into his mental condition.

After a long delay in the morning, during which counsel, both for the people and for the defence, paced the corridors impatiently, and the defendant's family nervously awaited the result, Justice Fitzgerald mounted the bench a little after two o'clock and announced that he had succeeded in securing a report from the commission in lunacy. He had had two copies made. He handed one to District Attorney Jerome and the other to Mr. Hartridge of counsel for the defence.

Jerome twisted his copy around in his hands and began to address the court, but Hartridge tore his open, and glanced hurriedly through it.

He was so agitated that the three typewritten sheets trembled in his fingers, but suddenly he wheeled, hurried over to Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and whispered:

"Sane."

The other members of the Thaw family had leaned forward to catch the word. They fairly exuded gladness, and a rustle of relief swept over the room.

A messenger was hurried off to take the news to Thaw, who awaited the outcome in the prisoners' pen. He did not seem to be at all surprised, his placid manner bearing out the confidence he has expressed all along.

The attention of the spectators had been absorbed by the little drama being enacted at the table occupied by counsel for the defence. But Jerome, passing up and down before the bench and talking rapidly, or stopping short to shout a vehement protest against a ruling of the court against his plea, suddenly became the central figure in the courtroom.

Divined Its Nature.

He evidently had divined the nature of the report, it being noticed that he carefully prefixed all his remarks with the phrase:

"If the report should be unfavorable to my contention."

The moment the decision was handed down Jerome had leaped to his feet to protest vigorously against its confirmation by the court.

He charged that he had been excluded from the last session of the commission, and demanded access to the minutes and the stenographic notes of what happened at the final mental and physical examination of the defendant.

When Justice Fitzgerald declined to turn the minutes over to him, Jerome announced he would carry the case to the appellate division of the Supreme Court and ask that a writ of prohibition or mandamus be granted to prevent a continuance of the Thaw trial until the higher court had ruled upon the legality of the commission's course.

Justice Fitzgerald reminded Jerome that he had waived the statutory right of attending the last session of the commission by himself suggesting that all the attorneys be excluded from the sitting in question.

He then granted the district attorney an adjournment until Monday morning to prepare his application to the appellate division.

Jerome protested that the time was too short, but Justice Fitzgerald cut him short with the statement that the trial must be concluded forthwith.

Unless Mr. Jerome should obtain a write of prohibition in the meantime, Justice Fitzgerald, it is expected, will announce on Monday morning that he has confirmed the report of the commission, and will order that the trial be continued without further delay.

It was stated authoritatively late last night that Jerome will appeal.

The appeal will be in the nature of an action to obtain a review of the Justice's decision, and will be taken in the appellate division of the Supreme Court.

When the report finally fell into the possession of the newspapermen it was seen to be a sweeping victory for Thaw. It confirmed the reports of the excellent showing he made before the commission.

As to Dr. Putzel's leaving the conference yesterday it was explained he did not feel it was necessary for him to remain, while Messrs. McClure and Olney, both of whom are lawyers, were going over the legal phases of the mass of testimony adduced before the commission. Justice Fitzgerald himself announced that the delay had been occasioned by his examination of the testimony.

Britons Won't Stand In Car.

London, April 5.—The Liberal Government has started a campaign against the over-crowding of railroad cars. The subject was forcibly brought to the Government's notice during a recent session of the House of Commons by complaints of its democratic followers who utilize the underground and suburban railroads to reach their residences in distant suburbs.

A bill will be introduced at the reassembling of Parliament giving the board of trade and the railway commissioners power to order the companies to run more frequent or longer trains, and to impose penalties.

Captured by Tribesmen.

Tangier, April 5.—A son of Gen. Delbriel, Governor of the Spanish fortress of Alhuemas, on the Moroccan coast, was recently beaten and captured by tribesmen at Devasse, Morocco. Some soldier in the service of the rebellious leader Roghi, came up during the disturbance and made everybody prisoner. The Spanish general in command at Melilla is making representations to Roghi for the release of the prisoners, but so far without success.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Are Steady—U.S. Cattle Markets Are Little Changed.

London, April 4.—Liverpool and London cables are steady at 11c to 12c per lb., dressed weight; refrigerator beef is quoted at 9c to 9½c per lb.

Toronto Live Stock.

Toronto, April 4.—Receipts of live stock at the City Market since Tuesday last were large, over 100 carloads, but not being able to get the returns from the G.T.R. we cannot give a detailed statement.

Exporters.

There were not many straight loads of exporters offered. Prices ranged from $5 to $5.30. Export bulls sold at $3.75 to $4.25 per cwt. The market for bulls is not good, especially for those that are half fat and too heavy for butchers, and not good enough in quality to ship. These bulls are slow of sale and seemingly are not wanted for feeding purposes.

Butchers.

Considering the quality and heavy receipts there was a good trade for butchers' cattle, as there was a fair demand for outside points. Prime selected lots of butchers' cattle, weighing about 1200 lbs., sold from $4.90 to $5.15 per cwt., and one or two lots at $5.20; but it must be remembered that there were few reached the latter price—not fifty out of all the offerings. Loads of good, $4.90 to $4.80 per cwt.; medium to fair, $4.25 to $4.50; good cows, $4 to $4.50; fair cows, $3.50 to $3.85; common cows, $2.50 to $3.25.

Feeders and Stockers.

H. Murby reports a fair amount of trading in this line, with prices strong for anything of quality. The supply was somewhat limited, and more of the good kind would have sold.

Mr. Murby bought about 200 head yesterday and to-day at prices ranging from $4.50 to $4.75 per cwt. for feeders from 1000 to 1150 lbs.; $4 to $4.25 for feeders ranging from 900 to 950 lbs.; $3.50 to $4 for stockers from 600 to 800 lbs.

Milch Cows.

The bulk of the offerings of milkers and springers has been of common to medium quality, and prices have ruled accordingly. Prices have ranged from $30 to $53 each, with a large proportion selling from $35 to $45. To-day it was said that one or two cows brought $60. There were two carloads shipped to St. Mary's by Fred and J. L. Rountree that were bought at prices ranging from $30 to $53 per head.

Veal Calves.

Prices for the general run of veal calves were easier, owing to the fact that there were about 300 reported on sale. The general quality of those on sale was not good. Prices ranged from $3 to $6 per cwt. for the general run, but a prime new milkfed calf would bring $7 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

The run was light, and prices firm. Export ewes, $5 to $5.25 per cwt.; rams, $4 to $4.25; yearling lambs, $7.25 to $7.75 for those of good quality, and 100 picked lambs, 75 of which were ewes and wethers, sold at $8 per cwt. to a Hamilton butcher. This was the highest quotation given for Ontario lambs this season.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris quoted prices unchanged at $6.80 per cwt. for selects and $6.55 for lights and fats, with market weak and prospects for lower quotations.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

East Buffalo, April 4.—Cattle—Slow; prime steers, $5.00 to $6.10; butchers, $4.50 to $5.35; stockers and feeders, $3.50 to $4.50.

Veals—Receipts, 500; active and 25c higher; $4.50 to $9.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 3500; active; pigs steady; others 10c higher; heavy, mixed, yorkers, $7.20 to $7.25; pigs, $7.10 to $7.15; roughs, $6 to $6.35; stags, $4.75 to $5.25.

Sheep and lambs—Receipts, 4000; active; sheep steady; lambs and yearlings, 25c higher; lambs, $5 to $9.00; yearlings, $7.75 to $8; wethers, $6.25 to $6.75; ewes, $4.75 to $6.25; sheep, mixed, $3 to $6.25.

New York Live Stock.

New York, April 4.—Beeves—Receipts, 241; no trading in live cattle; feeling steady.

Calves—Receipts, 600; demand only fair; market weak to 25c lower; veals, $6 to $9.25; fed calves, $4.

Sheep and lambs—Receipts, 11,038; market full steady; sheep, nominal; good lambs, $8.00; clipped do., $7.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 2040; market firm; prime light state hogs, $7.35.

Chicago Live Stock.

Chicago, April 4.—Cattle—Receipts, 8000; dull; common to prime steers, $4 to $7; cows, $3.25 to $5; heifers, $3 to $5.25; bulls, $3.40 to $4.60; calves, $2.75 to $5.70; stockers and feeders, $3 to $5.05.

Hogs—Receipts, 18,000; 5c higher; choice heavy shippers, $6.87½ to $6.90; light butchers', $6.87½ to $6.90; choice light, $6.82½ to $6.85; packing, $6.40 to $6.85; bulk of sales, $6.85 to $6.87½.

Sheep—Receipts, 12,000; 10c higher; sheep, $4.25 to $6.60; yearlings, $5.25 to $7.25; lambs, $6.25 to $8.30.

Soo Still Ice Bound.

Detroit, April 5.—Although two big steamers are in the ice at the entrance of Soo River at Detour, and more are coming, the opening of Lake Superior navigation is not expected until April 12 or 15.

The ice from the Soo to Detour is from 12 to 15 inches thick. Above, the ice remains almost solid to Parisian Island. A drizzling rain set in yesterday and has commenced to soften the ice.

Thaw Trial Will Proceed.

Thaw Will Face Jurors Again on Monday.

Delmas Will Commence Summing Up--District Attorney Decides Not to Appeal--Jerome Will Ask Jury to Send Prisoner to the Electric Chair--Verdict Expected on Thursday.

New York, April 6.—The trial of Harry K. Thaw will proceed on Monday, when Delphin M. Delmas, leading counsel for the defence, will begin his summing up to the jury.

District Attorney Jerome decided late yesterday not to appeal to the appellate division of the Court of Appeals for a write of prohibition or mandamus to halt the trial.

Mr. Jerome may argue briefly on Monday morning against the confirmation of the report of the lunacy commission, which declared Thaw to be sane, but he is aware that Justice Fitzgerald's disposition is to confirm the report, which was unanimous.

The district attorney has many witnesses still under subpoena, but it is said he will press the trial forward to an early verdict, or what is regarded as more likely, a disagreement of the jury.

Immediately after the adjournment, Mr. Jerome set about seeking precedents upon which to base his appeal to the higher court. He was at his office again early yesterday, and then went to the appellate division building.

Instead of applying for a stay of trial he sought counsel among his judicial friends, and, it is said, to have been upon their advice that he re-considered his determination to press the matter.

It was stipulated some weeks ago that each side should have one day for summing up. It was learned last night, however, that Mr. Delmas may speak for two entire days.

District Attorney Jerome has said that his summing up will not require more than three or four hours. He will ask the jury to convict Thaw of murder in the first degree.

It is thought that a verdict will be reached on Thursday.

SAVED ON BURNING BOAT.

Steamer Destroyed By Fire—Sixty-Five Were Rescued.

Debbs Ferry, N.Y., April 6.—The steamer City of Troy of the Citizens' Line was burned to the water's edge here last night. All the passengers, some sixty-five in number, were landed safely. The steamer was destroyed with its cargo of freight and thirteen horses. Edwin Gould's dock, to which the City of Troy tied up, when it was found impossible to control the flames, was also destroyed.

The City of Troy left for New York at 6 o'clock last night, bound up the river for Albany and Troy. The fire was discovered at about 8 o'clock, when she was about eight miles below Debbs Ferry. It broke out in the hold amidships, and rapidly gained headway. The crew fought the flames for some time before the boat was turned shorewards, but when it was seen they could not control them the captain turned his boat for Debbs Ferry. When she tied up at the Gould dock, the fire had gained such headway that little attempt was made to extinguish it, and every effort was bent toward landing the passengers successfully. When it was thought that everyone had been landed safely, it was discovered that a woman passenger was asleep in her berth, and two Debbs Ferry firemen, Alfred Smith and Robert Wilson, rushed into the burning boat and carried the woman safely ashore.

HAD NARROW ESCAPES.

London Man Caught In Belt—Machine Bursts In Laundry.

London, Ont., April 6.—William Elliot, employed on the construction of the Greene-Swift warehouse, was caught in a belting yesterday and narrowly escaped death. He failed to notice the belt, which caught his clothing, and he was almost drawn in, when he managed to brace himself until the machinery was stopped. His shirt was torn from his back and his right arm and shoulder injured.

An extractor machine in the Forest City Laundry burst yesterday while going at a speed of 1,500 revolutions per minute and pieces of the machine flew all over the room, in which over a dozen employes were working. Fortunately no one was hurt. The room was filled with blinding steam, causing considerable confusion.

Dead Pilot at Boat's Wheel.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 6.—George W. Conant was found dead in the pilot house of the packet Lorena, near East Liverpool, Ohio, yesterday.

Without a guiding hand, the big packet, filled with passengers, who were peacefully sleeping, wandered through the dense fog and was running at high speed into a rock studded pool when Captain Richardson stopped the craft.

Conant evidently exhausted his last strength trying vainly to reach the signal rope.

Speaker St. John's Condition.

Toronto, April 6.—Very little change was reported in the condition of Speaker St. John at the General Hospital last night.

The physicians in attendance would not say how long this state of semi-weakness would continue, but considered that the condition of the patient was very encouraging, and are hoping to give out a favorable bulletin today or Sunday.

DEFECTIVE HIGHWAYS.

Municipalities Must Be Notified of Condition Before Held Liable.

Toronto, April 6.—Exit the unpopular section 606 of the Consolidated Municipal Act.

At the opening of the session petitions rained upon the Legislature asking for the abolition of the enactment which places the liability for accidents from defective highways on the municipalities.

In introducing the Government bill to amend the Municipal Act, Hon. Mr. Hanna stated that it was based on the conclusions of the municipal committee. Under the amendment the municipality must be notified of the dangerous condition of the highway ere it could be held liable. Mr. Hanna admitted that the new act might work a hardship on the stranger who met with an accident.

The bill was given its first reading, as was also Mr. Hanna's other bill to amend the Assessment Act.

A number of private bills were given their second reading.

Game and Fisheries.

The House went into committee on the Government bill "respecting game, fur-bearing animals and fisheries in Ontario." The Prime Minister took occasion to congratulate Hon. Dr. Reaume and Hon. Col. Hendrie on the work they had done upon the measure.

Mr. Graham was not prepared to endorse the provisions for overseeing as in the bill. The policy for some years had been wrong, to his mind, and he wanted to know if the Government intended to adhere to it. The law could not be successfully enforced by engaging a number of young fellows at $50 each. They simply regarded it as a sort of honorarium for party services and the work was not looked after.

Hon. Dr. Reaume said it was proposed to improve the system. The local men would not be done away with. The Province was divided into seven districts each under a game warden, and it was proposed to install an efficient staff at the headquarters at Toronto.

Mr. Graham enquired as to whether anything had been done regarding the reported extension of area held exclusively by the Tadenac Game Club in Freeman township.

Mr. Whitney replied that the extension had not been granted. The matter would stand until Hon. Mr. Cochrane returned.

Mr. Graham put in that he understood it was not the policy of the Government to give such grants.

"That's about right," was Mr. Whitney's laconic comment.

The Liberal leader also alluded to an organization known as the St. Lawrence River Anglers' Association, an international club operating in the Thousand Island district. This club had an agreement with the Dominion Government. He asked what the status of the United States hunters and fishers would be when their privilege conflicted with the Ontario law.

Yanks Have Best of It.

Hon. Dr. Reaume said he had found there was an agreement between the Dominion Government and the State of New York and "the Yankees seemed to have all the best of the argument." Subsequent to the arrangement the Fisheries Department was established in Ontario and the agreement had ever since been respected. He did not believe the Government would permit the clubs to keep it up much longer.

A vote in committee occurred on an amendment of Mr. Tudhope proposing to limit the number of deer a man may shoot in a season to one, or one each for units in a shooting party. The amendment was lost on a vote of 15 to 11. Neither Hon. Mr. Whitney nor Hon. Mr. Foy voted. Another amendment to strike out the prohibition against automatic guns was also voted down. Mr. Gamey's amendment to strike out the clause prohibiting the lumbermen having guns was, however, carried.

Mr. Studholme gave notice that he would on Tuesday introduce a bill to regulate the hours of labor of cab drivers and others.

DEFICIT IN PRINCE EDWARD.

Estimates Tabled In House Indicate Small One for Next Year.

Charlottetown, P. E. I., April 6.—Estimates were tabled in the Provincial Legislature yesterday. On current account it is estimated $328,499 will be required. On capital account $21,500. The largest items are:

Administration of Justice	$ 21,000
Education	125,000
Legislation	9,000
Public works	58,000

As only half of the increase in the subsidy from the Dominion will be available next year, there will likely be a small deficit. When all of the seventy thousand is paid a surplus is expected.

Pleads Guilty to Forgery.

Chatham, April 6.—When Harry Wiers of Charing Cross came before Magistrate Coulson yesterday for sentence for forging a $375 cheque on the Bank of Commerce last Saturday, another charge against him was laid by the crown, that he attempted to forge a cheque on the Standard Bank.

Wiers pleaded guilty and was again remanded till Wednesday to enable the crown to secure further pertinent evidence.

A big batch of letters from Charing Cross church circles were on the magistrate's desk, all pleading for clemency.

Just Figure out the Cost

What's the use of putting up a barn that will last only ten or twenty years, when, for the same money, or even less, you can build one that is good for a generation at least, and is lightning-proof, fire-proof and water-proof?

Use "Acorn Quality"

Corrugated Galvanized Sheets

and both price and quality will be right. They will cost no more than an all-wood building. The process of corrugating, renders the sheets so rigid that a lighter frame may be used, than with any other structure. Sheeting boards are quite unnecessary and only wood strips are required.

Then, the cost for labor in applying Corrugated Sheets, is, by actual test, less than half what it would be for wood shingles. The economy effected by labor, sheeting boards, and lighter frame-work, more than makes up the difference in cost between present day wooden shingles and our "Acorn Quality Corrugated Galvanized Sheets.

Our lightning proof barns are in almost every locality in Canada. We will mail you, on request, a list of users in your own county. Get their opinion. 44

TIMELY TOPICS.

The wind still blows from Bancroft—
It's coolness is a crime;
But we'll soon be sighing for it
In the g. o. summer time,

It will be a glorious thing for bicylists when Front street gets its new paving. If there is a bumpier old thoroughfare between here and the north pole we have no desire to be introduced to it.

• • •

It looks as though, with Sir Wilfrid and the Hon. Doc Borden both away, it may be up to Hon. Syd. Fisher, Adjutant-General of the Horse Marines, to lay the corner-stone of the new drill shed.

It will cost non-residents of Ontario $25 a year to hunt wild ducks after this, but anybody can go on a wild goose chase for nothing.

It looks, at present, as though the new bonnets may be confined to the house again, to-morrow through unfavorable weather.

Don't imagine, my dear young friend that it will make you any the less manly if you give up lounging round street corners and go to church to-morrow. The best and bravest men this old world has ever seen were Christians and church-workers. The world owes you a living, you know, but in return you owe the world and humanity a duty, namely, to behave yourself, shun the appearance of evil and advance yourself as much as possible. Just give up that Front street promenade to-morrow evening and chase yourself into some church. There will be a warm welcome and some good advice waiting for you, and, even if you don't take it, you'll feel all the better for having sat under the same roof with pure women and men who recognize their debt to the great Creator. Don't scoff when you read this, now. Any chump can sneer at good things, but no man was ever the better or more respected for doing it. And that's no April fool joke.

Many people will agree that there is more truth than poetry in the remark made by Prof. W. S. Milner, chairman of the College and High Schools department of the Ontario Education Association at the recent convention in Toronto. Speaking of the Ontario system of education, he said: "The boy of to-day is the same boy as he was two thousand years ago, with no more intellectual capacity. The more numerous the subjects the less he knows of each."

A large property-owner of this city asks us to make a suggestion to this effect. Why not, this year, instead of spending a lot of money on granolithic sidewalks, take the amount available and place the city's streets in good repair? Most of the streets, our subscriber says are now fairly well supplied with walks on one side or the other, whereas many of the roadways are in a more or less poor condition, some of them having had no repair work for twenty years. They might very well be attended to before any more cement walks are built. The above suggestion is respectfully submitted to Messieurs the Aldermen.

In the peculiar situation at present seen at Ottawa, one large-sized fact looms up like a barn in a fog, viz., none of the suffering Liberals or their friends has a word to say to or about Mr. George W. Fowler, M. P., who announced that if his personal affairs were discussed in Parliament by his enemies he would retaliate by discussing the sins of the ministerialists. Knockout blows are given in other places than the prize ring.

Here is a tip for Belleville liverymen, and if they hustle they may be able, by June to have built such a bridal car as is thus told of by the Buffalo Express: "A liveryman at Pittston, Pa., has had manufactured at Bridgeport, Ct., a "bridal coach," which is designed to do away with the custom of decorating ordinary "hacks" with white ribbons, etc. Any one who would ride in such a carriage as is described wouldn't object to any amount of wedding hazing. The vehicle cost $1,800 and is shaped like a heart. It is in maroon and black with gold trimmings. There are twenty hearts on the outside, including eight heart-shaped windows, two large hearts joining to form the dashboard and two more cropping out of the rear springs. The lamps, which have electric lights inside, are each surmounted by a Cupid with his bow and arrow. The coach is upholstered in cream-colored velours finished with old gold buttons, with two sets of watered silk curtains, and overhead is a cluster of callas in the heart of which are concealed red, white and blue electric lights. Four cream-colored steeds will draw this chariot of love.

A movement has been started in England to celebrate the bi-centenary of the birth of Charles Wesley. Though his fame is less than that of his illustrous elder brother, John Wesley, founder of Methodism, his services to the cause of simple, practical Christianity were great and lasting. He was born on Dec. 18. 1708, and was associated nearly all his life with his brother in the great religious revival which has had more influence in the English-speaking world than any movement since the Reformation. A man of fervent piety, a powerful preacher, though simple and limpid in his style, he captivated all who heard him. But it was as an author of sacred hymns that he won the place he occupies in the hearts of the religious people. He wrote a great many hymns, some of which are among the best and most admired in the English language, replete with pious feeling and of lyrical power.

"WHEN THE HARVEST DAYS ARE OVER."

"When the Harvest Days are Over," which comes to the Carman on Friday, April 12, is from the pen of Neil Twomey, a young American playwright, who, in a comparatively short time, has become one of the few successful authors who write for the stage. His latest work, "When the Harvest Days are Over," is reported to be even better than Mr. Twomey's other rural work, "The Postmaster's Daughter," which was produced at the Grand Opera House, New York, the week of June 11th, and received the unanimous praise of the press of that city; in fact, it was the first piece of that nature to receive better notices than "Way Down East," and "York State Folks," two of the greatest rural successes of late years.

A Courteous Letter.

DR. DRUMMOND, MASTER OF FRENCH-CANADIAN DIALECT VERSE, HAS SAILED OVER THE STYX.

Cobalt, April 6. — (Special.) — Dr. Drummond, of Montreal, the celebrated French-Canadian poet, who was stricken with paralysis on Thursday died this morning. He never recovered consciousness. As the author of "Lac St. Pierre," "Johnny Courtois," and many other dialect poems, the deceased litterateur had a continental reputation. He was born in 1854.

BASKETBALL.

Locals Beat Port Hope.

The Waverley Basketball team in connection with the Y. M. C. A., last night defeated a Port Hope team at Albert College gymnasium to the tune of 61-55. The game was well contested. It was clearly seen, however, that the Waverleys, although somewhat lighter in weight than their opponents, outclassed them in many points. Mr. Dingman, of Port Hope, and Dr. M. J. Clarke, of this city, handled the game in a most satisfactory manner. The Waverley line-up was as follows: Defence, O'Flynn, Moon; Forwards, Jones, centre; Berkley and Moynes, wings.

BASEBALL.

"Batter Up."

Caruso has a golden voice the critics all declare,
The music of the nightingale is sweet.
The melody of Sembrich is quite famous everywhere,
Madam Patti in her day was hard to beat.
The mocking bird is tuneful as he warbles soft and low,
But I'm waiting for the wild and wooly roar
That will burst like some tornado from the clan of Rooter's Row,
"BATTER UP!"

Don't talk to me of Jean De Reszke or Kubelik, divine,
Skidoo for Paderewski and Ysaye—
No operatic melodies can ever go for mine,
When I can hear 'em cheering Lajoie.
I'm longing for the "hit 'er out," or "soak it on the nose."
The mighty yelp when someone ties the score—
For the cadence of the rhythm chases all cares and woes
When I hear the umpire calling as of yore—
"BATTER UP!"

You can have your Calves and your Sembrichs, if you will,
With Sousa's band a-playing on the side,
The nightingale may warble and Caruso gayly trill,
But they'll never equal "Slide, you lobster, slide!"
Wagner wrote a thing or two that seems to have the call,
Rossini and Beethoven did quite well—
So far as I'm concerned, b'gosh, they're minor leaguers all
When play begins and I can hear the yell—
"BATTER UP!"

--Grantland Rice.

Arrested For 'Desertion'

This afternoon Chief Newton received a telegram from Whitby, asking for the arrest of one Alfred Fitzpatrick, for "desertion." Shortly after the message was received Fitzpatrick was arrested on Front street. The authorities at Whitby have been notified and this evening a constable will arrive to take the prisoner back to that town. He married a Belleville girl some years ago.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye-STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

Peculiar Methods Of Finance.

For dubious methods of financing the Dominion Government are a law unto themselves, and one of the latest extraordinary examples is that of the Intercolonial Railway. In last year's statement presented to the House they claimed a surplus of $62,000, which is about half the profits claimed before Hon. Mr. Emmerson took office this year. The Government has spent some $12,000,000 during the three years above what the road has earned, and last year the total expenditure on the Intercolonial was $11,200,000, while the earnings were $7,600,000. The Minister called expenditure for new rails, new engines, and everything else that is new capital, outlay and cuts it out of his ordinary expense charges. But as the new rails replaced old stock and as the new cars and engines are required to replace condemned plant it will be seen that this expenditure must go on and that there is a real deficit running into the millions.

Thus what was really a loss to the Intercolonial appears as a blessing since the department does not charge a cent to the expenditure of the year and even escapes the costs of repairs.

Included in the items charged to Intercolonial capital account in the fiscal year last past are a number incurred for electric wiring in stations. If this wiring serves for ten years, it will do well, and yet the Canadian people will have to pay interest on account of the cost of its installation for all time to come. The expense of moving an old station and converting it into a freight shed, with other charges of a like nature, amounted to $2,350, and all these were also added to capital account. The same easy way was adopted of disposing of accounts for $217.52 for ladders and $415.63 for Sparham roofing. Another charge against capital was one of $714 for putting twelve closets in railway cottages, and one of $88.90 for cess pits was temporarily gotten rid of in the same way. The limit was reached, however, when an outlay of $151.70 for second-hand spikes and one of $190.60 for second-hand pine timber were stowed away under the head of capital expenditure. We have heard of a paper surplus; it has been left for the late Minister of Railways to devise something new—a second-hand surplus.

Touching on this subject the Farmers' Sun, in its last issue, uses an apt illustration to point out the folly of such a course. It says: Two farmers, one in Brant and the other in Halton, purpose this year remodeling barns which have been in existence for thirty or forty years. If they adopt Mr. Emmerson's method of financing, they will not charge any of the cost against the year's revenue from the farm. Not only the labor involved in remodeling, but the value of the second-hand spikes and timber, in the present structures, will be charged up to capital—in other words, become a part of a mortgage indebtedness on the farms. By the adoption of such means these farmers would be able to show a fine surplus on the year's operations, but if they follow the same plan all the way through, and continue it long enough, the man holding the mortgages would eventually hold the farms.

Smoking in Argentina.

Argentinians, who smoke almost continuously in their waking hours, roll their own cigarettes as they need them.

Explosives.

The chloride, bromide and iodide of nitrogen are the most powerful explosives known, but their instability is so marked they are utterly useless. A mere jar will send off chloride of nitrogen with fearful and uncontrollable violence.

The "Dark Lady."

It is claimed that the "dark lady" to whom twenty-eight of Shakespeare's sonnets were dedicated was the notorious Miss Mary Fitton, maid of honor to Queen Elizabeth.

Bee Scouts.

Each hive of bees possesses an intelligence department which sends out scouts to discover where honey and other good things are to be gathered.

Artificial Eyes.

The artificial eyes proposed by Ambroise Pare were thin carved plates of gold, painted and enameled to match the sound eye. Glass eyes seem to have been of more recent origin. Pare's suggestion first appeared in his "Methode Curative des Playes de la Teste Humaine," folio 220, Paris, 1561, where he gives four illustrations showing the back and front of a right and left eye.

The first Derby was run on May 4, 1780, and won by Sir Charles Bunbury's Diomed.

THEIR TEMPORAL, PHYSICAL AND SPIRITUAL NEEDS

EVERY MINISTER OR CLERGYMAN SHOULD BE A PHILANTHROPIST TO ACCOMPLISH EFFECTIVE SPIRITUAL WORK.

No man is in a better position to scatter blessings and sunshine all along his pathway than the minister of the gospel. Many of them, however, forget that their office and ministry not only includes ministering to their spiritual need, but also to their physical and temporal needs. It has been amply proven that spiritual good can be much more effectually accomplished by the minister or pastor who manifests an active sympathy with physical and temporal requirements. Rev. C. E. Burrell, Baptist minister, of Forest, Ont., is one of those who, when he has the priceless blessing of health brought into his home, does not forget to use his influence and ministry to bless other homes. He is numbered among Psychine's warmest friends, because it brought sunshine to his home. And Mr. Burrell has two splendid reasons for the good words he speaks for this great remedy. The first and best one is that it cured his wife. Speaking of that case, Mr. Burrell says:

"Several years ago my wife was so seriously ill of lung trouble as for months to be unable to walk, at which time a noted physician told me that the next dress that I would buy for her would be a shroud. She used Psychine and is now reasonably well."

Rev. Mr. Burrell has also noticed the good work Psychine has done for others. Speaking of one case in particular that came under his notice, that of a Mr. Galbraith, he says:

"His was an extreme case; apparently, so far as I could judge, a hopeless case, and yet he is now so much improved as to be away on a visit. Previous to going he was taking Psychine and was gaining at the rate of 3 1-2 pounds per week, and was again quite well and able to walk about. The doctors absolutely gave him up."

Psychine, pronounced Si-keen, is not only a cure for advanced lung trouble in many cases, but is an absolute specific for coughs, colds, bronchitis, catarrh, la grippe, night sweats, pneumonia, stomach trouble and all the diseases that lead to consumption. The time to cure consumption is before it begins, that is, cure the trouble that leads to it. Psychine will do it. It tones up the entire system. At all drug stores, or Dr. T. A. Squalls.

The difference between a "white" squall and a "black" is that the former causes no diminution of light and is consequently more likely to find a ship unprepared.

Butterflies.

Butterflies have been noticed in the Andes up to height of very nearly 27,000 feet.

A Hare at Sea.

An English coast guard saw a hunted hare, which had been lost by its pursuers, swim in from the sea and land. She appeared to be violently sick, probably from the effects of swallowing salt water. She then cleaned herself thoroughly all over and went quietly on her way, having thus effectually thrown off her hunters.

So long ago as 1737 Jonathan Halls published a pamphlet describing a method of propelling a vessel by steam.

First Circulating Library.

The first circulating library belonged to Pamphilus, presbyter of Caesarea, who lived in the third and fourth centuries A. D. He collected 30,000 religious books for lending to his flock.

Cephalonia, in the Ionian islands, was known as "Lost Island" to the ancients.

The Footman.

The original footman ran before his master's carriage—for the purpose of bespeaking changes of horses, etc. He carried a cane with a large silver knob. The knob was hollow and contained wine for the man's refreshment.

The Phoenicians.

The Phoenicians were the first colonists, and evidences of their talent for colonization are to be found all along the Mediterranean and the seaboard of western Europe and northwestern Africa.

The Man With the Wooden Hat.

A young Scotsman was shown into the office of a great engineer at Birmingham. He was wearing a hat of extraordinary shape, and at his nervousness at meeting the man of fame he let the hat slip. It fell with a hollow thud upon the floor. The engineer looked with astonishment at the thing. The owner picked it up and apologized for the noise it had caused. It was of wood, he explained. He had made it himself, turning it with his father's lathe. The engineer thought that there must be something in a man who could think out and make such a thing as this. He forthwith engaged him, kept an eye upon him and gave him work of responsibility. The engineer was Boulton; the new man, William Murdock. The man with the wooden hat was sent away to Cornwall, and when he returned it was to light up his master's premises with gas. The mind which first practically applied the coal gas to the purpose of lighting lived inside that wooden hat.—St. James' Gazette.

Meat For Dogs.

The coarser parts of meat are much better for dog pets than the better part of the steak. A dog should not be allowed to eat chicken or mutton chops, as the bones of both splinter and are bad for him.

W. C. MIKEL,
Solicitor and Clerk.

N. B.—A statement is now on file in the office of the City Solicitor and Clerk, Belleville, showing the particulars of the proposed walks to be so constructed, together with an estimate of the total cost thereof, and of the cost per lineal foot to the property owners, payable in cash or by special rate. 6J3

Marmalade.

Marmalade, then made only of quinces, was known in Henry VIII.'s reign. The word is derived from "mermelo," a quince.

Rubies and Emeralds.

The ruby is found in Burma, Siam and Ceylon, those of the first named country being the finest, the so called "pigeon blood." Emeralds are found in the Ural mountains of Russia, in Peru and in Colombia, the latter—in the Andean region—producing the finest, that termed "Spanish emerald."

Belgium's Fruit.

In ordinary seasons the kingdom of Belgium, which is not larger than the state of Maryland, after supplying a population of 500 to the square mile, exports 103,000,000 pounds of fruit.

Telegraphy.

A telegraphic line consisting of twenty-four wires, each representing a letter, was established by Lesage at Geneva in 1774, and in the same year Bishop Watson made experiments over 10,000 feet of wire near London. In Germany the invention is credited to Sommering—1809.

A Meal of Locusts.

In the West Indies the negroes eat freely of the big grub found in palm trees. The fat, white morsel, which they call "grugru," is not cooked or salted. The aborigines of Australia live almost entirely on a butterfly known as the bugong. The flies appear in batches on the rocks, and the natives smother them with smoke from fires built below. It is said that a Hottentot, with an appetite made sharp by the simple life, can devour 300 fat locusts at a sitting and feel better satisfied than if he had paid $8 for a ten course dinner. The Arabs dry the locusts and pulverize them into flour for breadmaking purposes. The Moors make a stew of them, and after boiling in water for a few minutes they are eaten with salt, pepper and vinegar. The locusts found in Central Africa are enormous, and the native negroes cut them in two and fry them in fat and find them not only appetizing, but nourishing. A flight of these big locusts is a matter of tribal thanksgiving.

Snakes With Two Heads.

I have lately been assured by more than one of my friends that they have seen in northern India snakes with two heads—i. e., without a tail, but with a second and perfectly formed head in the place where the tail ought to be. They assure me that there are specimens in northern India museums and that these freaks of nature are frequently found by the natives. The rider is added that the natives declare that each head lives and performs active service for six months in the year in turn. The snakes are said to grow to about three feet in length. I myself have killed a small snake with two heads, but these were both at the same end of the reptile, a very different matter, which is, I believe, a well known freak and in the same category with two headed calves.—Pioneer.

Man and His Dress.

The well dressed man wears clothes that no one ever notices; at business, except in the very warmest weather, usually dark. No one ever notices clean linen, while linen soiled ever so slightly is very conspicuous. No one ever notices a hat unless it is of ultra shape, dirty or shabby. No one ever notices shoes unless they are loud or need blacking or are run down at the heels or shabby. No one ever notices clean finger nails, while those needing attention are always conspicuous. The man should not be lost sight of by the conspicuousness of his clothes, either from being overdressed or shabbily dressed.

The One and the Naught.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once sent two poetical letters to the "postoffice" of an Episcopal fair at Pittsfield, Mass. In one of them the first stanza was:

Fair lady, whosoever thou art,
  Turn this poor leaf with tenderest care
And hush, oh, hush, thy beating heart.
  The one thou lovest will be there.

On turning the "poor leaf" there was found a dollar bill, with some verses beginning:

Fair lady, lift thine eyes and tell
  If this is not a truthful letter.
This is the one (1) thou loveth well,
  And naught (0) can make thee love it better (10).

Occultism.

It is noteworthy that supernaturalism prevailed just as strongly at the other side of the globe among the aborigines of the new world. The coming of the Spaniards had been prophesied to the Mexicans by their caciques, and the prophecies were sung amid loud lamentations at their festivals.—London Onlooker.

The Hot Wind From the Desert.

"Khamsin" is the hot wind from the desert which blows out of the Sahara

FALLING HAIR STOPPED.

Baldness Cured by Destroying the Parasitic Germ That Causes It.

Baldness follows falling hair, falling hair follows dandruff; and dandruff is the result of a germ digging its way into the scalp to the root of the hair where it saps the vitality of the hair. To destroy that germ is to prevent as well as cure dandruff, falling hair, and, lastly, baldness. There is only one preparation known to do that, Newbro's Herpicide, an entirely new, scientific discovery. Wherever it has been tried it has proven wonderfully successful. It can't be otherwise, because it utterly destroys the dandruff germ. "You destroy the cause, you remove the effect."

How Pietro Paid His Debt.

By SADA B. CUSHMAN.

Copyright, 1907, by Mary McKeon.

Pietro eyed wistfully the shining shoes that passed him on the dry pavements. Business was slack and Pietro's heart sank as low as the hoard of silver in his tattered purse. If it would only rain, then the gentlemen hurrying by might need his services, but the blinking stars, half hidden by the smoke of the great city, found not a cloud behind which to retire, and Pietro concluded that he might as well close up for the night. The process of closing up consisted of packing his brushes, blacking and various implements into a small box and slinging the same by a strap from his shoulder.

One watching Pietro's closing up could determine the proceeds of the day's business. If he moved with alacrity, the jingling silver in his purse promised well for the necessities of life; if he moved reluctantly, pausing now and then to see if perchance there might yet be a patron for him, the purse was lamentably light and Pietro's supper must be likewise. Tonight he knew that the persistent craving in his stomach must go entirely unappeased, for there was no more than enough silver to satisfy the voraciousness of Isenberg, the money shark, of Water street, into whose clutches the lad had fallen and who found means of exacting his dues even though there was no money left for food.

"Aw, no use kicking," remarked Pietro philosophically as he stowed away his last brush; "I've seed worser luck dan dis here. Anyhow mother ain't cold nor hungry."

His philosophy deserted him as the poignant memory of the great soft eyes of his mother, wistful with longing for the sunshine of her own land, returned to him. His own eyes filled with unwonted tears, shutting out for a moment the sight of the stream of gay humanity that thronged past on its way to the opera. He did not see the tall young fellow with the debonair air and shabby coat who paused for an instant beside him nor did he notice the evident struggle that went on in the young man's mind as, with a glance at the dirty face of the urchin and another at the brilliantly lighted entrance of the opera house, he hurried on. He must be quick or there would be left not even standing room, which was all that he could afford to pay for. At the ticket window a fat old gentleman was wrangling over his tickets.

The enforced delay gave the young man time to think, and the face of the street child, pathetic through all its dirt, would not be banished. When the old gentleman had relieved his mind and turned away, the ticket seller looked at Grayson expectantly; but, with a muttered malediction at his chicken heart, as he chose to term it, Grayson turned away. Pietro was trudging wearily down the street toward that part of the city from which the rich flee and where the poor and the wicked find refuge. Revolving in his mind the weary question of finances, he did not heed the approaching footsteps until a hand grasped him unceremoniously and a voice asked gruffly:

"What were you crying for, kid?"

"Aw, what yer givin' us, dude? I warn't cryin'."

"All right, but what's wrong? Bankrupt?" with a quizzical glance at the other's stock in trade.

"Nope," replied Pietro. "Got my outfit left. That's about all, though. Business is pretty dead now. Be better after election."

Grayson laughed.

"That's right. I find it so myself. What do you say to a good hot steak in here?"

They were passing a little restaurant, and the aroma of hot coffee and frying meat floated out to them, reminding Grayson that his evening meal had been dispensed with to make up the amount necessary for his admittance to the land of heart's desire and causing the nostrils of his companion to twitch like a rabbit's.

"Sure, but dis is a bum joint. Come to Maginty's. It's swell there."

They went to Maginty's, and over a cup of strong coffee and their steak and potatoes Pietro became confidential and told Grayson the story of his struggles, first to provide necessities for his dying mother and then to escape the clutches of the money lender, from whom he had borrowed money that his mother might have a burial fit for a human being.

When Grayson, familiar with the ways of the wily money lenders, discovered that the amount had been returned with triple interest, he took the matter into his own hands, and the money lender, looking at those same strong clinched hands, admitted that he had asked Pietro to call again only that he might give him a receipt for the full amount of his debt.

Loath to part with his amusing companion, Grayson invited him to share his dingy lodgings for the night, and Grayson's comrades significantly tapped their foreheads at this latest eccentricity of their friend, for, though they were possessed of numerous eccentricities of their own, as men of genius must ever be, surely even they might deem it the hallmark of insanity to take from the street a ragged young tress seems luxurious, while to the man on the shoddy nothing seems worth while but one of floss. Added to Grayson's inexplicable treatment of the dago kid, they told the story of his hallucinations — how in the still nights he claimed to hear bursts of exquisite melody such as only the great masters of music might dream and, dreaming, reproduce. Grayson was only a humble student, and, try as he might, he could not reproduce those haunting melodies that would give him no rest. With his awakening the melodies were stilled, and only their echoes, like the half remembered taste of some childish delight, the name and substance, color and form of which we have long forgotten, remained. He haunted the opera and concerts, but he could never hear them save in his dreams. Because he dreamed these things and yet could interpret them no better than his average companion student they called him daffy. Daffy Pietro thought of him when in the wee small hours of the night he awoke and heard those glorious sounds. His first quick glance showed him that his host's bed was empty. His second showed him the figure of the young man standing full in the light of the moon, his violin in his hands, his face slightly uplifted and with a transfiguring look upon it that would have made him pass almost unrecognized among his best friends. His eyes were strange, staring, unearthly, and Pietro, encountering them, shuddered and dived under the coverlet, where he lay trembling, awaiting to feel the hands of his uncanny host upon him. Seconds passed, seeming like hours to him. The flood of harmony still poured on uninterrupted, and he peeped cautiously forth again and forgot his fear in his keen enjoyment. Pietro's ancestors had been ministers of the gospel of music, though he did not know it, and his ear drank in those exquisite sounds greedily, though his ignorant brain knew nothing of their worth.

Days passed, and Pietro was still a guest in Grayson's lodgings. The man had taken a fancy to him and dreaded the loneliness that must follow his departure. Pietro's business affairs had improved. The election was over, as he reminded Grayson, who replied that he could see no marked improvement in his own affairs. Pietro answered sagely that "a feller never kin tell. I was pretty hard up that night me an' you first seed each other, an' now, see, I made a dollar an' a quarter today, an' you kin have it well's not."

"Thanks," replied Grayson, declining the proffered silver. "You're a pretty good pal of mine, aren't you, Pete?"

Grayson spent a good many of his spare moments teaching the boy to play on one of his violins and was surprised and gratified at his rapid comprehension. His own affairs looked darker as the days went by. The employment he had found to help him through his music course was taken away, and he was left stranded. Coming in one day after a weary round of disappointments, the sight of the boy handling his most cherished violin, which no one else had a right to touch, angered him unreasonably. Before he had time to remonstrate the boy had commenced to play, and at the first notes the man stood spellbound. Slowly, uncertainly, with many blunders, the child played, and Grayson listened to one of his own dream pieces. He was bitterly disappointed that this child, this waif of the streets, whom he had befriended should have heard his music and, having heard, had been given the power to interpret it, though imperfectly.

"You thieving brat!" he exclaimed, grasping the lad roughly. "Where did you learn that? Who taught you my music?"

"Aw, cut it out!" said Pietro, wriggling away like an eel. "You learned me yer old squeaks yerself in de night when youse git dem bughouse fits on."

He told of the many nights he had awakened to the sound of music and struggled to reproduce it. He ended with a request, uttered with an elaborate carelessness that failed to conceal his real earnestness, that Grayson teach him to become "one of dem sure 'nough fiddler chaps." Grayson, with the harmony rippling through his brain, ready at last to be put upon paper to open up a brilliant pathway to its author's success, gravely shook his hand and answered, "Sure!"

A Parable.

Once Upon a Time there was a Fair Young Girl with soft, white hands and a Swan's Neck. She was born to be a Prince's Bride, but unfortunately there were no Princes near where she lived. Also her Parents were poor. This Sweet Young Thing liked fine clothes, but didn't like work. So when a Young Man of Common Blood offered her his hand in marriage she cried him yea. She thought she was going to live on Easy Street, with nothing to do but kiss her husband goodby in the morning and watch for his return at night. Five years later she had two children to take care of; her soft, white hands were red; her sylph-like form was bulky. She worked eighteen hours a day, washing, ironing and sewing, with no relief in sight.

By that time she began to wish that she had learned stenography and remained single.

Character Building.

What is the object of education? Is it to teach a child or man to know something that he did not know or to be something that he was not? Is it, in other words, an intellectual or a moral process? The safest answer is to say that it is both. But there is a growing suspicion among those who have studied the question most deeply that our schools are not so successful as they might be on the side of character building.—London Chronicle.

THE OLD SONGS.

The old songs! Don't y' love 'em? Don't they faintly strike yer ears
Like music o' the angels floatin' backurds through the years?
When y' recall the singer, an' the man that tromped the bow,
An' hear the croonin' echoes, don't yer feelin's jest leggo?

They's sumthin' in the melody that's wholesome-like an' good,
A sumthin' that a mortul more 'n half-ways understood;
It wa'n't too much D' this er that er 'tother, but et jest
Clear seemed t' chord with sumthin' underneath a feller's vest.

Thare's "In the Gloamin', Darlin'" an' "Why Should I Repine?"
An' "I Am Waitin', Nellie," was faver-ites o' mine!
An' "Willie, We Have Missed Yew, Welcome, Welcome, Hum,"
Like harmony o' angels freshly sent from Kingdom Come!

I 'spose that they air compen'ter—the songs y' have t'day—
An' a sight more highfalutin' in most ever' sort o' way,
But I can't help a-romancin' an' hankerin' fer jest
A plain, ol' fashioned fiddle an' the songs I love the best.

An' sometimes whilse I'm ploughin' I think I hear 'em call,
An' stop right in the furry, hawss an' plough an' me an' all!
An' cast my eyes Up Yender whare the angel choirs be—
If the songs Up Thare is sweeter they're a heap too good fer me!

In connection with the latest enforcement of the Lord's Day Act, the agitation for and against, still continues in all cities of Ontario. A Toronto man says that all kinds of dodges are being worked in Toronto to evade the new law. It is illegal to sell cigars there, but in some places there are nickel-in-the-slot devices and people dropping their coin in can get a smoke but do not have the usual opportunity to select their brand. This device is ingenious in that it in a sense may defeat the intentions of the new act, but still is not quite capable of passing out any brand of cigar that may be desired. It is a case of where all are served alike. An ingenious Toronto "newsy" on Sunday disposes of papers marked "lent until Tuesday." He has bought a rubber stamp and stamps the papers he hands out this way. As he is not selling, no charge can be laid against him. Whether there is an after settlement "no man knoweth."

Mr. Bryce says the home folk of both political parties are taking a wider view of the peoples under the British flag, and are looking upon the colonies as great sister states. He has been struck since coming to Washington with the feelings of increased friendship and respect for Canada among the better classes in the United States, and predicts that the Northwest will be the most thickly populated part of Canada.

DAMPING THEIR SPIRITS.

(Christian Register.)

A little Scottish boy was reading in his history an account of the battle of Bannockburn. He read as follows: "And, when the English saw the new army on the hill behind, their spirits became damped." The teacher asked the boy what was meant by "damping their spirits." The boy, not comprehending the meaning, simply answered, "Pittin' water in their whusky."

Foot Cut Off With Rope.

Winnipeg, April 6.—B. J. Smith met with a horrible accident while loading cars at the Anchor elevator Thursday. His foot caught in a noose on the pulley rope, and he was jerked into the air, where he hung until the rope cut his foot off, permitting him to fall upon a cement floor 12 feet below. His head was badly cut, but he will recover.

A SPRING DANGER.

MANY PEOPLE WEAKEN THEIR SYSTEMS BY DOSING WITH PURGATIVE MEDICINES.

A spring medicine is a necessity. Nature demands it as an aid to enriching the blood and carrying off the impurities that have accumulated during the indoor life of the winter months. Thousands of people recognizing the necessity for a spring medicine, dose themselves with harsh griping purgatives. This is a mistake. Ask any doctor and he will tell you that the use of purgative medicines weaken the system and cannot possibly cure disease. In the spring the system needs building up—purgatives weaken. The blood should be made rich, red and pure—purgatives cannot do this. What is needed is a tonic, and the best tonic medical science has yet devised is Dr. Williams Pink Pills. Every dose of this medicine actually makes new, rich blood, and this new blood strengthens every organ and every part of the body. That is why these Pills banish pimples and unsightly skin eruptions. That is why they cure headaches, backaches, rheumatism, neuralgia, and a host of other troubles that come from poor watery blood. That is why the men and women who use Dr. Williams Pink Pills eat well and sleep well and feel active and strong. Miss Mabel Synnott, Lisle, Ont., says: "I was pale and weak and suffered greatly from headaches, and I found nothing to help me until I began taking Dr. Williams Pink Pills. These have completely restored my health and I bless the day I began taking them."

But be sure you get the genuine Pills with the full name "Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People" on the wrapper around each box—all other so-called pink pills are fraudulent imitations. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

On the Siding

By CECILY ALLEN.

Copyright, 1907, by E. C. Parcells.

Aunt Helen idolized Bertie. Henry Strong idolized Aunt Helen, and Bertie, as far as his youth would permit, idolized both Aunt Helen and Henry Strong. That was why he felt vaguely aggrieved that he saw so little of Mr. Henry these days, and had he known that in his small person he personified duty and stood between the two objects of his adoration he would have felt doubly aggrieved.

What he did know was that Mr. Henry had taken to walking on the other side of the street and evading pressing invitations to "come over and sit on our piazza," and that Aunt Helen avoided all conversation bearing on Mr. Henry; also that she had developed a tendency to red eyes and absent-minded conduct, which annoyed Bertie, particularly when she stopped in the midst of a fairy story and stared out of the window without speaking.

The neighbors might have enlightened Bertie as to the true state of affairs. They all said it was too foolish for Helen Bertram to act so over a child. There was such a thing as carrying one's ideas of duty too far, and one owed some duty to the living as well as the dead.

It was the most joyous of early spring weather when every one should feel happy, but Bertie felt the depression which seemed to have settled down on the pretty cottage which he and Aunt Helen had occupied alone with the servants ever since his father's death. He slipped quietly from the sitting room, where Aunt Helen was writing at her desk, jumped noiselessly from the porch to the soft lawn, which was taking on just a pale tint of green, and ran out to the curbing which marked the limit of his straying save by special permission.

He knew that very soon Mr. Henry would be coming home from his office, on the other side of the street, no doubt, but still within hailing distance. Mr. Henry certainly must inspect Bertie's new trousers before the laddie could feel quite satisfied that they were all things desirable. They were a new sort of trousers, baggy at the knees, and if they had been held in place with a piece of elastic instead of a cloth strap and buttons, they would have been equal to an extra set of pockets. Marbles, twine, apples, almost any small article could be hidden in their spacious folds. Personally Bertie considered them a great improvement over the diminutive, skin tight knickerbockers he had worn heretofore, but they needed the cachet of Mr. Henry's approval.

Ten minutes passed. Aunt Helen's pen went scratch, scratch in the sitting room and Bertie's boot heels went tap, tap against the stone curbing. Then he spied a familiar, broad shouldered figure swinging down the street—on the other side. He waited until Mr. Henry was directly opposite, then—

"Hello, Mr. Henry! Can't you come over and see my new pants?"

Mr. Henry paused uncertainly and waved his hand in friendly fashion.

"I'd come over and show 'em to you, only Aunt Helen won't give me jam for supper when I leave the yard"—

"Listen to the poor dear!" exclaimed Mrs. Johnson, Aunt Helen's next door neighbor, who happened to be setting out some new rose bushes at the time. "The very idea of an old maid like Helen Bertram trying to train a boy."

Mr. Henry crossed the street. He had seen Mrs. Johnson watching him from the corner of her eye, and he knew that Bertie was terribly in earnest. He inspected the new trousers in deliberate, critical fashion and pronounced them good. Then he patted Bertie on the head and started away.

"Ain't you coming in for tea?" asked Bertie, with an odd break in his voice and a troubled look on his face.

"Awfully sorry, old man," replied Mr. Henry, with forced sprightliness, "but I have a dinner engagement, and I must run along and dress. See you later."

But Bertie clung to his hand.

"Maggie made some sponge cakes with icing. I know—I licked the icing bowl."

"Good for you," said Mr. Henry, still drawing away from the clinging moist hand. "You eat one for me, won't sister's home and dashed through the front door. His face was drawn and white, and he paused just a moment beside his sister, who came to the door at the sound of his step.

"It's no use, Nell. I've got to get out of this. I believe I'll run on to New York for a week or so"—

"And leave George to claim the victory of the Hardman case after you've worked hard on it for months. Oh, Henry, I think it is a shame that you will let a silly girl ruin your whole life! The very idea"—

"You don't understand her. She thinks she is right, and what she thinks is right she must do, no matter at what cost to herself"—

"Or others," interrupted his sister bitterly. "For a foolish conception of duty to the child of her dead sister she will wreck your life."

"She thinks she cannot divide her love and her interest. It must all go to him."

"Fanaticism, pure and simple!" ejaculated his sister.

"Whatever it is, I love her," was the simple reply, "and I cannot live so near and yet so far from her. Perhaps when I come back"— He mounted the stairs and closed the door of his room.

With a sigh, his sister went back to her embroidery.

In the meantime Bertie, with a quick glance over his shoulder, had deliberately turned his back on home and long instilled obedience. If Mr. Henry was not going to share the pleasures of tea, sponge cakes and new trousers, what was the use of having them at all? And over there, beyond the railroad track, lived a little boy who had three big brothers and a jolly father who smoked a pipe and whose mother did not write letters and cry.

A minute later it came to Aunt Helen, one sharp, shrill cry of boyish terror. She sprang to her feet, terrified and trying to figure the direction from which it had come. When she reached the street, Mrs. Johnson, white of face, was leaning against a tree.

"Bertie—he's caught on the railroad track! The express is backing down! My heart—I can't run"—

But Aunt Helen could run, and down the street toward the track she sped. She could see the small dark blue figure huddled in the middle of the tracks. She could hear the warning whistle of the express, backing from the transfer depot to the local station, and then something dreadful happened.

"Bertie, Bertie, I'm coming!" she cried and then fell, her dainty slipper tangled in a mass of lace fripperies. In vain she struggled to her feet. A fresh entanglement of lace threw her back to the ground. She could hear people screaming in every direction. She heard the rush of hurrying feet, and then a strong voice called, "Coming!" Just as she got to her own feet she saw Henry Strong slide down the pillar of his sister's porch. He had sprung through his window to the roof of the porch and was not wasting time on stairways. Straight ahead of her he flew like a streak, bounded over the first track, bent over the boy, and then something came between her and the two dark figures—something that rumbled and thundered away into a horrible silence. Aunt Helen did not open her eyes. She did not dare to. When Mrs. Johnson came she found her lying unconscious and white on the edge of the curb.

It was Mr. Henry who carried Aunt Helen home to the dim sitting room, and Bertie limped soberly, for, like the boy in the song, he had one shoe off and one shoe on. Later when Aunt Helen was quite herself Mrs. Johnson brought in what was left of the missing shoe when the express had passed over it, and then Aunt Helen learned how Mr. Henry had ripped open the shoe, which had caught in a frog on the track, and with Bertie in his arms had rolled down the bank to safety.

That night after Bertie had eaten two sponge cakes and had been tucked into bed Mr. Henry, who had forgotten that dinner engagements ever existed, sat in his old corner in Aunt Helen's sitting room, and Aunt Helen sat beside him in her little wicker rocker.

"Henry," she said softly, "I was wrong, and you were right. Bertie needs you—and I need you. I have missed you"—

He did not answer, and there was a troubled look in his eyes. She rose suddenly and crossed to her desk.

"See, dear, it was not because of what happened this afternoon. I was writing to you when he ran away, poor lonely laddie! He knew something was wrong."

Henry Strong read the half finished letter and kissed her.

"And now he knows it is all right again. Let's go upstairs and make sure he is not having bad dreams. Poor chap! He had a great scare."

And so Bertie, waking from restless slumber, saw the two faces dearest in all the world bending over him, and, reaching out for two protecting hands, he fell into peaceful sleep.

China's Insanity Test.

In Laos, an undeveloped region of French Indo-China, there is something out of the way in the shape of a village of lunatics. The most common form of madness there is belief among the lunatics that buffaloes are inside them. When these madmen get too troublesome they are at once removed to the village. But previously they are tested for madness by being bound hand and foot and thrown into a river. If they manage to swim, that is a sign of their being of sound mind. If they sink to the bottom, as is most often the case, isolation in their village is the sentence—in the event of their being rescued alive.—South China Post.

Unsolicited Testimony.

Here is the unsolicited testimony of Mrs. C. A. Martin, of Granville, N.Y., concerning Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women. We have her consent to publish her letter. It reads as follows:

I feel that I should tell you what wonders Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets have done for me. I had been running down, getting thin in flesh, and losing appetite for the past year, and though doctor's advice was sought and different remedies were used, there seemed to be no improvement. At length a friend who had received great benefit from Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets, advised me to try this remedy. I did so. In less than a week I began to see good effects. My appetite returned, my nerves began to get steady, my aches and pains began to leave me. I commenced to take on flesh, and I felt that I was being rapidly restored to health. At this moment I feel I am a new woman.

We want you to notice that the above letter proves our claims for Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets in two particulars.

First, that they will restore health after other remedies and even physicians have failed. Mrs. Martin had tried both.

Second, that improvement begins at once. Mrs. Martin saw good effects within a week.

If you are suffering from a run-down condition, or any weakness peculiar to your sex, you, too, can be made well and strong by these tablets.

Take them one week and note the improvement in your feelings and general health.

FREE TO YOU—MY SISTER

FREE TO YOU AND EVERY SISTER SUFFERING FROM WOMEN'S AILMENTS.

I am a woman.
I know woman's sufferings.
I have found the cure.

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from women's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand women's sufferings. What we women know from experience, we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhoea or Whitish discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths, also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete 10 days' treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember, that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial; and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer, if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book—"WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER" with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young. To Mothers of Daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhoea, Green Sickness and Painful or Irregular Menstruation in Young Ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all woman's diseases and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days' treatment is yours, also the book. Write to-day, as you may not see this offer again. Address:

Learn Dressmaking.

IN TWO WEEKS.

We teach you everything from the plainest shirt waist to the most elaborate toilette that can be found in th. fashion books. We show you how to put together not only the lining but all the outer goods in coats, skirts waists, wrappers, sleeves, children's dresses, collars, etc. Why spend months at a shop where you do nothing but hem, overcast, sew on hooks and eyes, and then after you have served your time there, what do you know about cutting? Absolutely nothing! For you will know no more how to cut out a dress at the end of a year than you did the first day you went there; so why spend your time there: you can come and try for a week and see for yourself what it's like, and as there is nothing to be paid in advance, you certainly would not lose anything by trying.

We have taught over 2,000 in this way within the past six years, and all recommend it very highly; we teach you how to use a chart the first day you are with us; also guarantee that the waists made by this chart will not draw nor pull out of place when raising arm.

Charge for full course is only $10, to be paid when course is completed, if satisfied, including one of the most perfect fitting systems in use which we give free.

We will teach at Belleville from April 8th to April 20th. Hours for day class from 8.30 to 5. All wishing to learn or for full particulars, be sure to see us at the KYLE HOUSE, on Saturday, April 6th, between 10 and 5 o'clock. An evening class will also be taught; in this class we teach shirt waists, sleeves and dressing sacques only. Terms $4 and hours from 7 to 9. Remember there is no pay in advance, you can all come and try.

Some Adventures In New Brunswick Half a Century Ago.

A correspondent writes to The Moncton Times as follows:— "Forty-five years ago, on the 14th of November, 1861, I left the St. John's Hotel, of St. John (N.B.), in the King's mail coach, driven by John Crabb, with seven passengers on board for 'The Bend,' as Moncton was then called. There had been a heavy snowstorm for some days—snow and frost. The wind came around south with heavy rain—a good deal like the weather we are having now. We left the hotel at six o'clock in the evening with two span of horses. When we got to the marsh road bridge the driver stopped and sung out to Nos. seven, six, and five to jump out as he could take only four passengers. Mr. Henry, who was going to Mr. Prince's funeral, being No. seven, jumped out. He handed a parcel to the driver to give to Mr. Prince's family. All the rest of us kept our seats and paid our passage and had our names objected to jumping out, as we had registered in the hotel book.

Walked Through the Mud.

We all talked the matter over and told the driver that we would walk up the hills and bad places. The driver, being a fine fellow—no better on the road—consented to try, as we said we would walk over the bad places. He started again, but got stuck in the mud at the bottom of a hill. We got out and walked through the mud. Some of the bridges were washed away by the freshet. We got along the best we could—out all night. We got to the old Monckton Hotel, kept by Mr. King, about four o'clock in the evening—twenty-two hours coming from the St. John Hotel to the Monckton Hotel. Just think of the difference in traveling now—could go to New York in that time. As I have said, we got to the Monckton Hotel about four, nearly dark.

Schooner Was Frozen.

I ran round to see what chance there was of getting to Shediac, and if the little schooner Oregon was still running. I was told that she was frozen in at Summerside, but might have got out since the soft weather set in. I found the man who drove the mails to Shediac. He had a rickety old wagon. I asked for passage. He said he thought he could take me, and would leave in half an hour, which he did. I saw a few friends, and then got aboard his rickety old wagon for Shediac, and, after quite a journey over the bad roads, arrived there and was delighted to hear that the little packet Oregon, of thirty-five tons, had arrived that day. I went across in her next day to Prince Edward Island.

No Fur Coats Then.

Let young men who read this think of the difference in traveling then and at the present time. No fur coats to muffle up in then. Hurrah for Canada and the governments that have made her what she is to-day! Some of those who were on board the coach were John McKenzie, ex-Mayor of Moncton, the only one except myself who is now living, Police Magistrate Humphrey Gilbert, of St. John; Robert Cutler, M.P.P. for Kent Co., and Capt. Howard Beatty, of Moncton.

into the brain. And now enchanting was that diamond cross rising and falling on that dazzling breast.

"What is it?" he asked, for she had dropped his hand with a faint sigh, and sat staring mysteriously at something far away.

"I am forbidden to speak," she answered, averting her eyes, and she picked up her cat, and walked away.

"You shall tell me," Andre said impetuously.

But she only laughed over the cat's body, stroking it softly with her chin till its purr echoed through the room.

"Confess, confess," he said, "I will know."

"The hand of Monsieur le Vicomte," she answered, smiling mischievously, "is full of interesting revelations—dreams which come and go—but there is one dream that is always there—the dream of love. Women," she added, "women, women everywhere in Monsieur's life; as in the years that were past, so in the years to come. Let the Vicomte de Nerac be on his guard against all women—and against one woman in particular——"

Andre failed to suppress an exclamation. Had this beautiful witch divined that secret too?

"Her name," she paused to bury her face in the cat's fur, "is—Yvonne—Yvonne," she repeated, "of the Spotless Ankles."

"Yvonne!" he laughed heartily.

"Yes, Yvonne. Sometimes there is more in a peasant girl to tempt and ruin than in a Comtesse des Forges, or a marquise—" it was her turn to laugh. "Ah! the Vicomte is a gallant and reckless lover. He thinks as the noblesse think, that women are necessary to him. But it is not so. It is he who is necessary to them."

"And your fee for the advice, mistress?"

She flung the five gold pieces of Madame d'Etiolles into a drawer. "Madame has paid for both," she said. "But if the Vicomte de Nerac will offer something of his own, I will accept—a kiss," and she looked him daringly in the face.

The hall of the Chateau de Beau Sejour swept in a vision before him. Dieu Le Vengeur seemed to be written in a scroll of fire round the cat's ruff.

"I understand," she added with a contemptuous shrug of her shoulders, "though I am not a marquise or a comtesse."

"You shall have it," he blurted out with husky petulance.

She put her hand to her diamond cross—they looked at each other—the woman melted into a defiant reverence.

"The horse of Monsieur le Vicomte," she commanded quickly to the girl who had appeared as if by magic. "Good-day, sir. You can pay the fee to—Yvonne."

And here he was alone with the shifty-eyed fille de chambre, who plainly gave him an invitation to mistake her for Yvonne.

"Confound you, what do you wait for?" Andre said irritably. "Fetch the horse at once if you don't want to taste a rogue's fare with your mistress in prison."

And as he rode through the woods it was little comfort to remember that he had won his wager with Henri, Comte de St. Benoit.

CHAPTER VII.

In December the Duchesse de Chateauroux, the maitresse en titre of the King of France, had died, some said of poison, some of a broken heart at her treatment at Metz when she had been driven by her enemies from the sick King's bedside and from the Court, a few because she had caught a chill and even maitresses en titre were mortal. Would Louis select another lady to take her place? Who would she be? That was the question. France was at war—that dreary war called in the books the "War of the Austrian Succession"—and this spring—1745—under the Marechal de Saxe, (the son of a king and Aurora von Konigsmarck, himself the idol of women of quality as he had been the idol of Adrienne Lecouvreur) great efforts were to be made to drive from the Low Countries the red-coated English and white-coated Austrians, to win for the Fleurs-de-Lis the boundaries that, since the days of Henri IV., God, nature, and French genius had destined to be French. Was not Louis, Le Bien Aime, himself going to the campaign with the flower of his nobility and with his son and heir? Yes, surely great things would be accomplished before the September winds shook the apples off the trees in the orchards of Normandy or they trod the wine-vats on the sun-clad slopes of Gascony. Paris was in a fever of excitement; the Court was still en fete for the marriage of Monsieur le Dauphin to a Saxon princess. But would there be a successor to the hapless Duchesse de Chateauroux? That was the only question about which the Paris that counted really cared.

Andre of course went to tell St. Benoit how he had won his bet, and he found him gossiping in the salon of the Comtesse des Forges.

"The King has already chosen," Madame remarked, fanning herself placidly. "But Monseigneur the Archbishop and the royal confessor are still able to work on his remorse, so for the present His Majesty affects to play at being a devot."

"I don't believe it," St. Benoit retorted. "The King will be a devot for one day in the week and a lover for the other six, as all kings of France and their subjects, too, ought to be. Naturally he does not wish to shock Madame la Dauphine, but wait till the campaign is over; Mars will give way to Venus, and then we shall have one of the De Nesles back again."

Whereat Madame lifted her heavy-lidded eyes, of which she was so proud, and said contemptuously, "Pooh!"

"I have won the wager," Andre interposed, "and I will undertake to win another. I will bet that it will not be a De Nesles, but a bourgeoise that the King will select."

"Impossible!" both St. Benoit and Madame cried, genuinely shocked. "A bourgeoise at Versailles! It would be a scandal, unheard of, monstrous, not to be tolerated."

But Andre only smiled, and press him as they might he refused to say more.

"Well," said the Comtesse, "if you will go to-night, my dear De Nerac, to the ball at the Hotel-de-Ville you will learn whether I am not right." And after Andre had taken his leave she turned to St. Benoit, with genuine concern. "England," she said, "has demoralized our dear friend. The English

"I can see you, Madame," he answered, "giving the lady her footstool." He kneeled mockingly at her feet. "God bless my soul! you might as well expect me to kiss the hand of your fille de chambre. Andre was joking; he knows if the King were to bring her to Court she would not stay a week."

"A week!" Madame threw up her noble head. "Not twenty-four hours."

But Andre, who had heard the crystal's story, had his good reasons. Already fertile schemes were fermenting in his brain; his ambition, too, was daily soaring upwards, and he dimly guessed that in this strange circling of Fortune's wheel the opportunity for which he thirsted would at last come. And so like the rest of the gay world he went that night to the grand ball given by the municipality of Paris at the Hotel-de-Ville in honor of the marriage of the Dauphin; for the King had promised to be present, and it was to be one of those rare occasions when the noblesse had consented to rub shoulders with the middle class in doing honor to the royal bride and bridegroom. Coming events were in the air. Andre felt, though why he could not say, that to-night would somehow prove a decisive turning-point in the history of himself and of France.

For the purpose of dancing, the court of the Hotel-de-Ville had been converted into a ballroom, superbly festooned and illuminated, and the crowd that had gathered was immense. Nobles of the realm, great ladies, peers, peeresses, and the Court here jostled in the wildest confusion with the gentlemen of the robe, with aldermen, shopkeepers, and even flower girls and the danseuses of the royal ballet. The company was supposed to be masked, but many had already discarded the flimsy covering; and for all who still wore it the disguise was the merest affectation. Most of the ladies of the middle class had donned fancy attire, but the noblesse for the most part showed their quality by refusing to imitate the canaille. Andre of course was content with his uniform of the Chevau-legers de la Garde, that beautiful and famous livery of scarlet with white facings, silver buttons, spurs of gold, and hat with white plumes which in itself conferred an enviable distinction, and about his neck, more proudly still, he carried that Croix de St. Louis, whose possession sufficed to make any soldier happy.

For a few minutes he stood gazing at the brilliant spectacle presented by the moving throng,—one vast arena of human beings in which the uniforms, the stars and ribbons, the jewels, the bright eyes, and the fair shoulders were blended into a magic and inspiring panorama, over which floated the tender music of harp, violin, and flute. And as he moved slowly forward kissing noble hands, receiving gentle congratulations, or looking into eyes to which in past days he had whispered devotion in the Oeil de Boeuf or beneath the balmy fragrance of a fete champetre at Rambouillet his ambition soared still higher. But dance he would not; he had come to watch, to teach, and to learn. The Chevalier to his joy was not here; he had been despatched, Andre discovered with grim satisfaction, on special business of the King. But yonder was Denise, holding a miniature court. As Andre edged his way towards her, her glance fell on the familiar uniform, and it plainly said: "Here at least let us forget the past—I have forgiven you—come let us be friends as we were before." And Andre replied to her graceful reverence with his stiffest bow, as he had deliberately come to do, and then moved slowly off, but not before he had marked with a lover's joy the painful surprise in Denise's eyes, the angry flush that colored her cheek. But the lesson must be completed. A partner must be found and at once. He paused—looked about him—started.

"You, Madame!" he ejaculated, checking his astonishment, for Denise was watching him.

"I, Monsieur le Vicomte," was the serene reply. "This is more fun than spelling the truth from a crystal," and she laughed wickedly.

Yes, it was indeed the wise woman from "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold," wearing her diamond cross and dressed in adorably pale blue satin, just such a color as her eyes covered by the pale blue mask. Strangest of all, Andre felt at that moment there was not a woman in all this throng who carried herself with more of the true air of the noblesse than did this young sorceress, who plied a charlatan's trade for hire.

"The Vicomte looks to-night as the Vicomte de Nerac should," she remarked quietly. "But is it my presence here or is it my perfume that perplexes you?"

And Andre started again at her unerring divination.

"Surely it is very simple," she proceeded. Recall, if you please, a supper party in London—the perfume was there then—now it is here. That is all."

"What?" He stopped in sheer amazement. "You are that—that woman?"

"Certainly. The same, only a trifle disguised. In London I was dark, in Paris I am fair, because," she shrugged her shoulders, "I love change and I hate being recognized unless I choose. You will not betray my secret, will you?"

"No. But why are you in Paris?"

"Women like myself," she answered cynically, "are always dying of ennui, and I was born a Parisienne. Can a Parisienne live without Paris? Well, I cannot. London, mon Dieu! Those suffocating English! They make love as they eat beef and drink beer. Their women are prudes, their men heavy as bull-dogs made of lead. London is a ville de province—no wit, no ideas, no life. Here," she pointed with her fan, "it is far different. Where will you find the like of that for gaiety of heart, and sparkle of the soul? It is the city of breeding, of philosophers, of poets, of chivalry, and of lovers. Why, that grisette over there can be more spirituelle than an Englishman of genius. And when even the lovers who make love with ardour and in couplets that sing of themselves become annoying I go elsewhere."

Andre listened with a puzzled delight. It was not the perfume—it was the mystery that enveloped her which kept him silent. Something in her voice, her manner, reminded him in the most tantalizing way of somebody else and for the life of him he could not think who that somebody was.

"No," she replied to his invitation, "I will not disgrace you by dancing—you the Vicomte de Nerac and I—" she smiled. "Besides you have seen me dance in the only kind of dancing that

"Name of a dog!" he ejaculated.

Away at the other end of the ballroom was a raised dais on which was gathered a bevy of the fairest of the bourgeoisie. One of them, escorted by three or four gentlemen, was descending the stairs into the throng—a woman in the guise of Diana, clad in the airiest, gauziest, purest white, with a silver bow in her hand and a quiver on her shoulder and a jewelled half-moon in her powdered hair. It was—yes, it was—the fair huntress of the woods of Versailles, to-night a matchless spectacle of majestic beauty which rippled over into the gayest, most provocative coquetry imaginable—Juno and Venus and Diana in one and defying you to say which was the more divine. And that cunningly arranged robe of glittering white, with its artful jewels to suggest every curve and line, was just what witchery would have chosen to be the foil to the laughter of her eyes and the subtle sheen of her skin. What other woman could have worn it? But for the one who dared, it was the homage of a woman's art to the triumph of nature's womanhood.

Andre watched her with absorbing interest. Fate had ordained that this woman's ambitions should be bound up with his. But how? how?

"She has a mind," his companion was saying, "as well as incomparable beauty. That Abbe at her elbow is Monsieur de Bernis, a poverty-stricken poet who writes her love-letters for her, whom she will make great some day, perhaps, and if Monsieur de Voltaire cared as much for balls as for the muses, he, too, would be snaring his honeyed venom in her ear. She can act and dance and sing. She will not always be Madame d'Etiolles."

The plans of years were sweeping through Andre's brain. What if the crystal—the thought was cut short by a stately flourish of trumpets and the loud hum of applause.

"See," the sorceress whispered, "the King has arrived."

Men and women pressed to the entrance and then fell back—on all sides the lowliest reverences. The King, the master of France, had entered and was facing the crowd. And a truly royal figure he made in his splendid dress, for Louis XV. knew how to present himself as a worthy grandson of the Sun God who had created Versailles and made monarchy in Europe sublime: the pose of his handsome head, the dignity of his carriage, the matchless air of command that conveyed an air of majesty such as could only belong to one whose wish since boyhood was law, whose words were orders, whose will was the inspiration of a nation. And when you marked that faint

CRYING BABIES.

Babies do not cry for the fun of it, nor is it always because they are hungry as so many young mothers think. Nine times out of ten baby's cry indicates that his little stomach is out of order. Mothers will find instant relief for their suffering little ones in Baby's Own Tablets. A few doses will cure the most obstinate cases of constipation, indigestion or vomiting and a Tablet given now and then to the well child will keep it well. Mrs. Mary Pollock, Gawas Ont., says: "Baby's Own Tablets have been a great benefit to my baby. They have made him happy, peaceful and contented, when before he used to cry all the time. I have more comfort with him since giving him the Tablets than I ever had before. He now sits and plays and laughs while I do my work. What greater praise can I give Baby's Own Tablets." Skin Disease is Blood Disease

"Fruit-a-tives" clean the blood of all impurities and clear the Complexion.

Pimples and Blotches—Redness—Boils—Eczema and other inflammations of the skin—mean Impure Blood.

A person with a bad complexion always suffers from poor digestion — non-action of the bowels (or Constipation) and often the kidneys are weak.

These unhealthy organs cannot rid the system of the waste matter. It is this waste—taken up by the blood and carried to the skin—that ruins the complexion.

"Fruit-a-tives" cure all skin troubles because they cure the kidneys and bowels.

"Fruit-a-tives" cause the eliminating organs to do their proper share of the work of ridding the system of waste. This purifies the blood — and instantly the pimples and blotches disappear, and the complexion clears. "Fruit-a-tives" cure skin troubles when everything else fails.

"Fruit-a-tives" are fruit juices, intensified, and combined with valuable tonics and antiseptics.

"Fruit-a-tives" are a wonderful cure for Pimples and Blotches on the skin.

They are without doubt the greatest blood purifier in the world. 50c. a box—6 for $2.50. At all druggists.

Wise Ostrich.

The stock illustration of what a fool will do is the habit which ostriches have of sticking the head into the sand, leaving the body exposed, but the author of "The Gold Diggings of Cape Horn" says that this habit does not seem foolish to one who studies the ostrich in its desert home. On the contrary, it is nature's wise provision for the safety of the bird in a region where hiding places are scarce. The male ostrich hatches out the eggs, looks after the brood, keeps his eye open for men, beasts and birds, and sounds a loud snorting, warning call when he sees an enemy. The brood, when warned, fades out of sight. Each chick squats motionless, its head in the sand and its body so near in color to that of the sand and scant herbage as to deceive even an experienced hunter. Its body looks like a gray desert bush, and the gauchos—the cowboys of the pampas—when searching for young ostriches examine every bush within many rods of the spot where a brood disappears. Often what seemed a bush is found to be in part or wholly a young ostrich. With its head up the bird would be at once detected. With its head in the sand it often escapes even the keen eyed fox.

Whistler Tamed a Russian.

When James MacNeill Whistler went to Venice to make those fourteen famous etchings of his he became so intoxicated with its beauty that he made seventy pastels first, leaving his etchings till the last few days. These pastels made a tremendous sensation. All the art world of Venice was carried away with enthusiasm excepting a Russian painter, who declared them tricks, betting a basketful of champagne he could paint six not to be distinguished from them. Mr. Whistler amiably gave some of his paper and six pastels, which were finally mixed up with those by the Russian and submitted to a jury which had seen none of them. Mr. Whistler's pastels were unmistakable, and the Russian lost. A few days later the two met on the Rialto, and Mr. Whistler laughed a little about the bet. The Russian was furious. "You forget, sir," he said, "that I'm a Russian, and if you scratch one you find a Tartar underneath." "Oh, no, you have it wrong," said Mr. Whistler; "you have it wrong. I scratched an artist and found an amateur."—Philadelphia Record.

Written on Glass.

Miss Harriet Auber's beautiful lines, "Our Blessed Redeemer, Ere He Breathed," were written by the authoress on a window pane in her house at Hoddesdon. A dealer in curios tried to purchase this interesting and peculiar manuscript from the owner of the house after the death of Miss Auber in 1862, but he was unsuccessful. The pane of glass was subsequently stolen, and it has never since been found or its fate discovered.

Centuries ago Theodulph, bishop of Orleans, while in prison at Metz composed the hymn, "All Glory, Laud and Honor," which he wrote on the window of his cell. As the usual Palm Sunday procession passed through the town the emperor heard sounds of singing proceeding from the prison. He thereupon liberated the bishop, whose hymn was afterward regularly used on each succeeding Palm Sunday as a processional, the choir taking up each quatrain and the public joining in singing the chorus.

OAK HALL

JUST SEVEN YEARS AGO.

Paardeberg Fought and Won in the South African Campaign.

Seven years ago Feb. 27, "there came a tale to Canada," which, while bringing, as it did, sorrow and pain to many, yet was the cause of heartfelt rejoicing throughout the whole Dominion.

This news was contained in a cablegram from Field Marshal Lord Roberts, then commanding His Majesty's forces in South Africa in the war against the Boers, to the British War Office in London, it tells its own story in simple words, and reads as follows:

"Paardeberg, Feb. 27, 7.45 a. m.

"General Cronje and all of his force capitulated unconditionally at daylight and is now a prisoner in my camp.

"The strength of his force will be communicated later.

"I hope H. M. Government will consider this event satisfactory, occurring, as it does, on the anniversary of Majuba."

Present at Paardeberg was the 2nd Battalion R. C. R., commanded by Lieut.-Col. Otter, and they did their part on that day nobly, earning unqualified praise for their steadiness and discipline under fire, from Lord Roberts himself.

The casualty list in the R. C. R. numbered 8 men killed and 29 wounded.

Canada Americanized.

Why on earth the newspapers should devote so much space to the trial of one of the degenerates of New York society, for the murder of another moral degenerate, is one of the problems which colonials are constantly puzzling over in the heart of the Empire. London has enough sordid tragedies to furnish food for those who revel in morbid literature, and one is inclined to believe that the oft-reiterated peril of Canada being "Americanized" by the influx from the Western States, is not so much to be feared as the "Americanizing" of England through the agency of the American correspondents of London newspapers. The writer was dining with some friends the other evening where one of the guests was a well-known journalist and man of literary attainments, who has recently visited Canada and the United States. "You Canadians appear to have no love for the United States," was one of the first remarks levelled at the writer. "If we have little love for the United States the reason is to be found in the fulsome adulation of everything American in England," was the reply.

Carpeau's Unconventionality.

The sculptor Carpeau was always a bohemian and generally absentminded. Invited once to the Tuileries by Emperor Napoleon III. and the Empress Eugenie, he pulled out his pipe after dinner, filled it and, discovering that he had no matches, took a scrap of paper, climbed on a chair and lighted the pipe from the great chandelier above the table. "You don't mind smoking, do you, ma'am?" he said to the empress. He once accepted from a rich patron an order to make a sculptured group representing the Cyclops Polyphemus crushing the youth Acis under a rock. Carpeau had no sooner accepted the commission than he regretted it, for the subject had no fascinations whatever for him. He put the matter off again and again, but was urgently pressed to begin it by his patron. At last one day Carpeau took the impatient patron to his studio and showed him a great rough block of unformed clay. "There is your group," said the sculptor. "My group? Where?" "Why, this is the rock." "That's all very well, but where is Acis?" "Under the rock—crushed quite out of sight, of course." "But where is Polyphemus?" "Oh, he? Why, do you think he would remain anywhere about after he had done a thing like that?" This was as far as the classical "group" ever got.

SMOTHERED WITH SAND.

Father and Son Working In Well When Cribwork Collapsed.

Arden, Man., April 6.—A fatal accident occurred yesterday, in which Alf. Reilly lost his life by being smothered by sand in a well. Reilly and his son have been engaged most of the winter boring wells in town, and while they were working at the parsonage both he and his son were down in a well about twenty feet fixing the cribbing, when the lower portion of the crib dropped, leaving a space of about three feet between the lower and upper portions, and through this opening the sand caved in, burying the father about four feet over his head. His son was miraculously saved with his head only above the sand, his father having evidently hoisted him up as high as possible.

Immigrant Slashes Throat.

St. John, N.B., April 6.—Charles Minus, an immigrant, made a sensational attempt to commit suicide at the immigration sheds yesterday. He slashed his throat with a razor, but bystanders prevented him doing further injury.

He is being deported on account of a suicidal mania, and will be sent back in the next boat.

JACOB'S VISION AND GOD'S PROMISE — GOLDEN TEXT: "BEHOLD I AM WITH THEE, AND WILL KEEP THEE IN ALL PLACES WHITHER THOU GOEST."

Historical Setting.

Time. — The time is not definitely known—probably about 1780 B. C. Isaac was 117 years old, and Esau and Jacob were 57, possibly.

Place.—Beer-sheba is on the southern edge of Palestine. Bethel is about 12 miles north of Jerusalem. "There is a little village and a well at Bethel, which is on a hill, and the ruins of a Crusaders' Church stand there. On a hill a quarter of a mile away are the ruins of a so-called 'Castle of Abraham,'" which some consider the site of the old Bethel.

We now, taking up again the story of Jacob, find him in quite different circumstances. The successful supplanter has become the miserable exile. The punishment of knavery has begun. For Esau, enraged at the theft of his birthright, had threatened to kill his brother; and Rebekah, to save her dear son, was compelled to send him away.

1. And Isaac. Now an old man of 117. Called Jacob. About 57 years old, a young man for those times of long life. And blessed him. "There is no attempt to substitute Esau for Jacob." Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan. This was Rebekah's contrivance (Gen. 27: 46), in order to get Jacob safely away; and yet it was not wholly a pretext, for a wife must be provided for the now recognized first-born, and no alliance with heathenism was fit for the one in whose line the great Abrahamic covenant would descend.

2. Go to Padan-aram. "The field of 'Aram,' the northern part of Mesopotamia, the flat lands bordering the Euphrates. Thence came Abraham and Rebekah, and there still lived Jacob's uncle Laban, the grandson of Nahor Abraham's brother.

3 And God Almighty bless thee. Isaac's blessing given Jacob was a repetition of that given to Abraham by Jehovah. (Gen. 17: 1.8; 22: 15-18). It consisted of two promises: numerous descendants, and the final complete possession of Canaan, the land wherein thou art a stranger (v. 4).—an echo of the promise to Abraham (Gen. 17: 8).

5. Unto Laban, son of Bethuel the Syrian In Hebrew, 'the Aramean.' The brother of Rebekah, Jacob's and Esau's mother. Jacob, as the acknowledged first-born, now stands in the record before his brother . .

Verses 6-9 present a keen picture of the slow-witted Esau. He seems for the first time to have realized his parents' grief at his marriage with heathen women, and stupidly tries to repair his fault by a third marriage. But so dull is he that he chooses a daughter of Ishmael, Hagar's son, "one who was probably more hostile and alien in spirit, though not quite so alien in blood as the Hittites."

10. And Jacob went out from Beer-sheba—And went toward Haran. The old family home, where Abraham had lived on his way from Ur to Canaan. There Terah, Abraham's father, died. Jacob's route "led over the tracts known in later times as the highlands of Judea and Samaria, preserving a general direction of from south to north, at any rate as far as the plain of Esdraelon."

Jacob's Exile was the result of selfishness, the punishment of ambition. His mother, who had shared his fault shared his penalty also, for she never saw her beloved son again. And yet God turned even this wrongdoing and sorrow to his own wise purposes, and thereby brought it about that Jacob got a good wife and a noble character.

11. And he lighted upon a certain place. Hebrew, the place "the well-known place afterwards mentioned. Situated in the mountains of Ephraim, about three hours north of Jerusalem, it was not reached after one, but after several days' journey. At Bethel Abraham had pitched his tent on reaching Canaan (Gen. 12.8). And tarried there all night. The ancient town of Luz was probably still further on, to the north. And he took of the stones of that place. R.V., "one of the stones." "He was on the hard backbone of the mountains of Palestine; the ground was strewn with wide sheets of bare rock; here and there stood isolated fragments like ancient Druidical monuments." And put them for his pillows. "And put it under his head." Hardships are not a misfortune, if they toughen our spirits. Those that are always looking for "soft snaps" really lead hard lives. Learn to have few wants, to lead "the simple life," and you will find it the strong and happy life.

Vs. 12-15. Our exile was a "mother's boy." He had been long enough from Beer-sheba to grow homesick. His heart was softened also by the lonely place and his solitary condition, by the night and the stars.

"Man's extremity is God's opportunity," and it is at such times that the Lord can teach us the lessons best worth learning, as he taught Jacob.

12. And he dreamed. Solomon's dream, in which he made his wise choice, Paul's dream... God can get close to human spirits when the hindering barriers of flesh and sense fall away in sleep. Note, however, that this is far from the silly, superstitious use of dreams that some people make. And behold. "The three 'beholds' are fingerposts of childlike astonishment at the glorious appearance." A ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven. The Hebrew word translated 'ladder' occurs only here, and would better be translated 'staircase.' "In approaching Bethel the hillsides present frequently such an exact resemblance to the steps of a stair, that it may have been from them that the vision was borrowed."

13. And behold, the Lord stood above it. Jacob was homeless, and needed the vision of the stairway to his heavenly home. He was poor and unprotected, and needed the vision of the ministering, succoring angels. But especially he was lonely, sad, penitent, heart-hungry, and needed a Father. God henceforth fills the vision, and nothing more is said about stairway and angels. They had served their purpose, just as music, literature, nature, art, oratory, serve their purpose when they have brought the soul to God.

And said, I am the Lord God of Abraham, thy father, and the God of Isaac. This is the basis of the great covenant—the personal relation of God with his people. And it is a relation that passes thus from father to son. From this basis of close, continued friendship, the covenant passes to the first promise: the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed. This is the promise of one of God's best gifts to any man, a noble country, to be possessed in peace and liberty, and transmitted to posterity.

The second promise is one of enlargement: 14. And thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth. In the promise to Isaac (Gen. 26: 4), his descendants were to be numerous "as the stars of heaven." For this dusty traveller the promise is so worded as to make his very discomforts a symbol of blessing. And thou shalt spread abroad. The dominion of Jacob's descendants afterwards extended, under David and Solomon, to the west, to the Mediterranean, and to the east, to the desert, and to the north, along the Lebanon range even beyond Damascus, and to the south, far below Beer-sheba into the wilderness.

The third promise is one of influence: In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed. No nation has influenced the world for good so profoundly as the Jewish. Its Bible is our noblest literature, its great men and women are our noblest examples, and it has given us Jesus Christ, whose teachings are the source of all that is best in the world's civilization.

The fourth promise is one of personal guidance and companionship: 15. And, behold, I am with thee. "This is an addition to the original promise, and is made in consideration of Jacob's circumstances." The lonely traveller is promised cheering companionship. He is also promised protection; and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest. Best of all, he is promised a safe return; and will bring thee again into this land. And the threefold cord is tied with the emphatic word: I will not leave thee, until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of. Jacob was to have many a trial, with Laban and on the way back; but God was in every trial working out a happy issue.

Did God justify Jacob? Does this gracious covenant approve the theft of Esau's birthright? Certainly not. Jacob's exile from home, that very pillow of stone, testified to God's displeasure, and the long toil of twenty years was to punish the sinners still more. But God's blessing always goes to the fittest man, and the lives of Jacob and Esau proved how wise and necessary was God's choice. God designed these blessings for Jacob, and would have made a way for Jacob to obtain them without fraud, and without the sorrows that the fraud brought about.

Jacob's heart, when he awoke, was filled with reverence and awe (v. 16) and he said: Surely the Lord is in this place. "He knew his omnipresence, but he did not expect a special manifestation of the Lord in this place, far from the sanctuaries of his father." It was this ability to recognize God's presence that transformed Jacob into Israel, the prince. It was the lack of it, and the content with material possessions, that kept Esau on his low plane of living. And I knew it not. Why not? Doubtless because he was grieving for the home left behind, and fearing his peril from wild beasts and savage men, and worrying over the reception he might meet from his uncle Laban. Like many of us, he had allowed his troubles to drive out of his mind the only one who could remedy his troubles.

17. And he was afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place! We do not fear God enough. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." To be sure, "perfect love casteth out fear," but an understanding of God's awful majesty and power is the beginning of perfect love. It is like the rough, necessary mold which is broken after the bell is made. This is none other but (or, "than") the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven.

Jacob established two memorials of the great event, a stone monument and a still more lasting name. 18. And Jacob rose up early. Early rising is characteristic of men in earnest, even when their pillows are not of stone. Among the early risers of the Bible are Abraham, Isaac, Joshua, Gideon, Samuel, David, Mary, the Apostles and our Lord himself. And took the stone that he had put for his pillows and set it up for a pillar. Thus observing an ancient and natural custom, other examples being the Mizpah pillar, and Joshua's pillar set up after the passing of the Jordan.

19. And he called the name of that place Beth-el. That is, the house of God, as Bethlehem means the house of bread and Bethesda the house of mercy. But the name of that city was called Luz at the first. Luz was an ancient Canaanite city, probably a little to the north of Bethel.

20. And Jacob vowed a vow. When a man understands God's covenant of blessing the natural and honorable impulse is to make one in return. Love begets love, and benefits inspire a wish to do something for the benefactor. Saying, if God will be with me, and will keep me. This is not fairly taken as a mercenary vow, an outcropping of Jacob's spirit of bargain-driving. "His 'if' is equivalent to 'since'—'Since God is going to be with me, and to keep me, and give me all I need, and bring me back to my father's house in peace, I for my part pledge myself that he, and he alone, shall be my God; and further I pledge myself to render him that tenth of all my possessions, which is traditionally fixed as the right and proper proportion."

22. And of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee. This giving of tithes was a very ancient custom, followed by Abraham in the case of Melchizedek (Gen. 14: 20), and carefully laid down in the Mosaic law. (Lev. 27: 30-33.)

Good Manners.

A friend of yours and mine has very justly defined good breeding to be "the result of much good sense, some good nature and a little self denial for the sake of others, and with a view to obtain the same indulgence from them." Taking this for granted—as I think it cannot be disputed—it is astonishing to me that anybody who has good sense and good nature can essentially fail in good breeding. As to the modes of it, indeed, they vary according to persons, places and circumstances and are only to be acquired by observation and experience, but the substance of it is everywhere and eternally the same. Good manners are to particular societies what good morals are to society in general—their cement and security. And as laws are enacted to enforce good morals or at least to prevent the ill effects of bad ones, so there are certain rules of civility, universally implied and received, to enforce good manners and punish bad ones.—Chesterfield.

Made For Fat Men.

One of the narrow arches in the gallery of the chapel at Columbia university is not exactly symmetrical, although the defect is not noticeable to the casual observer. The reason for the widening of the arch after its original construction had rise in a somewhat humorous occurrence. One of the early visitors was a remarkably fat man, who found himself wedged into the arch when he tried to squeeze through and was extricated with some difficulty. The builders, recognizing the possibility of other fat people being numbered among the future visitors, decided to widen the arch, sacrificing symmetry and harmony to practical need, as the pier was so constructed as to bear no loss of width on one of its sides.

Caribou Horns.

Not one out of every ten female caribou has horns. When they do have them, they are much smaller than those of the bull. The horns of the female have, however, in general many more branches than those of the bull, and they are much more regularly and finely formed. The cows carry their horns much longer than the bulls. They have been seen with their horns in the month of April. The old bulls shed their horns from the 10th to the last of November. They hardly ever carry them after the month of November. The young bulls shed theirs from the first of December until the middle of February. The younger the animal the longer he retains his horns.

Mountain of the Sacred Footprint.

Adam's peak, or Mount Samanala, a rugged mountain in the island of Ceylon, is known throughout the orient as the "Mountain of the Sacred Footprint." In a flat, rocky basin at the foot of this mountain in stone as hard as blue granite there is the perfect imprint of a gigantic human foot, five and one-half feet long by two and one-half feet wide. The Ceylonese Brahmans have a legend to the effect that the imprint was made by Adam, our first parent, but the Buddhists declare that it could have been made by no one but Buddha.

Water Needles.

So penetrating is water at high pressure that only special qualities of cast iron will be tight against it. In the early days of the hydraulic jack it was no uncommon thing to see the water issuing like a fine needle through the metal, and the water needle would penetrate the unwary finger just as readily as a steel one.

Cash or Credit.

Women should not get credit. Neither should men. Cash is the cure. Tradesmen maybe would have a bad time for six or twelve months, and many a lady would have to "lie low," but in the end we would get both our trade and our money, and she would get her dress and at far less cost.—London Opinion.

The Vice Presidency.

"It's sthrange about th' vice prisidincy," said Mr. Dooley. "Th' prisidincy is th' highest office in th' gift iv th' people. Th' vice prisidincy is th' nex' highest an' th' lowest. It isn't a crime exactly. Ye can't be sint to jail f'r it, but it's a kind iv a disgrace." —"Dissertations by Mr. Dooley."

HOW IS YOUR POWER HOUSE?

A prominent medical specialist of the U. S., in a recent lecture before optical students, said: "I know of no more appropriate comparison than that of Dr. Chalmers Prentice, where he compares the brain of man to a power house, or electric light plant, and the wires leading from them to the electric lights all over the city, to that of the nerve fibres running in countless numbers from every part of the body to the vital brain centre, and he compares this eye-strain to a short circuited wire, using up the vital energy to overcome the eye-strain, thus depriving all other parts of the body of its power to perform its work. I have in the past found a number of these cases with normal vision, who were sure their eyes were "allright," yet I have developed 9D of latent hyperopia. Think of the vast amount of waste nerve energy used up every day to overcome this amount of error and still maintain normal vision." We use the "Prentice System" and Lenses in such cases with complete success. Consultation free.

To-day's Market

The attendance upon the market to-day was good. In prices there was much change to note.

Eggs were offered for sale in considerable quantities, and the ruling price was 15 cents per dozen.

Butter still commands a high price, and sold readily at 27c and 28c per pound.

In the hide market of late there has been a decided drop in prices, as will be seen by the quotations.

Maple syrup sold at 30 cents per quart, and there was considerable offered for sale.

Our quotations are as follows:

Eggs—15c.

Bright Young Canadian

(The Canadian Courier, Toronto.)

The city of Belleville has given a Premier to the Dominion, a Premier to Manitoba and Sir Gilbert Parker to the British House of Commons. It is an encouraging fact that among the younger boys of the Hastings city there are several who have already shown the pluck and energy which must go to the making of a nation.

In 1900, Mr. Gordon Bennett Johnson, son of ex-Mayor J. W. Johnson of Belleville, graduated from the Royal Military College, Kingston with the first prize of a commission in the Royal Engineers of the Imperial army. He attended the School of Military Engineering at headquarters in Chatham, England, for two years and was afterwards stationed at Colchester, England. Later he was stationed at Colombo, Ceylon, where he was offered by a member of the eminent English engineering firm, Sir J. W. Barry and Son the position of assistant engineer on a road they are building in China, the Shanghai-Nanking Railway.

Mr. Johnson has now been two years acting in this capacity and has been eminently successful, having had charge of the Naziang section of the road, directing not only the building of the line, but also the erection of car shops and station buildings and a subsidiary canal. He is at present directing the construction of the road in the interior, one hundred and fifty miles from Shanghai, with Chinese labor, not a white man within 100 miles of where his work is carried on. The active work of a civil engineer, aside from the fact of its being more remunerative, is probably more congenial to a stirring young Canadian, than the more placid occupation of a Royal Engineer, whose time is largely taken up with office routine.

Like most of our boys who are doing their native land credit in lands afar, Gordon Johnson is associated with a home organization, "The Canadian Society of Civil Engineers."

A Recreant Lover.

BRAMPTON GIRL'S ROMANCE ENDED IN PORT HOPE.

Port Hope was last week the scene of a disillusionment which shattered a romantic love affair.

E. V. Taylor is a young Englishman, who came recently to Canada and settled at Brampton. While there, he met and paid court to Miss Edith Mundy, an English girl who possessed a small bank balance. He proposed and was accepted.

Last month Taylor came to Port Hope in search of employment and stayed a night at the St. Lawrence hotel. In the morning he left without paying for his board, leaving his valise as security with the hotel. Letters were subsequently received by Miss Mundy from Taylor in which he said that he had obtained employment in a Port Hope dairy, but that he had been disabled by a kick from a horse. He asked her to send him money to tide him over his difficulties. This and subsequent appeals were cheerfully complied with. At last Miss Mundy decided to come to Port Hope to personally aid her lover. She came, but could not discover Taylor's address. Enquiries from the town doctors gave no clue to the accident, and visits to the dairies were equally fruitless. Finally Miss Mundy found that Taylor's mail was being sent to Toronto. She then comprehended her lover's duplicity and came to the conclusion that he had been using a false story to obtain her money. She returned to Toronto and laid wait for Taylor at the post office. After watching for some hours he appeared. Miss Mundy met him, charged him with his treachery and told him of her abhorrence of his act.

Taylor's effects were confiscated to reimburse Miss Mundy for the money sent to him and she returned to Brampton.

The love affair was at an end.

At Sign of the Scales.

LO, THE POOR INDIAN TAMPERED WITH FIREWATER.

A noble red man, whose tribal cognomen is probably "Sun-Over-the-Hilltop," or something like that, but who, among the palefaces, answers to the name of Joseph Johns, was haled into court, charged with having a surfeit of the joy water which tangles a man's legs and makes him go to sleep in unexpected places. It would surely have caused surprise to this particular Indian's Mohawk ancestors could they have seen him with the "nose paint" under his vest. This morning he pleaded guilty to "common drunk," and the Magistrate said it would cost him five plunks to obtain liberty and the right to once more breathe the chilly air of freedom. The artless red man claims that a friend gave him a flask of whiskey. He drank it. Then somebody turned on the lights and he heard the joybells begin to ring.

Bigamist Skipped.

Bancroft Times: Jas. Hawley is now a fugitive from justice. When he was called on Thursday morning last to answer to the charges of bigamy and perjury, the Crown had no evidence to offer and the case was enlarged until the following morning at ten o'clock. Hawley, who had already spent considerable time in the lockup, was given his liberty on his own recognizance to appear at the proper time. However, he took advantage of the opportunity and "flew his kite." He will not likely be seen around here for some time.

A Giantess, Indeed.

London, March 30. — Marie Fassnauer, a Tyrolean giantess, will shortly arrive in London. She is twenty-seven years old, 8 ft. in height, and weighs 24 1-2 stones.

A fifty horse power three-ton lorry will convey her from Victoria station to lodgings near the London Hippodrome, where she is to appear.

She is nearly 150 in. round the chest, and her dresses require three times the ordinary length of material. Her brothers and sisters are of normal height, but her grandfather was a giant.

Belleville Cement Made Fine Showing

THOUGH THE HAMILTON CITY COUNCIL DID NOT GIVE LOCAL CONCERN FAIR PLAY.

The following, from the Hamilton Spectator of Wednesday, April 3, will be of local interest:

The City Council last night held a special meeting. Chairman Sweeney, of the Board of Works, presented a resolution asking the Council to accept the tender of the Lakefield Cement Company for the supply of city cement for this year. City Engineer Barrow submitted the tests that had been made, showing that the Owen Sound cement had fallen below the requirements of the specifications, but Mayor Stewart thought this was no bar to accepting the tender, as he took very little stock in cement tests. He was promptly sat on by the board, who, after receiving the assurance of the Lakefield people that they would take over the contract at the price of the Owen Sound company, decided to accept the tender of the Lakefield company at $1.87. The tests of the Belleville cement were the best of any Canadian cement, and the best of any cement at the price. Ald. McLaren was in favor of giving the tender to the Belleville people if the Lakefield company had not come down in its price.

The matter was opened up by the following letter and report from the City Engineer:

"I herewith submit a statement of a seven days' test of cement made from samples submitted by the tenderers for this year's supply.

"All the samples submitted were good and passed the requirements of the specifications with the exception of the Owen Sound cement, which cracked when under the hot test; this is a very important test.

"The Belleville and Lakefield cements from the mills showed up well, the former the best of the two.

Following was the result of the tests:

	Price	Fineness.	—Setting— Initial	Final.	Hot Test.	Specific Gravity.	Tensile Strength Neat	Sand.
Belleville	1.88	95.8	1.40	3.30	O.K.	3.096	509	217
Lakefield..........	1.88	95.8	2.10	4.15	O.K.	3.11	450	176
Owen Sound..........	1.87	92.2	1.45	4.00	Cracked	3.10	519	207
City's specifications....	....	92.	.45	5.00	....	3.00	450	..

Ald. McLaren asked Mr. Barrow what experience the city had had with the Lakefield cement, and Mr. Barrow replied that it had been entirely satisfactory. Ald. McLaren then suggested that the Lakefield company be given the contract, provided it would agree to take it over at the price tendered for by the Owen Sound company, as he believed the two companies were practically the same. If this was not agreeable, then he would be in favor of giving the Belleville people the contract. He understood that the Belleville people had been in business only about a year.

Mr. Butchart, of the Lakefield company, after conferring with the other members of his company, said that they thought the city should give the contract to the Lakefield company at $1.88. The city had good cement from them last year, and knew the quality of it very well. He was prepared to go as far as agreeing to supply the Owen Sound cement, and if it did not prove satisfactory, then the Lakefield company would deliver Lakefield cement for the balance of the contract at the Owen Sound price.

Mayor Stewart. — I think that is fair. I don't take very much stock in tests anyway.

Secretary Brennan—I don't see why we should take cement that falls down in the test.

Mayor Stewart—The tests amount to nothing. A man could get hold of a poor bag out of the bin, and it would not be fair to judge all the cement by that.

Secretary Brennan—And the city might get a whole carload of poor bags. What is the use of having specifications if they are not lived up to?

This statement was applauded by the committee, although the Mayor insisted that a test was no positive proof of the quality of the cement.

Ald. Baird thought the Lakefield people should get the contract at $1.88. Their cement was all right last year.

Ald. Kennedy was opposed to the Mayor's idea of taking Owen Sound cement. He thought the specifications should be lived up to. It was the misfortune of the Owen Sound company if the cement fell below the specifications. The specifications called for a hot test, and the Owen Sound cement was lacking in this.

Ald. Lewis could not see the sense of Ald. Baird's contention of giving the contract to the Lakefield people at $1.88 if they would accept the contract at $1.87.

The representatives of the company were then asked if they would supply Lakefield cement at $1.87, and after another consultation they agreed to do this, and a motion accepting the amended tender of the Lakefield company was then put and carried unanimously.

In the Council, Ald. Farrar asked Mayor Stewart if the Lakefield cement was the cement recommended by the city engineer, to which the Mayor promptly replied, "Yes."

There was nothing in Mr. Barrow's letter or in his remarks at the Board of Works meeting outside of the statement that the Lakefield cement had given satisfaction last year, that would warrant the Mayor in saying that Mr. Barrow recommended the Board to buy Lakefield cement.

Dr. Harry Burdette is Dead In Minnesota.

Word has been received in the city announcing the death of Dr. H. E. Burdett, which occurred a few days ago at St. Paul, Minn. Deceased, who was upwards of 50 years of age, was a son of the late Dr. Burdett, who was a well-known physician of this city. Harry, who, perhaps, was better known as "Honto," was for the greater portion of his life a resident of Belleville. He was a member of the Oka lacrosse team of this city, which for years held the championship of this district, and was also active in other sports. Some years ago he went to St. Paul to practice. The doctor was twice married and is survived by a widow and one boy and one girl, also a sister, Miss Maud Burdett. The many friends of the deceased in this city will regret to learn of his demise.

The McMaster Band.

The Baptist Church was crowded again last evening, and the meeting was, perhaps, one of the best of the series. After a bright song service the Band sang a selection, entitled, "Peace, Sweet Peace." Mr. Warner then delivered a stirring and practical address from the text, "Found of God." To be found of God means to be understood by Him. In this life we are misunderstood and therefore often misrepresented, but God knows the motive that prompts our every act. To be found of God means to come into vital relations with Him, for then we receive His nature. To be found of God means to be used by Him. We are saved to serve, and this is the highest calling of a Christian—to be a co-worker with God.

Mr. Cameron then spoke on the subject of "The New Birth." This was not a popular gospel to-day, for people have the conception that by their moral lives or good works they will be able to win God's favor. The Master, however, attached importance to a change of heart, and we dare not pin our faith to anything short of regeneration. We cannot understand the process by which this is brought about in the human soul, but it is ours simply to accept the fact and allow the Holy Spirit to do His work in our hearts. He appealed very earnestly to the unsaved to accept Christ, and a number signified their intention of doing so.

The meetings are gaining in interest as the mission nears its close.

WHERE THE SHOE PINCHES.

Price Stamped and Name Branded Shoes Caught in the Rising Cost.

Even the Slater shoe dealer sometimes regrets the fact that the price of each shoe is stamped on the genuine Slater shoe. Prices of leather and materials advanced so during the past year that a man with $10,000 stock of shoes bought before the rise had a stock really worth $12,000. Yet the Slater shoe had to be sold for just what it was marked. The price mark could not be erased nor changed, for the Slater Shoe Company would not permit it.

So that the rise in the cost of lea

Oddfellows' Band Elects Officers.

The annual meeting of the Oddfellows' band was held last evening for the purpose of electing officers and transacting general business. The officers elected were as follows:

President— John Weese.
Manager—R. H. Ketcheson.
Secretary—Chas. Hanna.
Treasurer—W. G. Givens.
Auditors—R. Marshall and E. Pascoe.
Executive Committee — W. Aselstine, W. Weymark and J. Chalmers.

The band is at present in efficient condition, and enters upon the coming year with every prospect of success.

Alleged Forgery Case Dismissed.

Geo. Hearns, of Coe Hill, was before the Magistrate on Monday on a rather serious charge, namely, forgery, says the Bancroft Times. The complainant was Benjamin Bird, who alleged that Hearns had forged his name to a note for $300. The evidence went to prove that Bird had authorized Hearns to sign his name to the note, which was, of course, irregular, and had subsequently laid the charge thinking that he would be called upon for payment of the note. The case was dismissed.

Nervous Prostration

IT IS WORRY THAT KILLS, NOT WORK

Work without worry usually tends to prolong life. On the other hand, worry, with or without work, is fatal, because it uses up what the Doctors call the "Lecithin," a phosphorized fat which is the chief constituent of the brain and nervous system—a waste which, if not stayed in time, means complete nervous wreck. The evident moral is "don't worry"—advice easy to give, and in these days of stress and strain practically impossible to take. The alternative is: find some way of replacing the wasted Lecithin—the phosphorized fat. This absolutely essential element will be found in its most perfect, palatable and assimilable form in

FIERCE FIRE AT M'GILL

Engineering and Mechanical Building Completely Gutted.

Loss Exceeds Half Million Dollars—Insured Up to $420,000—Origin a Mystery—Valuable Outfits Destroyed—Heat Cracked Neighboring Windows—Firemen Were Helpless to Stay Flames—Walls Remain.

Montreal, Que., April 6.—About four o'clock yesterday morning fire broke out in the Macdonald Engineering building of McGill University, and, in less than an hour this magnificent structure was gutted. The damage is estimated at $600,000 and is partly covered by insurance. No explanation is as yet forthcoming as to the origin of the fire.

About 4.30 a young man noticed the flames and rang the fire alarm, others in neighboring streets remarked the reflection in the sky, and notified the authorities. Firemen were on the scene in a moment, but it was evident from the outset that there was very slight chance of saving the building.

Already the flames had got hold of the roof and were leaping skyward, casting a light that turned early morning into day.

Heat Was Intense.

The heat was intense. The windows in the neighboring chemistry building were cracked and great waves of smoke rolled in all directions.

Means were immediately taken to prevent the spreading of the flames, in fact little else remained to be done. Before five o'clock the clanging of bells and galloping of steeds had collected a crowd round the building. Students came rushing up by hundreds. The campus and roofs around were crowded. So great was the heat that some standing on the steps of the medical building had to come down.

Tower Falls With Crash.

The stone annex that stretches back to University street was saved. Shortly after five o'clock the tower fell with a crash. The wooden roof quickly followed suit, and a few moments later two explosions occurred caused by contact of fire with chemicals. By six o'clock the flames began to subside. The fire had almost burned itself out. As the smoke cleared away one could see that the roof had gone near the northwest, and there was a huge gap in the stone wall and the remaining masonry tottered. Inside the place is just a mass of brick and smouldering timber. As late as half-past nine stonework continued to fall.

Scientific Instruments Lost.

The building was supposed to be constructed of semi-fire proof material and was equipped with hose. With the possible exception of the heavier instruments on the first floor the scientific equipment is entirely lost. The students number about 400 and examinations were in progress. The examination papers were destroyed.

The full amount of insurance carried on the building and contents is $420,000, which is estimated at between 75 and 80 per cent. of the loss.

Only the walls are standing. The fire was never under control till it died out.

The students had their outfits in their lockers, so each student loses from $50 to $200.

GANANOQUE INN BURNED.

Flames Destroy One of the Best Known Hotels in Canada.

Gananoque, April 6.—The Gananoque Inn, one of the best known summer hotels in Canada, was almost completely destroyed by fire early yesterday morning. Mr. Walsh and family had a narrow escape, all the occupants being asleep at the time. They lost everything.

Fire broke out in the second storey of the main building, and before the firemen had arrived had gained tremendous headway. The building and furniture were valued at $90,000, and the loss is almost total, being covered only by partial insurance.

The flames were discovered by the daughter of Mr. Andress, who lives opposite, and had the warning not been sounded as soon as it was, there would in all probability have been a number of fatalities.

The Gananoque Inn was a particularly well built summer hotel, being of solid brick, and having a fire wall between the main wing and new north wing.

The main wing walls collapsed soon after the fire broke out.

Millionaire's Yacht Burned.

Brockville, April 6.—The handsome side-wheel yacht owned by E. P. Wilbur of South Bethlehem, Pa., a steel millionaire, was damaged by fire to the extent of $5,000 at her winter quarters up the river.

Rockwood Patients Pay.

Kingston, April 6.—The Rockwood Asylum treasurer now receives thousands of dollars yearly from private sources for the maintenance of patients that formerly was not received. The aggregate amount from this quarter will reach in the neighborhood of $60,000 during the present year. This result has been secured by the appointment of two inspectors by the Whitney Government.

Babe Sleeps Four Days.

Brockville, April 6.—A most remarkable case of a long sleep is reported from Smith's Falls.

The three-days-old infant of Mr. and Mrs. D. Gilbert slept continuously for four days less 10 minutes. All efforts to awaken the little one were without effect, and it had to be nourished by injections. It awoke apparently well refreshed.

Municipal Elections.

Toronto, April 6.—A suggestion made by Mr. T. H. Preston, M. P. P., for Brant, will be acted upon by the Ontario Government by submitting a referendum to the municipalities of the province. The purpose is to learn whether or not the people want to change the date of municipal elections from January to December.

Brockville, Ont., April 6.—The body reached here yesterday of Michael Bennet, of Westport, who lost his life as the result of an accident on the New York Central Railway at Richville. He was employed as locomotive fireman on a freight train, which collided with another, head-on. Bennet was thrown against the boiler, and the escaping steam from the broken gauge glass scalded him in a terrible manner. He was 21 years of age, and unmarried.

Aeroplane Smashed.

RUSE DID NOT SUCCEED

Peasants Tried to Fool the Roumanian Troops.

Brave Rebels Use Strategem—Followed an Empty Coffin—Soldiers Fired on Mourners Who Had Intended to Attack Them for Second Time—Artillery Brought Into Action—Village Was Razed to Ground.

Bucharest, April 6.—The determined bravery of the insurgent peasantry, in some of the recent fighting, is illustrated by a story of the battle of Belaneshti, near Craiova, published in a local newspaper. The insurgents, who numbered ten thousand, armed with guns, axes, knives and scythes, accompanied by their wives and children, made a desperate attack on a body of Roumanian infantry and artillery. The latter opened fire, killing large numbers of the peasants, who, after an unequal combat, retreated to a village, carrying their dead and dying. Half an hour later a long funeral procession, headed by a priest, issued from the village, a coffin being followed by thousands of weeping peasants. As they approached the troops the commandant ordered the mourners to halt, but the latter pressed on, and were met by a volley, which killed or wounded a number of them. After further fighting the remainder of the peasants fled, leaving the coffin which, when the soldiers examined it, was found to be empty. A few minutes later the peasants again attacked the troops, meeting the same fate. Artillery was then brought into action and the insurgents were summoned to evacuate the village within three hours. The peasants utilized the interval to unite their forces and delivered a fourth desperate assault on the troops, advancing in the face of artillery fire and rifle volleys and getting into hand-to-hand conflicts with the soldiers. The peasants, however, were defeated in the end and the houses of the village were razed to the ground by the fire of the field guns.

Kaulbars to the Frontier.

St. Petersburg, April 6.—Owing to the restlessness among the Russian peasants on the Roumanian frontier, due to the revolt of the Roumanian peasantry, the Government has ordered Gen. Kaulbars, Governor-General of Odessa, to send a strong detachment of infantry and artillery to the frontier and to take energetic measures for the restoration of order.

RUSSIAN DOWAGER QUITS.

Accompanied by Queen Alexandra to Calais—Precautions for Safety.

London, April 6.—Queen Alexandra, the Dowager Empress of Russia, and Princess Victoria, left London for the Continent yesterday. The Queen and her sister separated at Calais, the former and Princess Victoria proceeding to Toulon, where they will join King Edward, preparatory to the meeting between the latter and King Alfonso at Cartagena. The Dowager Empress will go to Biarritz.

The same extraordinary precautions were taken for the safety of the Dowager Empress as marked her arrival in England. No one was admitted to the railroad station except on written authorization and the railroad from here to Dover was closely patrolled. A number of Russians who have arrived in England since the advent of the Dowager Empress have been kept under close surveillance since their landing.

SULTAN WILL YIELD.

France's Prompt Action Causes Consternation In Court at Fez.

Paris, April 6—The official despatches received from Fez say that the French claims were presented to the Sultan March 3. The news of the occupation of Oudja by French troops arrived at the Moorish capital March 29, the day the column entered Moorish territory. The impression prevails that the Sultan will concede all the French demands. The energetic action of France caused consternation among the court entourage at Fez, and is expected to result in a prompt reply, but no official notification of its nature has yet arrived here.

DISASTROUS TORNADO.

Several Killed and Much Damage Done By Fierce Wind.

Alexandria, La., April 6.—Several persons were killed, many others injured, and a hundred factories, stores and dwellings were wrecked by a tornado, which passed over here yesterday. The known dead number four.

Thirteen persons have been taken to a hospital suffering from various injuries. Some of the injured will die.

The city power plant and the Alexandria ice and cold storage plant are among the buildings wrecked.

Blizzard In Saskatchewan.

Regina, Sask., April 6.—Saskatchewan yesterday was in the grip of what probably is the last blizzard of the longest winter on record. Traffic again is at a standstill.

Farmers are clamoring for their seeders and harrows. Most of this northern implement business is handled from Regina, where all the big houses have warehouses. Unless a spell of fine weather comes before the spring floods there is every prospect that northern traffic will be interrupted in the Qu'Appelle Valley until after seeding operations.

Ottawa Ministers Protest.

Ottawa, April 6.—The Ottawa Ministerial Association yesterday mailed a communication to Hon. J. P. Whitney, protesting against the proposed legislation restricting the number who can oppose the holding of horse races.

The Lord's Day Alliance of Ottawa has notified the Attorney-General that there are complaints here of men working seven days a week at shunting, despatching and other work connected with railways contrary to the Lord's Day Act.

FORCED SWETTENHAM.

Colonial Office Made Peremptory Request For Apology.

London, April 6.—The Standard yesterday declared it was able to publish for the first time the circumstances leading to the resignation of Sir Alexander Swettenham, as governor of Jamaica.

The paper said that, according to Sir Alexander's own statement in a letter to an intimate friend, he resigned in consequence of a peremptory demand from the Colonial Office to apologize to Rear-Admiral Davis.

To this Sir Alexander replied that if such a course were really necessary he would do so with pleasure but that such a compulsory apology carried with it his resignation.

Sir Alexander denies emphatically that there was any dispute between him and the American admiral at the time of the Kingston earthquake, saying:

"We were the best of friends during the whole time the admiral was here. He had the use of one of my private carriages, and drove around with my private secretary."

The Standard adds that this letter was written privately as one friend might write to another, but it fell into the hands of a negro newspaper correspondent. If the documents referring to the resignation of Sir Alexander were published, the paper concludes, it would be found that the statement that he applied to be retired "on the ground of age" was entirely misleading.

HOTHOUSE REQUIRED.

M. P.'s Make Merry At Expense of Canadian Cruisers.

Ottawa, April 6.—The house, from noon yesterday, was in supply, principally respecting marine and fisheries estimates.

There was some discussion in regard to the oyster culture about Prince Edward Island. Mr. Fielding suggested that fisheries should be controlled by the Federal Government. He regretted that Ontario and Prince Edward Island could not agree to this. Twenty-five thousand dollars was appropriated towards encouraging the transportation of live fish.

At the evening session, Mr. Fowler (Conservative, N.B.) and Mr. Bennett (E. Simcoe) made merry at the expense of the Canadian navy, which requires a hothouse for its silver-lined cuspidors and the like.

One item in the estimates is for a flag, to be flown when the Minister of Marine is on board.

"What is the design of this flag?" asked Mr. Bennett.

Mr. Templeman, acting Minister, could not state.

"A man up a tree, sticking on grafts, would do all right," suggested Mr. Bennett; and both sides laughed heartily.

The House remained in supply until adjournment at 12.25 a.m.

Iron and steel bounties will be up on Monday, and the insurance commission will report on Tuesday.

ARRESTED FOR ROBBERY.

The United States Express Co. Loses $20,000 In Goods.

New York, April 6.—Four men were arrested Thursday on charges of complicity in a series of robberies, by which the United States Express Co. claims to have lost goods valued at more than $20,000. The men arrested were Charles W. Webb, 22 years old, a clerk employed by the company; Milton J. Carman, 18; Israel Aronow and Charles Cook. Webb and Carman were charged with larceny, and Aronow and Cook with receiving stolen goods. All were held under bail. The police say the goods were stolen from the company's store-room and taken out in the guise of packages for delivery. Detectives have been working on the case for some time.

IMMIGRANT WAS KILLED.

Did Not Heed Gong on Winnipeg Car.

Winnipeg, Man., April 6.—Joseph Wrixon was killed by being caught under the wheels of a trolley car on Main street Thursday night. With two other men he was standing on the track as a car approached, and though the motorman, John McLaughlin, rang the gong, they did not move, and were struck, it being too late to stop the car after it was seen that they were not going to get out of its way. Wrixon was under the car nearly three-quarters of an hour before he could be released, and was still living when removed to the hospital. He was an English immigrant, recently arrived.

Speaker St. John Dead.

Relapse Came on Friday When All Hope Vanished.

Passed Into Condition Known as Diabetic Coma But Was Unconscious From 2 a.m. on Sunday--Public Funeral on Wednesday--Was a Picturesque Figure--Found Fitting Post in Speaker's Office.

Toronto, April 8.—Hon. J. W. St. John, Speaker of the Ontario Legislature, died at noon Sunday at the Toronto General Hospital.

The funeral will take place on Wednesday, preceded by a service at the Speaker's chambers in the Legislative Building, Queen's Park, at 2 p. m.

The deceased will be given a public funeral by the Ontario Legislature.

It was two weeks ago this morning that the news of Mr. St. John's illness was made public, he having been operated on for appendicitis the night before.

On the previous Saturday night at 10 o'clock Mr. St. John was taken with pains and sought relief before retiring. Next morning he felt no better, and became confined to the house, while he sought local remedies to relieve the pain.

Operation Necessary.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the family physician, Dr. Bascom, was sent for. In the evening, the Speaker becoming worse, Dr. W. P. Caven was called in consultation. His nephew, Dr. Glendinning, was also present. It was then decided that he had a very acute form of appendicitis, and that an immediate operation would give him the only chance of recovery.

Accordingly, he was removed to the Toronto General Hospital in an ambulance. He arrived there at 11 p. m., when an operation was immediately performed by Dr. Bruce. The operation showed a most critical condition, as his appendix was gangrenous.

HON. J. W. ST. JOHN

Immediately after the operation, Dr. Bruce stated that the bowel was almost perforated, and that, had the operation been delayed for a few hours more, death would have resulted from gangrene.

Mr. St. John made a most satisfactory recovery from the operation; so much so that, toward the end of the first week, the attending physician and Dr. John Caven considered him out of danger.

Unfortunately, however, he was suffering from a chronic malady, diabetes, which suddenly took on an acute form last Sunday.

Friends understood then the significance of the late Speaker's rapid reduction of weight, over which he had been wont to make merry.

Since then his life has been despaired of. He rallied, however, somewhat on Wednesday last, which improvement was maintained throughout Thursday. He had a relapse again on Friday, when he gradually passed into a condition known as diabetic coma. He died at 12 o'clock on Sunday.

He was unconscious from 2 a. m. Sunday until his death.

Public Funeral.

A Cabinet meeting was held on Sunday afternoon, as soon as the Ministers had been acquainted with the news. Preliminary arrangements were made for a public funeral (to be distinguished from a state funeral).

The last public funeral in this province was that of Sir Oliver Mowat in April, 1903.

Bryce At Chicago.

Chicago, April 8.—James Bryce, British Ambassador to the United States after spending a busy day in Chicago attending luncheons and visiting a score of large commercial and industrial establishments, was the guest of honor Saturday night at a banquet given by the Commercial Club at the Auditorium Hotel.

There were 175 prominent business and professional men about the board. Ambassador Bryce was the only speaker during the evening. His topic was "The Modern City in Relation to the State."

Corruption In Morocco.

London, April 8.—Corruption in Morocco is reported to have reached that stage where civil officials are selling Government land and pocketing the proceeds, and supreme military commanders are purchasing so much gold coin with which to pay imaginary troops that the premium on French and English gold has risen.

Insane Patient Burned.

South Windham, Conn., April 8.—One woman, Mrs. Laura Backus, an insane patient, lost her life in the fire which destroyed the Grandview Sanitarium here early on Saturday. All the other patients were taken out of the building without harm, although there was no time to clothe them.

BODY FOUND ON TRACK.

Dr. McQueen, an Edinburgh Physician, Killed.

Winnipeg, April 8.—Dr. McQueen, a physician, whose home was in Edinburgh, Scotland, was killed on the C. P. R. near Gonor, east of here, Saturday night, either by falling out of the car window or off the platform of the delayed express. Nobody saw the accident, and nothing was known of it until the crew of the express yesterday found the body and brought it to Winnipeg. The dead man's hat was found a few yards beyond the body, and it is surmised it blew off, and in endeavoring to recover it he lost his balance and fell to his death in the darkness. He had no friends here, and members of the medical profession have taken charge of the remains. He was about 35 years of age.

MURDER AT EDMONTON?

Body of George Wood Found In a Pool of Blood.

Edmonton, Alta., April 8.—In a shack where he and his two chums, Dick Hood and John Peacock, had lived together for some time, the body of George Wood, a carpenter, was found in a pool of blood Saturday morning. There was a wound on the back of the head, and a man named Albert Jones informs the police that, during a drunken row, he saw Hood strike Wood on the head with a bottle, at the same time exclaiming, "You beat this afternoon, but I will do you now." Hood, Peacock and John Pepper are under arrest.

FAST TRAIN WRECKED.

Pennsylvania Flyer Purposely Ditched Near Pittsburg.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 8.—Train No. 322, eastbound, the fastest train on the Pennsylvania R. R. between Pittsburg and Cleveland, was wrecked Saturday near Hudson, Ohio, 123 miles west of here. None of the passengers were injured, but the fireman, who jumped when the accident occurred, and was seriously injured.

According to the railroad officials, the train was purposely wrecked. An investigation disclosed that the attempt made by the wreckers was the same used several times in this vicinity recently.

Team On Cow Catcher.

Cobalt, April 8.—Saturday afternoon the northbound mail train running at full speed just outside Cobalt station struck a sleigh and team belonging to Nipissing mine. The driver, named McDonald, jumped and got clear, but the horses and sleigh were carried for about a hundred feet before going down grade. They were not badly hurt, but the sleigh had to be fused out from under the cowcatcher.

Fire At Lion's Head.

Lion's Head, April 8.—The Royal Hotel and stables, owned by A. Morrin, also the dwelling house of T. A. Burin, with most of the contents, were destroyed by Saturday morning; cause unknown. Both buildings were insured.

A young man named George Webster, while endeavoring to help quench the flames, fell from a ladder and broke his leg.

Suicides From Ferry.

Quebec, April 8.—A young man about 24 years old, named Joseph Picard, from Cacouna, fell from the ferry boat between Quebec and Levis, about 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon and was drowned. His body has not yet been recovered. It seems to be a case of suicide.

How disappointed these days are the ladies. Here they have had their neat, new, natty spring suits made for some time and the weather is so cold that they cannot wear them. Alas for high hopes and bright pictures. The joys of expectation are generally greater than the pleasures of realization. How strikingly true this is in reference to spring costumes.

Some of his followers in the Ontario Legislature are finding fault with Leader Graham for endorsing the increases in salary of the Cabinet Ministers. They think that they should first have been consulted. No political leader finds his course a path of roses, but those Grits, who are rebuking Mr. Graham, should remember that it is not advisable to start pulling against their chief so early in the game.

Brigadier General Lord Aylmer, Inspector General of the militia force of Canada, one of the best known and most popular militia officers of the Dominion, who succeeded Lord Dundonald, has been retired from his position by an Order-in-Council. The ostensible reason is that Lord Aylmer is 65 years old—the age limit—and yet it is proposed to appoint Lieut.-Col. Vidal, Adjutant-General, as his successor, a man who is 64 years of age and has not had nearly the experience of Lord Aylmer. Military men all over Canada are disgusted at the cavalier and summary manner in which Lord Aylmer has been dealt with by the Laurier Government, as well they may be.

The Grand Trunk announces, says the Ottawa Journal, its intention to make a general improvement in its stations in all parts of the system. Twenty stations are to be erected in Ontario alone, not counting the big ones in Ottawa and Toronto. In improving the convenience and the appearance of its stations, the Grand Trunk is following an admirable English precedent, which also has been followed with great success by the Pennsylvania railroad. There is no reason why the railway station with its approaches should not be the show place of the neighborhood."

The Grand Trunk could hardly find a better place to build a handsome new depot than Belleville. The present station has been a long time in use; it never was noted for architectural beauty. Among the twenty new stations to be erected in Ontario an ornate and modern one in Belleville should certainly be included.

French-Canadian Paper's Plain Talk

LE CANADIEN SAYS PEOPLE WILL NOT TOLERATE MINISTER WHO ACTS BADLY.

Montreal, April 7. — Le Canadien publishes another outspoken article to-day very similar, in fact, to the one immediately preceding the retirement of Hon. H. R. Emmerson. The French-Conservative paper says that Sir Wilfrid Laurier made it quite clear that he does not wish to have an investigation.

"We deplore," the paper adds, "this grave mistake on the part of the prime minister, as he should not have acted in this manner. He should not defy an entire country and expose the nation in order to save his party. In refusing an investigation he shows that he does not want the people to be made acquainted with the truth. But the people of Canada have rights that cannot be overlooked or denied, neither has Sir Wilfrid Laurier the right to ignore or deride them.

"The people will not endure any longer the very grave rumors which are circulating on all sides and in the best informed circles regarding certain ministers. The people of this country will not stand by and see their representatives and ministers of the crown behave themselves like people we see every morning before the recorder's court. A minister who gets drunk every day and bums round with bad women cannot wisely administer his department. The people pay him $10,000 a year for his work and the moment such scandalous rumors get afloat the people should know if there is any truth in them. Sir Wilfrid should not, therefore prevent the light from being shed on this matter. They want to know the whole truth and the prime minister will regret the mistake he has made."

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you, you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S QUEUE,

It Hid a Luxuriant Suit of Straight and Very Dark Hair.

The Father of his Country concealed a luxuriant suit of hair beneath his queue wig. Many now wish the old fashion were in vogue, to conceal thinned hair or baldness. Yet no one need have thin hair nor be bald, if he cure the dandruff that causes both. Dandruff can not be cured by scouring the scalp, because it is a germ disease, and the germ has to be killed. Newbro's Herpicide kills the dandruff germ—no other hair preparation will. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." There's no sure for dandruff but to kill the germ. Sold by leading druggists. The Ross Rifle.

While more sensational events have absorbed most of the public interest during the past few days, other business has gone on in the committee rooms of the House of Commons. The Public Accounts Committee has continued the Ross rifle investigation and examined a melancholy list of adverse reports from all parts of the country on this weapon. Some of the officers who forwarded these reports have been examined. The witnesses included a sergeant-major of the Mounted Police, who had been seriously injured by a Ross rifle accident. The remarkable fact came out in the evidence that the Mounted Police are now without rifles.

The Ross rifle served out to them has been declared unsuitable, and the whole supply was returned to Ottawa. This happened a year or two ago, and the force has not been supplied either with improved Ross rifles or any other weapon.

It was also shown that a St. John corps failed to perform its annual shooting practice because the men considered the rifle dangerous and officers did not care under the circumstances to take the responsibility of ordering them out.

The committee has followed up the sub-target contract far enough to discover that nine promoters of the company who paid Mr. Jewell $500,000 in stock and some money for his patent rights received back as a gift $25,000 each in the same stock. Among these directors, each of whom paid in $500 only, was H. H. Wickwire, then the member for the Nova Scotia Legislature for Sir Frederick Borden's county of King's, and one of the Minister's chief campaign managers.

The last day's evidence goes to show that Mr. Jewell sent Mr. Wickwire a remittance of $9,000, out of which a dispute between some of the directors and Mr. Jewell arose. It may be pertinent to observe that this occurred late in October, 1904, a week or two before the general elections.

A Simple Spring Hat

Fashion repeats itself with slight modifications every few years. It would appear from the following 'poem,' taken from one of the magazines for March, 1899, that the spring hats of that year had certain features in common with the ultra-fashionable hat of this season.

If my muse is propitious, I'm going to sing
Of a very remarkable sort of a thing:
'Tis the structure the women this year call a 'hat',
It might be 'most anything, so why not that?

And if any woman who's got half a will in her
Would like to know how she can be her own milliner,
And thus possess one of those wondrous confections,
She has but to follow these simple directions;

First, take for the ground-work what's known as a frame
(The shape doesn't matter; no two are the same),
Then take lots of ribbon, and make into bows,
Wide, narrow, red, yellow, mauve—everything goes.

Next scatter these ribbon bows over the crown,
In front and behind, wrong side out upside down;
If you put them on blindfold, you'll get an effect
That the leaders of fashion will cry is 'correct.'

Then gather gay garlands of marvellous hue,
Green roses, pink lilacs, and poppies of blue,
And place them in bunches wherever there's room,
Till you've built up a bower of fanciful bloom.

The hat, if you've carefully followed my words,
Is now ready for adding occasional birds,
Two wings, a few feathers, a pompon, some lace,
And three jewelled hat-pins to keep it in place.

You now have a head-gear that no one would know
Was not a creation of Madame Virot;
And if you've good taste, you will hide it away,
And buy a neat 'sailor' to wear every day.

Bring your visiting card plate to The Intelligencer office. We will do your engraving promptly as cheap as elsewhere, guaranteeing first-class workmanship. 10-dtf

AN OFFER

TO THE WEAK AND WEARY WOMEN OF BELLEVILLE.

"There are hundreds of women in this vicinity who are dragging themselves through life in pain and misery, without vitality, strength or health," said our local druggist, Mr. J. S. McKeown. "They get no happiness out of life and are just in a condition to be attacked by almost any disease. They need a vitality-making and strength-creating tonic.

"Now, at our expense, we want to ask every such woman to try our cod liver preparation, Vinol, which contains, beside tonic iron, the medicinal elements of cod liver oil, but no oil or grease. It is delicious to take, creates a healthy appetite, makes pure, rich, red blood, and gives strength and vigor to every organ of the body better than any medicine we have ever sold in our store, and when a woman is in this condition it makes life worth living.

"When we say 'at our expense' we mean that if the medicine you buy from us and pay for does not benefit you, we will refund every cent of it cheerfully, and thus you try it at our expense." J. S. McKeown, druggist.

Jimmy Will Walk 134 Miles on a $1200 Wager

James Reynolds, the town hairdresser at Port Hope, who gained considerable notoriety by walking from Port Hope to Toronto last fall in 19 1-2 hours for a side bet of $200, has by no means dropped out of the sporting limelight. Not content with accomplishing that task he has wagered $300 against $1,200 that he can walk from Port Hope to Toronto and return, a distance of 134 miles in 38 hours. Last fall he made the trip from Port Hope to Toronto on a short notice and had little chance to get in condition. He was allowed 21 hours to make the journey, but he did it in 19 1-2 hours, and was in comparatively good condition at the finish. Reynolds is a chubby little fellow, 5 feet 4 1-2 inches in height and weighing about 150 pounds. In his younger days he was a professional sack-racer and claims many records at that style of running. In order to cover the distance he must average 3 1-2 miles an hour, which practically means that he will have no time to sleep. He claims that he can make the trip to Toronto in 17 hours, which allows him 21 hours to walk back. He will take no chance of being served with "doped" food and will eat nothing but what is given him by his attendant, who will accompany him in an automobile.

Literary Notes

ROD AND GUN.

Every fisherman feels the unrest of spring, and desires to be off with his rod as soon as the open season commences. That pleasant unrest will be strengthened by the appearance of the Spring Fishing Number which forms the April issue of 'Rod and Gun and Motor Sports in Canada,' published by W. J. Taylor, of Woodstock, Ont. In this number fishing is told about in various parts of Canada and the stories are such as to delight the heart of the fishermen. The humor in those of Mr. E. J. McVeigh and Mr. C. H. Hooper form a bright relief from the more serious side of the pastime, and may be as much enjoyed by the general reader as by those devoted to piscatorial pursuits. A paper that may be heartily commended for the consideration of every one—inasmuch as everyone is interested in the subject—is that on The Common White Fish, by Mr. C. H. Wilson, who writes with knowledge on a subject of international importance. While fishermen will find plenty of particular interest to themselves, other sportsmen are not neglected and wolves and deer both have papers devoted to them. "Why Our Deer are Vanishing," forms a capital sequel to "Our Vanishing Deer," in the March number, a paper which has excited much interest amongst sportsmen in general. The Future of the Algonquin National Park, the changes now in process in the Ontario Game Laws, the Game Society meeting in Nova Scotia and many other topics all find places in this number, and justify the claim of the Magazine to be considered the foremost exponent of outdoor life in Canada. The number is one which is a credit to the Dominion.

Warden Tinsley Says Abolish The Permits.

BELIEVES GAME WILL BE EXTERMINATED IN NORTH IF ACTION IS NOT TAKEN.

Toronto, April 8.—The last annual report of the Ontario Board of Game Commissioners has been issued, the new act now in progress through the Legislature abolishing this body.

Chief Warden Tinsley points out that the liberty now given to Indians and settlers in the unorganized territory must be considerably curtailed if game is not to be quite exterminated in these districts. He recommends the abolition of hunting permits to settlers in these territories, and that only the ordinary license privileges be allowed them in the proper seasons.

It is reckoned that 12,000 deer were killed in 1905, or about four times as many as the express companies had trace of. The companies conveyed 4292 in 1906 and 3310 in 1905. In 1906 settlers' permits numbered 2774; deer hunters' licenses, 6285; non-resident licenses, 447, and moose licenses, 283. The revenue from these sources amounted to $25,620.

Wolves are recognized as especially destructive, and efforts for their extermination will be encouraged. In 1906 the bounties paid were $8360, for 612 wolves killed.

The "Italian element" is singled out by one of the wardens as a cause of destruction to birds and small game. This is in connection with railway construction. The warden also notes the number of wolves, and suggests an increase in the bounty.

Another warden describes a beaver colony twelve miles from Peterboro, and several others in Harvey Township, Peterboro County. A herd of moose in Renfrew County last January is also reported.

Oshawa Papers Say Strenuous Things.

The constable question in Oshawa is causing considerable trouble and here is the way the press deals with the matter;

(From the Reformer, March 22.)

CONSTABLE HARDY, STAND UP.

You the pet and guardian of big Graham, the Vindicator splinter, and who common report credits with supplying that sheet with police court news, written with a view of making you out a great hero who on Saturday night, instead of doing your duty by dispersing a disorderly crowd on King street, were made an exhibition of by your cowardice and only saved from being punched by the timely arrival of Constable Crawford. You who served a summons on a man and afterwards withdrew it because he threatened to hit you if you would divest yourself of your uniform. You with record which you brag of for making a large amount of fees for yourself through fines imposed largely on drunken men, unguilty of any disturbing act. You who are looking for a small job with a graft in it for yourself. You who have during the winter nights shovelled the snow off of the walk in front of Councillor Crysdale's store—for a reason too obvious to state. Where were you on Wednesday night when thieves were burglarizing T. H. McMurtry's store?

The Vindicator says: We characterize this Reformer class of journalism as disgraceful, but to bring the lesson home to the Reformer, we ask how would Judge Mundy like to read the following:

JUDGE MUNDY, STAND UP.

You bogus judge. You keeper of the Little Dark Room, and sponsor for its methods. You life-long office hunter as a reward for injuring your party. You backer of everything that will secure you a 75 cent job of printing. You scapegoat editor, ready to father any filth that may be offered for your columns. You ill-natured, ever growling, sometimes crawling, but always urgent specimen of a real grafter. What license have you to defame a public officer because he performs his duty conscientiously and well?

By Special Messenger.

By WARING MITCHELL.

Copyright, 1906, by Homer Sprague.

On that certain Tuesday morning, when Colonel Graves got ready to start for the city from his country place, he said to his daughter Winnie:

"It is possible that I may want those Mexican bonds this afternoon, and here is the key of the safe. If I have to have them, I will send you a note by a special messenger."

The colonel was something of a lawyer, speculator and broker, and Miss Winnie was his nineteen-year-old daughter. She acted as his amanuensis at home and was pretty familiar with his business transactions. The bonds spoken of had a face value of $20,000, but of late had been rather wabbly in the market and had caused the colonel considerable anxiety. At 1 o'clock that afternoon he wanted the bonds and telephoned his daughter to that effect, saying that he would send a messenger. Instead of sending a boy from the regular service he stepped into the office of Jones next door and said:

"Jones, I want a trusty fellow to run out to my house and bring me back some bonds. Haven't I noticed a young man around here?"

"Yes. He's a nephew of mine. He's out now, but write a line and I'll send him when he returns. He ought to go out to East Park and back in an hour."

The colonel wrote a line to Miss Winnie to deliver the bonds to bearer and then went out on "the street" on business. Fifteen minutes later Jones' nephew was making for the Grand Central station as fast as the express in the subway would carry him.

Jones hadn't given the young man's biography, but it may be stated that his name was Vincent Gray, his age twenty-two, and he was in the office of his uncle to learn the devious ways of Wall street before setting up in business for himself on the comfortable fortune left him by a deceased aunt. For a young man who expected to come in contact with bulls and bears and other animals, young Gray was very trustful of human nature. For instance, while his train was speeding along underneath the streets and he was hanging to a strap thinking of things financial a young man with ambitions leaned against him and picked his pocket without exciting the least suspicion.

The light fingered youth found there only a cardcase and the letter to Miss Winnie, but they were sufficient to bring about several unlooked for results. He passed into another car and opened and read the letter, and he saw the golden opportunity he had been long looking for. In the cardcase were two or three dollar bills. The thief had a right to infer that his victim had no more money about him. He likewise had a right to infer that young Gray could not produce the wherewithal to buy a ticket for East Park. The fare was only 20 cents, but without it a man is as badly off as if the sum were $5.

There was a train ready to leave. The thief bought his ticket and got aboard. Vincent Gray stood at the ticket window and fussed and fumbled and was left. His cardcase and money were gone, and when he found that the letter had also taken wings he realized that he was in trouble. He hadn't even a nickel to get back to the office. He hadn't the wherewithal to telephone to his uncle Jones in New street, and after wasting fifteen minutes trying to figure out the problem he made haste to a pawnshop, where he put down his watch for $5.

The next train to East Park was ten minutes late in starting and the same in reaching the Park, so there were in all fifty minutes lost. The young man had not suspected that he was the victim of a pickpocket, but supposed he had lost his property in the jam while boarding the car. He had been told that a telephone message would precede him, and he had remembered the address. Therefore he did not worry so much over the loss of the letter. It was only when he came face to face with Winnie Graves and stated his errand and saw her look of surprise and distrust that he realized the situation.

"Why, sir," she replied, "those bonds were delivered to a messenger more than half an hour ago."

"But I was sent for them and was delayed."

"If you were sent for them, you must have a line from my father."

"I—I had a line, but unfortunately I lost it, together with my money. My name is Vincent Gray, and I am in the office of Ezra Jones, in the same building with your father. I am afraid that some rascal found the lost letter and has taken advantage of it."

"And I am afraid that another rascal is trying to do the same thing!" exclaimed Miss Winnie's Aunt Ruth, who was at the head of the house and who had entered the library just in time to hear the young man's words.

"But, madam, you surely can't think that I"—

"I can think what I please, sir. Can you imagine we were idiotic enough to give up those bonds without a written order from Colonel Graves?"

"But whoever presented that order was an impostor."

"Perhaps so, and perhaps it is the impostor who is here now. Winnie, go to the telephone and ask your father the name of the messenger he sent. He wouldn't have sent Tom, Dick or Harry on such an important errand. Young man, sit down here until we find out the truth of this matter."

The girl went to the telephone, and the young man sat down with visions of policemen and prison bars passing before his eyes. The aunt took a seat directly in front of him and stared at him in a cold, cruel way—a way that gave him to understand that she would let no guilty man escape. After three or four minutes Winnie returned to the room to say:

"That's always the way. Central tells me that the line into the city is crossed or something and it may be an hour or more before they find out the trouble and remedy it."

"Then I will go back and tell your father the situation," said Mr. Gray. "Some sharper has the bonds, and the police should be notified at once."

"You will sit right here until that telephone wire is in working order!" announced Aunt Ruth. "There are men about the place, and we have dogs and guns, and if you try to run away it will be the worse for you. Winnie, notify the coachman that we have a suspicious character in the house."

"She needn't do anything of the sort. I will sit here until you have solved the mystery. I am to blame for losing the letter, but if the bonds are not recovered it will not be my fault."

"He doesn't look like a suspicious person," whispered Winnie to her aunt, but in tones loud enough so that he caught the words and turned red again.

"He may not to you, who can't tell a robber from a church deacon. But he does to me, and here he shall stay until we know all about it. You sit down in the hall and wait for the telephone, and I'll keep him under my eyes."

Aunt Ruth leaned back in her chair, folded her arms, compressed her lips and fastened her eyes on Mr. Gray, and had he been a bunko man of ten years' standing he must have been disconcerted. As it was, he coughed and blushed and hitched around and crossed and recrossed his legs. When the aunt broke the silence, it was to impart no cheerful information. What she said was:

"It makes you squirm to realize that you've reached the end of your rope at last, but you'll squirm more still when the judge pronounces sentence. While I pity your poor mother, I hope you'll get at least ten years."

Mr. Gray made no reply. He couldn't find words. About every ten minutes for the next hour he received a brief, vigorous lecture until he was almost worked up to the point where he thought of jumping through a window and taking his chances, when a man's step was heard. There was an "Oh, papa!" from Miss Winnie in the hall, and Colonel Graves stalked in to exclaim:

"What in the devil is the matter here?"

"There he sits!" replied Aunt Ruth as she pointed to the culprit.

It took about ten minutes to unravel things—that is, to establish Vincent Gray's identity. Fortunately by this time the telephone was working, and fortunately Mr. Jones was in his office. It took five minutes more to discover that Winnie had given the false messenger Honduras instead of Mexican bonds and that the colonel was simply relieved of some waste paper.

When it came to apologies and inviting Mr. Gray to forgive and forget and stay to dinner, perhaps a full quarter of an hour was consumed, but it is not on record that Mr. Gray regarded the time as thrown away.

Now when the colonel smiles and throws out hints at his prospective son-in-law Miss Winnie blushes and protests. Aunt Ruth assumes one of her sweetest looks and says:

"I don't say I shall leave when he becomes one of the family, but I do say that I shall always lock up my jewelry when I go to bed and lock and bolt the door!"

Remarkable Loss of Memory.

Dr. Macnish in his book on "The Philosophy of Sleep" gives the following remarkable instance of lost memory:

"A young American woman on awakening from a protracted sleep lost memory of all she had before learned. Her memory was capacious and was stored with a copious stock of ideas. Unexpectedly and without any forewarning she fell into a profound sleep, which continued several hours beyond the ordinary term. On waking she was discovered to have lost every trace of acquired knowledge. Her memory was a clean washed slate. All vestiges both of words and things were obliterated and gone. It was found necessary for her to learn everything again. She even acquired by new efforts the arts of spelling, reading, writing and calculating and gradually became acquainted with the persons and objects around, like a being for the first time brought into the world. In these exercises she made considerable proficiency. But after a few months another fit of somnolency invaded her. On rousing from it she found herself restored to the state she was in before the first paroxysm, but was wholly ignorant of every event and occurrence that had befallen her afterward."

The Chilling Reply.

According to a Washington legal light, there are times when a lawyer regrets the use of an illustration which a moment before has appeared especially felicitous.

"The argument of my learned and brilliant colleague," said counsel for the plaintiff in a suit for damages from a railway company, "is like the snow now falling outside—it is scattered here, there and everywhere."

Whereupon opposing counsel improved his opportunity. "All I can say," he hastily interposed, "is that the gentleman who has likened my argument to the snow now falling outside has neglected to observe one little point to which I flatter myself the similarity extends—it has covered all the ground in a very short time."—Harper's Weekly.

Bruchesi Still Busy.

Montreal, April 8.—Archbishop Bruchesi is extending the scope of his censorship. He now expresses his conviction that such books as the works of Voltaire, Rousseau, and others ought not to be included in the Civic Library at the Monument National. The City Hall Committee in charge of the Civic Library have been discussing the question with him, and it is thought that they will comply with his request and remove what he calls "objectionable" books from their list.

HINDOO HEAVENS.

Four Degrees of Bliss to Which the Departed Spirits Pass.

The Hindoos believe in four special abodes of the righteous after death. The first is called Sara-loga, "God's world;" the second, Sameeba, "Near to God;" the third, Sarobam, "God's image," and the fourth, Sayutcheyam, which signifies "to be absorbed in him."

To Sara-loga, the first degree of bliss, go the souls of all of those who have ever made a pilgrimage to a holy place or who have paid for the temple lights for one month. In Sara-loga there is great happiness and no work or sickness. The inmate is allowed to read the five sacred books, drink ambrosia and hear the houris sing.

To Sameeba go the spirits of all Keerikarar, or workers in the Brahman cause; also those who forego the comforts of life, such as sleeping in a recumbent position, eating sufficiently, etc. Their happiness consists chiefly of continually praising God.

To Sarobam, the third heaven, go the souls of such as never spoil God's model by shaving or paring the nails. These are the Brahman Yogis. They wander about the earth, always going from left to right. They eat nothing but nauseous food and live in a constant state of abstraction on divine subjects.

The fourth heaven, Sayutcheyam, is the coming abode of the "nyane," or philosophers. These nyane pay no attention to heat or cold, never bathe and often go for weeks without food. If they are sick, no one knows it but themselves. They are the stoics of the world of today and believe that in Sayutcheyam they will eventually be absorbed in the deity.

TRAINING ANIMALS.

Obeying the Word Regardless of the Tone and Manner.

It is true that animals can be taught to obey a tone alone—that is, a mere sound having no place among the lists of words. So may a human being. Therefore that proves nothing. It is likewise true that you may say a thing in a tone that contradicts the word, and the animal may or may not respond to the tone only, but the same effort will produce the same effect on any sensitive child, woman or man. Again, horses and dogs are the most sensitive of all brutes, the most easily offended, encouraged, discouraged. Therefore, need one be surprised if he finds it takes a long lesson to teach a horse or dog to obey the word regardless of the tone and manner? That either can be so taught, however, thousands of people know from their own experience.

I can say to my little Gipsy, "Come here and let me whip you," in the quietest, softest, most smiling style, and she comes cringing, trembling and ashamed, showing unmistakably that she considers the word "whip" humiliating and hateful, yet hopes I do not intend to inflict any punishment. Then I can frown my worst and shout out as savagely as I please, "No; you're a good dog!" and she frisks about joyfully, although she dislikes harsh tones even in sport.—Forest and Stream.

Cleaning Brass.

Here is the government recipe for cleaning brass. It is used in all the United States arsenals and is said to be the best in the world. This is the recipe: One part of common nitric acid to half a part of sulphuric acid. Keep the mixture in a stone jar, having ready a pailful of fresh water and a boxful of sawdust. Articles to be cleaned must first be dipped in the acid mixture, then into the water and dried with sawdust. This process of cleaning will change the brass immediately to a brilliant color. If the metal is greasy—as candlesticks would be—dip first in a strong solution of potash and soda, in warm weather. This cuts the grease and permits the acid to work. This method of cleaning brass is entirely harmless and is very satisfactory.

Nicknames.

"It's funny how a nickname, given to one during one's boyhood, will stick to one throughout a lifetime," said a man recently. "The variety of nicknames is also amusing. If I were asked to explain the conditions, I should say that it was because the 'rest of the kids' didn't like the real names and just substituted others to suit themselves. For instance, a boy comes to school with a lengthy name that a fond mother has given him with no doubt in the world that he will bear it all his life. Usually her fond hopes are shattered and the little 'dear' will come home from school the proud possessor of such a 'hang-on' as Tip, Rip, Bull or Buck. And it sticks too."

A Powerful Salve.

A man in Nebraska invented a new powerful double acting salve which shows powers never before exhibited by salves of any kind. The inventor accidentally cut off the tail of a tame wolf, and, immediately applying some of the salve to the stump, a new tail grew out. Then, picking up the old tail, he applied some of the salve to the raw end of that, and a wolf grew out, but he was a wild wolf and had to be shot.

THE BABY.

He is so little to be so loved!
Naked and shameless,
Beggared and blameless,
And for all he could tell us even nameless,
Yet every one in the house bows down
As if the mendicant wore a crown.

He is so little to be so loud!
Oh, I own, I should be wondrous proud
If I had a tongue
And swiveled and swung,
With a double-back action twin-screw lung
Which brought me victuals and love and care,
Whenever I shook the surrounding air.

He is so little to be so large!
Why, a train of cars or a whaleback barge
Couldn't carry the freight
Of the monstrous weight
Of all his qualities good and great,
And, though one view is as good as another,
Don't take my word for it. Ask his mother.

Now it is being experimented on in a careful and scientific way, and there are expectations of great results.

Here is an item which local merchants should heed: "The other day a merchant in the town of Mitchell saw a farmer receiving goods at the station, from a Toronto mail order house. The goods were in his line, and the same as he carried in his store for years. He approached the farmer and said, "I could have sold you every article you have there for less money than you paid the Toronto house, and saved you the freight besides." "Then why on earth didn't you say so?" answered the farmer. "I have taken the Mitchell Advocate for years, and have never seen a line about your selling these goods. The Toronto house sent advertising matter to me asking for my trade, and they got it." The same thing is happening every day in other towns If you have bargains, have them put in the papers, so that the farmers can catch on."

MANY ANIMALS BURNED.

Horses and Cattle Die In Barns Near Thorold.

Thorold, Ont., April 8.—A disastrous fire occurred Saturday night in Thorold Township, resulting in the entire wiping out of the extensive barns of William Vanderburg, whose place is on the Canboro road. Six horses and several head of cattle were burned, together with all the hay the barns contained and some chickens.

Mr. Vanderburg was awakened by the bright glare from the flames, and already the building were completely wrapped in fire. He tried to get the live stock out by chopping the stable doors down, but it was too late to save them. The loss will be probably $3,000, which is partly covered by insurance.

The cause of the fire is a mystery, but it is supposed that tramps who had gone there to pass the night set the hay on fire with their pipes. The barn was one of the largest in the county.

MANNERS AT TABLE.

The Etiquette of Eating in the Seventeenth Century.

An account of hospitality in 1629 gives a good idea of the manner in which a country gentleman of the period lived. Dinner and supper were brought in by the servants with their hats on, a custom which is corroborated by Fynes Moryson, who says that, being at a knight's house who had many servants to attend him, they brought in the meats with their heads covered with blue caps. After washing their hands in a basin they sat down to dinner, and Sir James Pringle said grace. The viands seemed to have been plentiful and excellent—"big pottage, long kale, bowe of white kale," which is cabbage; "brach soppe," powdered beef, roast and boiled mutton, a venison pie in form of an egg, goose. Then they had cheese, cut and uncut, and apples. But the close of the feast was the most curious thing about it.

The tablecloth was removed, and on the table were put a "towel the whole breadth of the table and half the length of it, a basin and ewer to wash, then a green carpet laid on, then one cup of beer set on the carpet, then a little long lawn servitter plaited over the corner of the table and a glass of hot water set down also on the table; then be there three boys to say grace—the first, the thanksgiving; the second, the Pater Noster; the third, prayer for a blessing of God's church. The good man of the house, his parents, kinfolk and the whole company then do drink hot waters, so at supper, then to bed, the collation which (is) a stoupe of all."

BRAIN QUALITY.

It Is of Just as Much Importance as the Quantity.

The brain of Daniel Webster weighed fifty-six or fifty-seven ounces, that of Napoleon Bonaparte about the same. This is about three pounds and a half. These were exceeded by the brain of Cuvier, the great French naturalist, which weighed between fifty-nine and sixty ounces, and that of the French surgeon Dupuytren, which weighed fifty-eight ounces. The average weight of the brain of man is about fifty ounces and of women forty-five ounces. The maximum weight of the healthy adult brain is about sixty-four ounces and the minimum thirty-one ounces. Men of great intellectual power have generally if not always possessed large brains. The quality of the brain is, however, quite as important as the quantity, so that a large brain does not of necessity constitute a great man. The size of the brain is not in proportion to the physical development of the body, either in animals or in man. The horse has a brain less in weight than the smallest adult human brain; that of a whale seventy-five feet long was found to weigh not quite twice as much as that of a man. Even in men there is no fixed relation between the size of the body and that of the brain. A small man may have a large brain and a big man a small brain.

Warship Models.

Paraffin wax models of all proposed British battleships are used by the admiralty for tests before the keels of the ships are laid down, the miniatures being tested in a great tank. The models are from twelve to twenty-four feet long, the tank being 400 feet long and twenty feet wide. The models are made of wax because it is a material which does not absorb water or change its weight, so that alterations can be easily made, and the material can be melted up and used again. The American naval authorities also have models of all their hulls constructed, but these are much more elaborate than the British, being formed of white pine and fitted with rudders, false keels, propeller shafts and all et ceteras.

Mixed Metaphors.

Sir Robert Purvis, addressing his old constituents at Peterborough in defense of an act of parliament under whose operation some of them had gone to prison for a week, said: "That, gentlemen, is the marrow of the education act, and it will not be taken out by Dr. Clifford or anybody else. It is founded on a granite foundation, and it speaks in a voice not to be drowned by sectarian clamor." In an address to the Kaiser Wilhelm's father a Rheinlander mayor said, "No Austria, no Prussia, one only Germany. Such were the words the mouth of your imperial majesty has always had in its eye."

London's Fogs.

November is London's worst month for fogs. During a good year the Londoner may have to breathe only fifty fogs. In a very bad year he may have to endure as many as eighty. London's countless coal fires, mingling soot with mist, concoct the Londoner's fog for him. The great majority of fogs in the metropolis begin to form between 7 and 8 in the morning, just when most fires are being lighted.

Changed.

"Hello, Pepper, old chap!" exclaimed a man to another. "You have altered—scarcely knew you."

"My name—haw—is not Pepper," protested the other haughtily.

"Ah," remarked the first speaker, in no way abashed, "then your name has altered too! By-by."

mysterious smile, those blue eyes delicately dull, was he not just like his grandfather, indefinable and impenetrable? What was the real man concealed behind that regal presence? What were the real thoughts masked by that gaze, slightly bored yet caressing and sweet?

"You do not like the King?" Andre asked quickly, for he had caught behind the pale blue mask a swift glance which sent a shiver down his spine.

"I love him," she answered, "as all we women do. But I was thinking of the day when I am to be burnt for a witch."

It was not the truth and Andre knew it. A woman's jealousy, he thought—but that, too, he knew it was not.

"My friend," she said, "go you and salute Madame d'Etiolles. Perhaps you will see something later on to amuse you," and as if to assist him she glided from him and was lost in the crowd.

She had divined his mind again. To speak with the fair huntress was the resolve that had mastered him. And to his satisfaction Madame no sooner recognized him than she beckoned with her fan, smiling a shy and intoxicating welcome.

Andre kissed her hand, looking into her eyes, imperial eyes in which slumbered imperial ambitions, such wonderful eyes, now blue, now grey, now softly dark as the violet, now glittering with the lightest mockery. "Un morceau de roi," he muttered. "Yes, by God! a morçeau de roi!"

"Conduct me to yonder pillar," she said presently, "we can talk better there."

But that was not her reason, for to reach the pillar they must pass near the King. Clearly Madame d'Etiolles was bent on playing to-night the game of the woods at closer quarters. Andre as he escorted her now felt that all eyes, including Denise's, were on him, but he enjoyed it, walking slowly on the giddiest tiptoes of bravado. In front of Louis, he paused to make his reverence. Madame paused too- and as she unslung her quiver to curtsey with more graceful ease Andre could feel her tremble. The King's roaming gaze rested on them both. Andre's salute he acknowledged with a smile, a word or two of kind greeting, but it was on the jewels on the breast of the huntress that his bored eyes lingered.

"Fair archeress," he said, "surely the shafts you loose are mortal."

Madame d'Etiolles flushed with pleasure, curtsied again, and promptly passed on, without attempting to reply.

"Mon Dieu! what a figure! Who the devil is she?" Andre heard one of the gentlemen of the Chamber mutter.

"You did that to perfection," his partner whispered by the pillar. "You are a man who understands women, and they are so rare. And now we will dance if you please."

The sorceress was right. Madame d'Etiolles danced divinely. She had been taught by the best masters, but it was only art that she owed to their science. The rest was her own.

"Will you please do what I tell you?" she whispered as the violins tripped out a stately minuet. "And trust me."

"Rely on me, Madame," he answered.

Imperceptibly Madame d'Etiolles in her minuet drew nearer and nearer to the King, who began to observe them closely. A gleam of animation crept into his face and the courtiers parted a little to permit His Majesty a better view of this dainty dancer. Covert whispers, knowing looks, commenced to run through the group. Yes, the King was distinctly interested. But the fair Diana paid no heed. She had only eyes for the superb officer in the scarlet and white of the Chevau-legers de la Garde, who was dancing as he had never danced before.

"Throw your handkerchief," came the soft command.

Completely puzzled Andre obeyed as in a dream. His partner caught the handkerchief dexterously on her fan and was rewarded by a ripple of delighted laughter from the spectators.

"A forfeit, Vicomte," she said loud enough for all to hear, "I give you tit for tat," and she pressed her own to her lips, and tossed it back to him.

But it was not intended to reach him. The huntress had calculated carefully and the handkerchief lightly hit the King.

A flush shot into Louis's face; Madame colored over neck and shoulders, she dropped her eyes, after one swift glance at His Majesty. Silence, save for the dying lullaby of the music. Andre's heart beat fast, but not so fast surely as was beating that ambitious heart of the huntress prisoned in its jewels and white satin.

What would the King do? Would he resent or accept the challenge?

Gentlemen and ladies, nobles and bourgeois alike, drew a deep breath. Ah! the King had picked up the handkerchief—a second's pause, the pause in which a nation's destiny may be decided—and then the King smilingly threw the handkerchief back, fair and true, at the audacious dancer.

A pent-up cry arose, hands were clapped. "The King has thrown the handkerchief, the King has thrown the handkerchief," was the ringing sentence on the lips of all.

Madame caught the royal gift and melted into an enchanting reverence. One alluring side-glance under demure eyelashes, a glance of challange and of submission, and she had taken Andre's arm and glided swiftly back to the dais.

"The King has thrown the handkerchief" still rang round the crowded room. But where was the dancer? She was gone—yes, actually gone without waiting to follow up her victory. And of the expectant, excited throng Andre alone recognized how unerring was her tact. The huntress had accomplished her object. Henceforward it would not be she who must hunt, for defiance to royal hunters can be more triumphant than obedience.

Andre went over to Madame des Forges and St. Benoit. "You have lost again," he said, "and you will confess it now."

"It is infamous," replied the Comtesse, with fierce indignation. "Infamous! But that grisette has not won yet; the road from the Hotel-de-Ville to Versailles is long and difficult!"

"Ah, no," Andre answered; "not when you can travel in a royal carriage. You will see what you will see when the campaign is over. The bourgeoise before long will have the heel of her slipper on all our necks."

"And you believe," said the Comtesse, "that we will permit her to be forced on us. You are as mad as she is."

She promptly took St. Benoit's arm to mark her anger at the part Andre had played. But he only shrugged his shoulders in infinite amusement. A week ago, true enough, he had scorned to lend himself to such tactics, but to-night he was insensible to the reproach that his noble blood should have felt. For he, too, was under the spell of fate and of a witchery far more potent than the drug of any magician. It was not in mortal man to resist the sorcery of that fair huntress who played on human and royal passion as a musician on a stringed instrument. But there was more than mere passion in that dainty wimple of cambric and lace: "La Petite d'Etiolles" was gambling for a great stake. What if she were to be his ally in his great game? Before Andre there unrolled a wonderful vision of the future. He was necessary to these women. Bien! They should be necessary to him, and bitter as was the contempt in Denise's pure eyes it only steeled his determination remorselessly to tread the path he had planned towards his goal—Denise.

The King had lost his interest and left the ball. He had entered it a free man; he left it in thraldom. And all Paris knew now that for good or evil the reversed crown of the Duchesse de Chateauroux lay in the lap of another. How long would she be permitted to wear it?

As Andre hastened to leave, a touch was laid on his arm. "Do you believe in the crystal now?" asked a gently derisive voice.

Ah! the sorceress! he had forgotten her. "You are a true witch," he said, "you will certainly be burnt. But I thank you."

"I understand," she replied and she took the arm he offered. They walked in silence in search of her carriage.

"Why do you hate politics?" Andre demanded suddenly.

"Because," she answered slowly, "it is the women to whom politics are a passion who ruin kingdoms." The vehemence of the reply was as surprising as its nature. "Women," she added, "governed the great Louis Quatorze, they corrupted the Regent, they will bring our sovereign and his kingdom to be the scorn of the world. Better a hundred witches, a hundred wantons, than one woman whose passion it is to govern a kingdom through its King. That is the woman who should be burnt."

It was a new idea to Andre: it would have been a new idea to the salons of the Faubourg St. Germain, to the galleries of Versailles.

"Yes," she continued, "when a woman is not content to be a wife and a mother she deserves to be treated only as the idol of an hour, the pastime of a fleeting passion."

"O Madame!"

"O Monsieur!" she retorted. "Believe me, it is pleasanter for the women in the end and better for the men that such women should be denied everything except that for which they live—pleasure."

They had reached the carriage.

"Do you remember the pay for which you asked?" he questioned, taking her hand.

"Yes, I can never forget it."

"Then——"

She stepped serenely into the carriage. "Then," she whispered, "I shall get it, I suppose, when I really want it," and she swiftly shut the door in his face. "Drive to the hotel of the Duc de Pontchartrain," was her order.

Andre swore softly. The Duke was his friend and also perhaps the greatest libertine in Paris. She should not escape him. In a quarter of an hour he was supping with the Duke and his merry crew; women there were in plenty, but this sorceress, the daughter of a Paris flower girl, had neither been invited nor had so much as exchanged a word with his grace. And when Andre, weary of lansquenet, ribald songs, and copious toasts, slunk to bed with the rising sun he was strangely glad that she had tricked him. But if she was not what she so cynically professed to be what did it mean? And why in her presence did he always have that irritating feeling that somewhere and somehow he had met her before?

CHAPTER VIII.

The sun of spring had set on May 10, 1745, the eve of a day memorable in the military annals of the British and French nations. Behind a camp-fire in the entrenchments of Fontenoy Andre warmed himself, one of the many camp-fires which flared into the dusk on that plain which for two centuries has been the cock-pit of Europe; and as he stared out absently into the swiftly falling night an answering gleam scarcely a mile and a half away yonder to the south-east at Maubray told him that there lay the headquarters of the allied forces of the foe, English, Dutch, and Austrians, commanded by an English prince of the blood royal, the Duke of Cumberland.

There had been some warm skirmishing to-day. The British and the Austrians by sheer weight of numbers had tumbled out of the enclosures and copses the Pandours and Grassins thrown out as irregular outposts from the French army; and since then Andre and St. Benoit with many others had watched the allied generals and their staff reconnoitring at a safe distance the masterly position drawn along the slopes of Fontenoy by Monseigneur le Marechal de Saxe. A hard nut to crack, gentlemen, these lines, study them through your spy-glasses as you will. Nor will you find it easy to detect the place to push through. Yes; you may attack any time now night or day, for Tournay to our rear is hard pressed and unless relieved will fall into the hands of our master, Louis XV. Well and good; what better could a Chevau-leger de la Garde desire than that the pot-bellied Dutch traders, the Austrian hounds, and the British dogs should dash themselves to pieces on our lines. Mark you how the trenches run from the forest of Barry covering our left away in the north, winding in a gentle semicircle along the rim of the curving slope two miles and more down to the spot where the Chateau of Anthoin guards the passage of the sluggish Scheldt. And meanwhile we lie here snug and safe behind our redoubts bristling with guns, with logs cut from the forest piled breast-high to aid the advantage our general has given us, and with the flower of the French army crouched and ready to roll you up when you come. See how open the plain in front is, sloping gradually away from us; we can hammer you in the most murderous fashion from under cover if you are mad enough to dream that any troops can drive from its lair a French army that remembers Dettingen and will have Tournay or perish. Our Marechal de Saxe, who knows something of the art of war, has pronounced it impossible, and God have mercy on your silly, reckless souls if you try, for the French guards are here and the Maison du Roi, and our King's eye is on us to see that we do our duty!

Yes, His Majesty is here and with him Monsieur le Dauphin, and not a few ladies greatly daring, and the royal household, chamberlains and equerries, serving-men and serving-women, the bluest blood of France, and the wenches of the commissariat, and the actors and actresses of the Theatre Francais. Was there ever such a medley—soldiers, courtesans, and sutlers, thieves, marauders, sluts and wantons, and the gilded coaches and footmen of the beauty and birth that have the right to throng the Staircase des Ambassadeurs at Versailles and have the entree to the Grand Lever of the King of France?

The camp-fires smoke into the chill dusk; the lights twinkle in the packed villages where battalions of foot bivouac with squadrons of horse. In front smoulders and glares the hamlet of Bourgeon fired by our Grassins when they were driven out this morning. Everywhere the confused turmoil of a great camp, the sharp blare of fitful trumpets, the dull throb of drums, a feverish shot from yonder where skirmishing is still going on, the neighing or horses, the rumble of wagons. Hard by Andre here the men are taking their evening meal, chattering, laughing, singing, dancing. Such women as can live in camps are drinking too, singing when they cannot thieve. There are wounded to be cared for, or robbed: throats there are beyond the lines to be cut, purses and gold lace to be won from the fallen. Make love while you can. To-morrow's eve may never come. Have your season of pleasure, Messieurs; to-morrow the wench whom you kiss to-night will strip you in the dusk of the victory and leave you to the mercy of the dogs, the spring frosts, and of God—the God of battles.

Yes, to-morrow there will surely be a great battle. Have not the actors promised it? "To-morrow no performance! The day after to-morrow a play in honor of the victory of Monseigneur le Marechal de Saxe!" And before long there will be a Te Deum in the glorious aisles of the captured cathedral of Tournay.

Andre on his straw heap curled in his cloak dreamed of Denise, of the pleasant Loire, and of the Chateau de Beau Sejour when it should be his. Pest on the canaille and their trulls singing that lampoon at his elbow:

"Une petite bourgeoise,
Elevee a la grivoise
Mesurant tout a la toise,
Fait de la cour un taudis, dis, dis."

They were singing of no less a lady than the fair huntress and the King, the heroine of the crystal and the King's handkerchief, "La Petite d'Etiolles," who was now the heroine and jape of the streets of Paris. Strange, so strange. And he, too, had played his part in the drama of royal love:

"Louis, malgre son scrupule,
Froidement pour elle brule,

Et son amour ridicule,
A fait rire tout Paris, ris, ris."

His friend! And he would find her at Versailles no doubt when the campaign was over. How long would she stay there, this ambitious bourgeoise?

"Monsieur le Lieutenant is sad." Some one had touched his arm. Ah! only a little vivandiere whom he did not recognize. "Monsieur le Vicomte has left his mistress behind and he is sad," she protested, kneeling beside and peering with bright eyes into his ruffled visage.

"Run away, my dear," Andre replied sleepily. "I am poor, tired, and in a sad temper."

"And I am poor, fresh, and in a charming temper," she retorted. "If Monsieur le Vicomte has left his mistress behind there are still many women in the world. Here is one!" She began to hum the refrain of the song with the archest drollery: "I fait rire tout Paris, ris, ris."

Andre sat up. An appetizing little vivandiere this, name of a dog! Plump and most brazenly tricked out in a military coat and short skirt which revealed what would have made two dancers' fortunes.

"If I give you a kiss will you go?" he said good-humoredly.

"Oh, no. The kisses of Monsieur le Vicomte are no better than those of most men, I suppose."

"Then stay without them." He closed his eyes and lay down again.

"My thanks," she nodded, gaily throwing back her short cloak so as to reveal that her blue coat was open at the throat and suggested a chemisette strangely fine for a vivandiere. Then she bent over him. "Would you do a service for Mademoiselle the Marquise de Beau Sejour?" Andre sat up, sharply. "Would you do the King a service?" she whispered. "Mon Dieu! how those women bleat! Come this way, Vicomte, I have something to say to you—a secret." She blew him a kiss from saucy finger-tips.

Andre, now wide-awake, his blood tingling, followed her till she stopped in the shadow of an outhouse. "You will do the King a service?" she asked gravely enough. "Answer in my ear; we must not be heard. Yes?"

"Tell me," he said, quickly, "what the service is?"

"The Vicomte can talk English?"

"How the dev——?"

"It matters not how I know it. Do not contradict. Time is precious. Tonight"—she was speaking earnestly into his ear—"the friends of the King have learned that the secrets of the Marechal will be betrayed to the English."

"Good God!" He gripped her arm.

"Hush!" She raised a warning finger. "It is so. To the charcoal-burner's hut two miles from here will come at midnight two English officers. The plans of the camp—this camp, Vicomte—will be given them: to-night the English will know where to attack tomorrow and then—" she made a significant gesture.

"But——"

"No one can say how those plans have been stolen. But stolen they have been, and it is too late to alter the entrenchments now. They are made—you understand—and to-morrow is here in ten hours. Worse, worse, the traitor is already at the cottage with the paper." Andre sweated hot and cold, for terror rang in her pleading voice. "It is infamous, terrible. But one hope remains. We must find an officer who can speak English, who will pretend to be those English officers and get the plans before they are handed to the enemy. The Vicomte understands?"

"Yes, yes, I see. I will go. He buttoned up his cloak with peremptory decision.

"Oh!" She sobbed with joy. She could not thank him in words.

"And who are you?" Andre asked.

"Hush! hush! The army must not know of the danger. If you must know, I am an actress, the friend of Monseigneur le Marechal. I alone have discovered this, and I am come to you, for I, too, love France."

The blood swirled for a minute in his temples. Ha! when Denise heard how he, Andre de Nerac, alone had saved France, the army, and the King, would she not be proud? Perhaps they would give him the Cordon Bleu.

"What am I to do?" he asked quietly. "I am ready."

She described at length where the charcoal-burner's hut lay and how it could be reached. "When you are there, rap twice on the door," she proceeded, "and then say in English to whoever comes, 'I am from "No. 101" to "No .101."'"

"What does that mean?"

"The Vicomte knows what a cipher is? That is the traitor's cipher—and the traitor's name. It is all we have discovered."

"A man, this traitor?"

"No one knows, I swear it. But it must be a man, so say those words in English; speak in English, always—always. Remember you are an officer of the First Foot Guards of the English King; you have come for the papers because 'No. 101' has bidden you. You will get them if you are clever and God wills. Then fly—fly for your life, and France is saved."

"I will not fly till I have killed that traitor."

"Yes, kill him if you can. But it is the papers you must have or we are all ruined. The papers," she repeated in a dull agony.

Andre meditated. Then he took the vivandiere by both arms. "Will you swear by the name of the Holy Virgin that this is no trap?" he asked solemnly.

She turned her hooded face up to his and took his Croix de St. Louis. "Before God and on this cross," she answered very slowly, "it is no trap. It is the truth."

Conviction rang in her low tones and she was trembling with emotion.

"Very well. I am ready. But my uniform?" he asked sharply. "I shall be recognized."

"I have thought of that," she said. "See, my room is in the village, a stone's throw hence. A cloak, a hat, and boots of the English Guard are there, stripped from a dead officer. They will cover your uniform. But you must keep the cloak buttoned, for frock and tunic I have not got, alas! I have, too, my actress's box of colors. I will disguise you perfectly. Come at once, there is no time to waste."

And so by two flickering candles her deft fingers transformed him swiftly into the image of a ruddy, beef-fed English officer of the English Guard, and when her work was done she accompanied him to the edge of the lines, where they paused.

"For God's sake be careful," she urged. "The Pandours, the Grassins, the marauders, are prowling everywhere. Maybe, too, 'No. 101' may have varlets on the look-out. I would not frighten you, but you should know that the man or woman who has hunted 'No. 101'—and several have tried—has so far met with death."

But Andre only smiled grimly.

"Yes," she repeated, "all who have seen that traitor face to face have died. It is horrible, but the truth. Get the papers, that is all we need. Pry no farther, I beseech you. Ah, sir, a woman, even an actress, would not have on her soul the blood of a gallant gentleman who at her bidding risked all for France."

"Death can come but once" he answered, "and in no nobler way than in the service of France and the King."

"That is true, but you must live. For the King will be grateful, and I—I, too, will not forget."

Andre smilingly put his hand on her shoulder. "And is that all?" he asked lightly, "all my reward, Mademoiselle?"

"Come back," she whispered, "come back and you will see whether it is all. Meanwhile, adieu and au revoir."

She had slipped from his grasp and vanished as mysteriously as she had come. Who was she? Bah! it did not matter now. The night and its work lay before him. But to-morrow—to-morrow!

He mounted, gave the password, and rode into the night.

Behind him lay the sleeping camp ignorant of its peril, in front the strangest, weirdest, most dangerous task he had ever embarked on; yet Andre felt no fear. His only thought as he trotted down the slope was a vivid reminiscence of the words of the crystal-gazer. Women everywhere in his life—always women at every turn—the princess in London—Yvonne—"La Petite d'Etiolles"—the crystal-gazer, and now the charming little vivandiere—but they were all so many instruments to help him to win the fairest of them all—Denise. It was clear as noonday now. His task was to master the strand of the web in which these women, by design or accident, enwrapped him, and to make them serve his purpose while he seemed to serve theirs. It was an idea which grew in power and fascination every day. Women appealed to him by nature; before the charm of mind and body in women he was defenceless, but it was his love for Denise that had inspired the conception of yoking the pleasure of life to the attainment of a glorious ambition. To-night was a matchless opportunity—and others would follow.

But his mind while it revolved was fully alert. He believed in himself and his sword. His faith in his star grew stronger each day. But fate and God helped those who would best help themselves. To-night he must not fail on this difficult task because he neglected anything that caution could suggest.

From time to time he halted. The night was dark, that was good, and a raw mist steamed out of the sodden earth. He had taken the precaution to bind his horse's hoofs in soft cloth, and she, a powerful English thoroughbred, his favorite mare, knew her master's will by instinct. The road, too, was easy to find. No one crossed his path. And here at last was the little wood of which he had been told. Half a mile away gleamed dully a fire, probably an English picket. He dismounted and listened intently. Not a sound. And now very warily he plunged forward into the bowels of this grisly little wood, leading his horse, his pistols cocked and sword ready. Presently he stumbled; only a fallen log; he stumbled again; another? No. This time it was a dead man. Andre dragged him out and let the rays of his masked lantern fall cautiously on his face. Poor wretch! half-naked too—a common gallows bird of a marauder, stripped by the thieves and with a knife-thrust in his throat, a common enough spectacle to those who had played at war before, mere carrion in the daylight, but causing the flesh to creep in the raw chills of this infernal hiding-place of treachery. Let him lie. And now forward again. Bah! another corpse! A woman, and young, too, that rascal's companion no doubt, and stripped as he was. He bent over her. Ha! what was that? One hand gone? There had been a quarrel, the robbers had killed her and her mate, and to save time had simply chopped off her fingers to get the booty she had gripped so tightly. Let her lie beside him there and forward again, for such is war.

Halt! Here is the charcoal-burner's cabin. He could just make out its black outlines in a clearing of the trees. Andre muffled his mare's head and tied her to a branch, and then with naked sword crawled forward on hand and knees. Round the hut like a sleuth hound he wormed his way, learning the ground, making absolutely sure no one lurked in this damp stillness. Positively not a soul, not a whisper. But the horror of the dead man and woman and this awful stillness had mastered him, and ten yards from the door he lay for some minutes watching, thinking. The hut showed no signs of life. What if "No. 101" were not there? What if the English officers had forestalled him and the papers were already gone? What if an ambuscade were concealed in that ramshackle cabin?

Still he lay thinking, shivering, to start swiftly. The shutter in the cabin wall was being slowly pushed open. There was no glass in the window; a gleam of red light; some one was stealthily looking out into the night. Andre crawled on his stomach across the clearing and lay flat down with a sharp gasp.

By the living God, it was a woman! A woman!

Two drops of icy sweat dripped from his forehead on to the damp ground. A woman! Yes, he could see the silhouette of her hooded head and bust etched against the dull red light behind and the inky framework of the window, and she was thinking too, resting her elbow placidly on the sill. A woman! It was terrible, for she was a traitor and he must kill her, here in this cursed cabin, in this damned wood. She moved her head and listened intently. Yes, she was expecting some one. Ha! He was not too late.

The shutter was stealthily closed, but crouching beneath it Andre heard the faint sigh as of a weary heart. He sprang up, rapped twice on the door. Steps within, the bolts were being drawn back. At last a masked woman with a lantern in her hand stood in the doorway, and he and she faced each other in silence.

"Who is that?" she asked in a clear voice.

"I am from 'No. 101' to 'No. 101,'" Andre answered firmly, but inwardly he trembled and his sword was ready to leap out.

She raised the lantern quietly and let the light travel from his hat to his boots.

"Good," she said. "Enter, sir."

Andre paused. Could he dare? No—yes—no? For two slow minutes the thoughts battled within him as he strove to penetrate the secret of that mask and the hood covering her head. She was young—quite young. That faint sigh as of a weary heart seemed to echo through the misty silence of the wood.

Then he stepped inside, and she quietly closed the door.

CHAPTER IX.

The woman led the way into the kitchen which opened off the tiny passage and Andre followed her. The two faced each other in silence. Presently she placed the lantern on the rough table in the centre of the room and once again looked at him thoughtfully through her mask. The only other light there was came from the dying embers of a fire, whose murky shadows flickered on the walls and on the low roof.

HEALTH OF WOMEN

In this nineteenth century to keep up with the march of progress every power of woman is strained to its utmost, and the tax upon her physical system is far greater than ever.

In the good old-fashioned days of our grandmothers few drugs were used in medicines. They relied upon roots and herbs to cure weaknesses and disease, and their knowledge of roots and herbs was far greater than that of women today.

It was in this study of roots and herbs that Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., discovered and gave to the women of the world a remedy more potent and efficacious than any combination of drugs.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

is an honest, tried and true remedy of unquestionable therapeutic value.

This medicine made from native roots and herbs contains no narcotics or other harmful drugs and today holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases of any medicine the world has ever known, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the laboratory at Lynn, Mass., which testify to its wonderful value.

Mrs. C. E. Fink, of Carnegie, Pa., writes:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"I wish every suffering woman would take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and write to you for advice. It has done me a world of good and what it has accomplished for me I know it will do for others."

When women are troubled with Irregularities, Displacements, Ulceration, Inflammation, Backache, Nervous Prostration, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

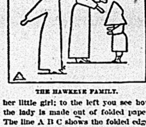
Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Out of her vast volume of experience she probably has the very knowledge that will help your case.

THE HAWKEYE FAMILY.

They Are Made of Paper and Always Wear Sunbonnets.

Perhaps you have never met Mrs. Hawkeye and her little girl. Well, here they are. One of the queerest things about the Hawkeye family is that they always wear big sunbonnets. And another queer thing is that they are all made of paper, so that all you little folks that are handy with the scissors may have a Hawkeye household of your own.

Look at the picture. To the right you see Mrs. Hawkeye speaking to her little girl; to the left you see how the lady is made out of folded paper. The line A B C shows the folded edge. You can easily trace the outline that you are to cut. When you have cut it fold over, inside out, the top part, the bonnet, making the fold on the dotted line, when the crown and the cape of the bonnet will at once take shape. Then fold the arms over, slipping them under the bonnet, and you will have a complete Mrs. Hawkeye.



THE HAWKEYE FAMILY.

The little girl is made in the same way, only she is smaller and her dress is shorter.

Figures as large as an ordinary doll may be made by using larger paper and drawing the outline of the proper size.—Chicago News.

HE LIKED SUGAR.

A True Story About a Clever English Pug Dog.

The story that I am going to tell you is about a pug that lives down in Devonshire.

This pug was a father pug who had a wife and two baby pugs. Papa pug was very fond of sugar, and his taste was shared by the rest of his family.

One morning when she was in the storeroom in the middle of giving out the stores for cook the mistress of Mr. and Mrs. Pug was suddenly called out of the room, leaving not only the outer door but also the lower door of the store cupboard open. It was quite a quarter of an hour before she was able to return. Imagine her surprise on reaching the door to see the whole family of pugs, minus papa, standing near the cupboard, with a very expectant look upon their faces.

Just inside the cupboard stood Mr. Pug. And what do you think he was doing? Handing out lumps of sugar in turn to each member of his waiting family, says Home Chat.

His mistress was very amused. She pretended to be very cross with him, but she really thought him a very clever doggie.

I thought so, too, when I was told the story, and I expect you will all of you agree with me.

Taste and Smell.

You think you know the taste of things, don't you? Well, let me tell you that if it were not for your nose you could not tell a good many things apart so far as your taste goes. A great deal of what you call the taste of a thing is its smell. You can't quite believe this? Prove it for yourselves. The trial makes a capital game. Get mamma or nurse to give you some raw oatmeal, some licorice, chocolate, apple, as many different things as she can think of that do not taste the least bit alike. Then blindfold first one and then the other of your party and let each one who is blindfolded hold his or her nose very tightly so that it isn't possible to smell things, and then let some one give him or her first one thing and then another to taste. It is good fun to give a little prize, perhaps one of your hockey sticks, Jack, or one of your dolls, Polly, to the boy or girl who guesses the most names of the things provided for the game of testing the taste. Tell mamma that this is very good fun for a grownup people's game too.

Firing Cannon.

Get a long piece of string and make a big loop at one end and a small loop at the other. Pass the big loop over your head, so that the string goes over your hands. Through the small loop fix a pencil. Another person draws the string out and, holding the pencil by its extremities, twists it round. The noise resembles cannon firing.

Their Menagerie.

The flowers once made up their minds
They wished to have a zoo,
A place where every one could hear
The pussy willow mew.
They caught a tiger lily fierce,
And, wishing to be sure,
They built a cage of golden rods
To keep him quite secure.

A dandelion, tawny maned,
They trapped with greatest care.
Their hunters found the shady dells
The foxglove had his lair.
They fed them with a beefsteak plant
Each afternoon at two,
And just before the moon came up
They watered them with dew.
—Youth's Companion.

Her "No."

Tom—Bess said "No" to me last night, but I don't think she really could tell why she did it. Nell—Oh, yes, she could. She told me. Tom—Did she? Nell—Yes; she said she didn't think you'd take "No" for an answer.

About the Only Place.

A company of settlers in naming their new town called it Dictionary, because, as they said, "that's the only place where peace, prosperity and happiness are always found."

The notion of God which makes him a manufacturer of footstools, our enemies being the raw material, is still popular in some quarters.—Puck.

Plaster of Paris Bananas.

Bunches of bananas that are absolutely unfit for food hang out in front of the wholesale produce commission houses. Some of them have remained there until they have grown rusty with age.

"Couldn't get a finer looking bunch than that," said one of the dealers the other day, "even if it is plaster of paris. We used to put out the real article for a sign, but the peddlers who came down here had a way of pulling one or two out of the bunch that happened to be hanging there on the hook. The small boys, too, had a way of making a grab for a banana or two. By the time the bunch was on duty under the awning for an hour it was no longer presentable to the aesthetic sense. So we began to cultivate the make believe article, which is not quite so palatable, but just as good for advertising. And even at that some youngster in his haste will grab plaster of paris fruit and get away with it before he realizes that he has made off with something bad for his digestion."

Jamaica.

Jamaica is more populous in proportion to its size than Spain, Turkey, Russia and some other European countries. The white people, however, are outnumbered by the black and colored by nearly fifty to one.

A Montreal Freak.

Montreal possesses one of the most curious freaks of nature ever heard of. It is a colt fourteen months old, which has a growth on its right fore foot, just above the hoof, which is hardly explainable. The growth has the appearance of branches of trees, and already three sprays have come out, one of which is fourteen inches long, and several others are sprouting. The queerest part of the whole thing is that the colt does not seem embarrassed by it at all, and moves about quite as freely as any other of his species.

Learn Dressmaking.

IN TWO WEEKS,

We teach you everything from the plainest shirt waist to the most elaborate toilette that can be found in th. fashion books. We show you how to put together not only the lining but all the outer goods in coats, skirts waists, wrappers, sleeves, children's dresses, collars, etc. Why spend months at a shop where you do nothing but hem, overcast, sew on hooks and eyes, and then after you have served your time there, what do you know about cutting? Absolutely nothing! For you will know no more how to cut out a dress at the end of a year than you did the first day you went there; so why spend your time there; you can come and try for a week and see for yourself what it's like, and as there is nothing to be paid in advance, you certainly would not lose anything by trying.

We have taught over 2,000 in this way within the past six years, and all recommend it very highly; we teach you how to use a chart the first day you are with us; also guarantee that the waists made by this chart will not draw nor pull out of place when raising arm.

Charge for full course is only $10, to be paid when course is completed, if satisfied, including one of the most perfect fitting systems in use, which we give free.

We will teach at Belleville from April 8th to April 20th. Hours for day class from 8.30 to 5. All wishing to learn or for full particulars, be sure to see us at the KYLE HOUSE, on Saturday, April 6th, between 10 and 5 o'clock. An evening class will also be taught; in this class we teach shirt waists, sleeves and dressing sacques only. Terms $4 and hours from 7 to 9. Remember there is no pay in advance, you can all come and try.

VALUE OF EXAMPLE

SELF-DENIAL AND RESTRAINT OUR DUTY TO OTHERS.

REASONS FOR SELF-SACRIFICE

Christians Must Take Care Not to Offend—Questions of Ritual—Nonessentials of But Little Importance—Every Man a "Crooked Stick" More or Less—Pour Oil on Troubled Waters.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 7.—In this sermon the preacher teaches the value of self denial and the importance of restraining ourselves from indulgences which, whether harmful or not in themselves, might make our example a stumbling block to others. The text is I Corinthians viii, 13, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth."

Corinth, beautiful Corinth; Corinth with thy legends of ancient times; Corinth the great business ganglia, or the nerve centre of two continents, for there the merchantmen of Europe and Asia exchanged their goods; Corinth with its Acro-Corinthus rising 1,800 feet high, crowned with a frowning fortress aptly called "the Gibraltar of the east;" Corinth with its great amphitheatres, where men fought with men and where the gladiators' blood mingled with the blood of the savage beasts slain in demoniac struggles; Corinth with its Posidonium, where the famous isthmian games took place, from which arena Paul feathered many of his gospel arrows to drive home his divine message; Corinth with its most famous temple of the old world looming above many heathen shrines—oh, Corinth, beautiful Corinth, opulent Corinth armed with aesthetic Corinth, no wonder Paul wanted to go and see thee and preach Jesus Christ within thy gates!

The shrines and the idols must have been everywhere when Paul first went to Corinth. They must have been as multitudinous as are the idols to-day in Benares, where temples line the sacred Ganges for miles. These Corinthian idols must have been on every hilltop and in every valley. They must have been in every street and in every home and by every fireside. Idols, idols, idols, everywhere. Idols must have been crowding each other in old Corinth for elbow room, even as they did in Athens. Truly Corinth was the home of commerce and literature and art, but it was more than that. It was one of the great ancient Meccas of idol worshipers.

Now, there was a very strange Corinthian custom of idol worship which any man who has traveled in the far east can readily grasp, because there you have seen food placed upon the altars as sacrifice to idols. The Corinthian priests at stated times of the week would kill cattle and sheep and lay certain parts of the dead bodies of these animals upon the altars of their idols. There they were allowed to stay for some four or five hours. Of course that was not long enough time for the meat to spoil. Then this meat was taken off the altars and sold to the people. Because this meat was placed upon the shrines of the idols it was looked upon with prejudice by many people and had to be sold in the Corinthian markets at a very reduced rate. Now, Paul was a man of great uncommon common sense. He said practically this: "Here I have to support myself by tentmaking. If I buy my meat cheaper, I can live cheaper, because it will take me less time to earn a living, and I will be able to have more time to preach Jesus Christ." Then Paul again said: "Why should I not eat this meat which once lay upon the heathen altars? It is not tainted meat. I can buy it for half the price of other meat. Yes, while I stay here in the Corinthian capital I will buy this meat and eat this meat, because it is good and wholesome and the cheapest of all meats."

But in that Corinthian capital there were a lot of very narrow minded Christians. Their minds were so narrow and their souls were so bigoted that they were always ready to place the magnifying glass to their eye and focus it upon a nonessential atom and make it loom up before them as a huge mountain of error. These narrow minded bigots had a genius for splitting hairs. They could argue for days and weeks upon a simple trivial question, and they rose up in protest against Paul buying and eating the meat from off the heathen altars. "Why," I can hear them say, "Paul, if you eat that meat you are practically an idol worshiper. You are the same as one who bows in worship at the shrine of the licentious Venus. You are just as bad as any of these idolatrous priests." "All right," says Paul; "if you look at it in that way, I will stop eating the sacrificial meat. I am not going to stop because it is wrong for me to eat it, but I am going to stop because some of you Christians believe it to be wrong. I will not be a spiritual stumbling block to any man." Then Paul writes these words of my text: "Wherefore if meat make my brother to offend I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." Oh, did you ever know a man to take a wiser stand for Christ than did Paul in that sentence? Can we not be just as true and as faithful in yielding in nonessentials for Christ's sake as was Paul when he yielded to the scruples of the ancient Christians in old Corinth?

Now let us try to analyze some of the characteristics of Paul's character which this decision indicates. In the first place, I would remind you that Paul was a gospel evangelist, who made every thought, every act, every desire of his body, mind and soul, converge to the one purpose of preaching Jesus Christ to the world and of bringing sinful men to bow at the cross of Christ. He was not a conscienceless derelict upon the great sea of humanity to be driven about by every stormy wind and to be beaten off his course by every diverging current. When a principle was at stake, you could not swerve Paul from his course. There never was a gospel preacher who hewed closer to the straight line of truth than did this man Paul.

Come, let us look a little closer at this resolve. Do you suppose Paul personally liked to eat this meat from off the heathen altars? I think not. Would you have liked to eat it? No; you would no more have desired to eat that meat than you would like to eat the flesh of some animals killed in a Spanish bullfight. That was the way, I think, Paul felt when he looked upon the meat which was taken off the heathen altars. I do not believe he could divorce that meat from its vile associations. Neither could you.

When Paul saw that meat, there loomed up before him the beautiful Greek temple dedicated to the worship of Venus. That worship was the most bestial and loathsome and immorally corrupt of any temple in the east, paralleling the worship of ancient Baal. So corrupt was this worship that for centuries the name of a Corinthian was a synonym for debauchery. But, though every refined sensibility of Paul revolted from touching that idol meat, I think I hear Paul say as he looks at it: "Paul, you do not want that meat, but remember it is not tainted. It will give strength of muscle and of brain. Remember, Paul, if you buy this food cheaper there will be less need for your long hours now devoted to tentmaking, and then you will have longer time to preach Jesus Christ." So Paul bought that meat. So Paul stifled every personal repulsion which he might have in order to be able to spread the gospel further and preach Jesus Christ to the people of Corinth. Even in his food he economized in order that he might become a flaming evangelist. Oh, my brother, are we consecrating our pocketbooks, our whole lives, our every desire, to bring the message of the cross nearer to the hearts of men, as Paul did in the market place of Corinth?

But, though Paul was not like a spiritual weathercock, easily turned this way and that by every popular wind, my text proves that he would change when there was sufficient reason. Paul was ready and willing to yield about nonessentials if thereby he could win the good will of his fellow men and by that good will make men more willing to heed his message. He was not one of those ecclesiastical sticklers who want to put the whole world into a religious straitjacket and compel others to think as he thought and do as he did. You know there are some people born in this world who never have any respect for the individuality of other people.

They are so convinced that theirs is the right way to worship God that they demand that their fellow men worship him in the same way, with the same liturgy and using the same hymn book and with the same rites. They say, "If you do not do as I do and wear my ecclesiastical gown and my surplice, hood, cassock and stole, then you are not true Christians." Now, it was men of this kind who were worrying Paul about this trifle of the meat that had been offered to idols. As he told them, an idol was "nothing in the world," and the meat offered to it was not harmed by being offered. But he saw that opposition to them diverted their thoughts from the higher questions of faith and holiness, so he yielded to them, that they might be free to think of the essential things. Some of the questions of ritual that men dispute about now are of the same character as this of the sacrificial meat. We may well be as charitable about them as the apostle was.

What is the good of you and I fighting about the apostolic succession of the Episcopalian church? What is the good of our fighting about whether a priest should or should not wear a gown in the pulpit? What is the good of entering into an eternal dispute of whether we should have a liturgy in the Presbyterian church or no? I tell you these things are all nonessentials. They are nonessentials as 500 other facts over which the ecclesiastical world is fighting to-day are nonessentials. The longer I stay in the ministry the more I believe that what Richard Baxter wrote over 200 years ago is true. Listen while I read it: "The older I grow the smaller stress I lay on those controversies and curiosities of the Bible as finding greater uncertainties in them than I first discovered and finding less usefulness where there is the greater certainty. The Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments are now to me as my daily bread and drink, and as I can speak and write over them again and again so I had rather read and hear of them than of any of the school niceties. And this I observed also with Richard Hooker and with many other men." Had Baxter thought to put it in he could have ended that beautiful sentence thus: "And this I observed also with Paul and with many other men."

"If I was called to a church where the pastors for generations were accustomed to wear a gown and the people liked it, I would wear a gown. It is a nonessential. If a new church member should come to me and say, "Pastor, the more I study the Bible the more I believe that immersion is the true baptism," I should say: "Very well. Come; we will go to a Baptist church, and I will immerse you there." If an Episcopalian should come to me and say, "I believe in the apostolic succession of the Episcopal church," I should at once reply: "All right, my brother. You are my brother, though we differ on that subject. I wish you godspeed. I do not care much whether you believe in the apostolic succession of the Episcopal church as long as you do believe in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and you do accept him as your pardoning Saviour." The doctrine of the atonement of the cross we hold to with a viselike grip of Paul. May God help us to let all the nonessentials go.

But there was still another reason why I think Paul said, "I will eat no meat." What might have been a nonessential to Paul in his spiritual life might have been more than a nonessential to some one else. Therefore I think I can hear Paul say to himself when this question came up: "Of course if I give up eating this sacrificial meat I shall have to work harder than I otherwise would. I may have shorter hours for preaching. I may even have to work at my tentmaking trade when I return home at night. But what of it? Again I say, what of it? I can afford to go to any extreme rather than put a spiritual stumbling block in the way of my fellow men. If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no meat as long as the world standeth." And Paul was right. My brother, are you ready to firmly and unequivocally refuse to throw any spiritual stumbling block in the way of your fellow men?

Certain amusements in themselves are harmless, but those amusements on account of their evil associations may be most pernicious to others, and especially to our young folks as a whole. Theatre-going for you may be harmless, but what are the surroundings of the average theatre? If you as a church elder, if you as a church member, if you as a Sunday school teacher go to the theatre, do you not see that the example you may be setting may encourage some to go who are not morally and spiritually as strong as you are? Do you believe Jesus Christ, if he was upon earth, would ever be seen in a theatre? What would Paul say if you asked him to go with you to the theatre? I know. You know. He would answer: "Nay. If this amusement, like the sacrificial meat, cause my brother to offend, I will abstain as long as the world standeth."

How about the card table and the dance hall? You say they do no personal harm. If you indulge in them, will your personal example do any one else any harm? This Lord's day I have made a most earnest plea for every man, woman and child to come to our next Wednesday night prayer meeting. You know and I know that the most essential meeting of all the church life is the midweek prayer meeting. That young man is going to be at our midweek prayer meeting next Wednesday night. Will you be conspicuous by your absence? The next Thursday morning on his way to business he opens the paper and reads there of a big dance or progressive euchre party being given in this city. The names of all the guests are printed there. The names of the prize winners are also given. Your name may be among the prize winners. You will then be in the same position as the man who wins a prize at Monte Carlo or at some race track. What will he say? Will he say, "Well, if the prominent men and women of this church stay away from prayer meeting to go to the dance hall and to the card table, I must be more regular at the prayer meetings, for surely if such a condition exists in this church God knows the church needs my prayers?" Will he say that, or will he say, "If the social leaders of the church can put the card table above the prayer meeting, surely I may do the same?" What would Paul do if you asked him to go to a progressive euchre party or to a dance hall? I know. You know. He would answer, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh as long as the world standeth." May God teach us in our amusements not to throw spiritual stumbling blocks in the way of our fellow men.

But there is still another reason why I think Paul refused to eat that meat. When these narrow Christians came to him in protest, I think I can hear Paul say: "Well, who would have imagined a lot of men and women could ever take such a narrow, bigoted view of so trivial an act? Well, the old proverb is surely right which says, 'It takes all kinds of people to make up a world.' But I must not be too abrupt and severe with these critics. Perhaps I am just as queer in my ways as they are in theirs. Now, if I give up to them in a nonessential, perhaps by my example I will teach them to yield their wishes to me in an essential, and thus we will be able to live closer together as a church. Surely we can all afford to sacrifice for each other nonessentials in order that the church of God may be able to work together as a harmonious whole." Was he not wise? If by sacrificing your nonessentials you can teach your fellow workers in the church to sacrifice their nonessentials, then truly the church of Jesus Christ will become the mighty agency of gospel power which God foreordained it to be.

I want to tell you that Paul's way of living in harmony with his neighbors and fellow Christians is the only true way to live. Don't fight. Don't antagonize each other. When people criticize you and criticize your family and treat you unjustly, do not make an issue of it. The longer I live the more I believe that every man to some extent is a "crooked strick." He does not mean to be "crooked," but he is. You are just as peculiar in your way as your neighbors are in theirs. For God's sake do not eat the idols' meat if it offends them and thus hurts the influence of the cross of Jesus Christ. Sacrifice everything in your power, yield every right and privilege that you can, in order to pour oil upon the troubled waters of the home, the church and the store and make the roaring billows of hate and bitterness lie down and go to sleep. It is easy enough to start a cyclone. It is easy enough with one little spark to explode a gunpowder magazine. Only the power of a gospel life can still a Galilean tempest. "If meat cause my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh as long as the world standeth."

Ranji In New Role.

Prince Ranjitsinhji, the famous cricketer, has been selected by the Government of India to succeed to the chiefship of Nawanagar. The late chief died last August without heirs. Prince Ranjitsinhji's official title now is Jam of Nawanagar. The new Jam is in his thirty-fifth year, having been born on September 10, 1872, in the province of Kathiawar. He was adopted by his uncle, His Highness Jam Shri Sir Vibhaji Raumalji, K. C. S. I., the elderly Jam of Nawanagar, but on this chief's death his claim to succeed had to give way to a natural son, Kumar Jarwant Sinhji, who, after a reign of eight years died, last August. Since that time the interval has been taken up in deciding rival claims. Nawanagar, which has about twice the area of Sussex, is the largest of the kingdoms of Kathiawar under British protection. Its population exceeds 300,000, there is a little army of 3,250, the revenue is about £160,000 per annum.

The Upper Levels.

By HONORE WILLSIE.

Copyright, 1906, by May McKeon.

On a Sunday afternoon Dick strolled across the meadows beyond the town. He had grown to love the swelling slope that stretched up from the river to the mining sheds. For the first time he was beginning to think that his father's taunt at the "leader of cotillons" was to be productive of good; that, combined with Alice Upham's refusal, the taunt had forced him to see life with a broader view.

It was the mines that had worked the change, the mines and Marian! Considering that she was a miner's orphan, Richard Houston gave a large amount of his thought to Marian. Considering that she "worked a bit for her board" with Mrs. Lisbon, the miner's wife with whom Dick boarded, Dick was having bad lapses of the Houston pride. Still, as Dick said to himself, there was not much danger of a man's making a fool of himself over a girl of sixteen.

On this particular Sunday, after a week when the miner's pick had been particularly distasteful to him, Dick had asked Marian to walk with him. At first she had hesitated; then she had refused, looking up into his face with a little smile that, even though she was only a child, he had come to watch and work for—a smile that curled delicate, deep red lips back over perfect teeth, a smile that lightened up the wistful little face to dazzling loveliness. As she slipped from the room Dick watched the lithe figure and the wonderful braid of hair that swept her back.

"If she were five years older"— But the sentence remained unfinished as he filled his pipe and started on his solitary tramp. He walked for hours, and it was late twilight when he again crossed the meadows near the mines. It was a lonely spot, so Dick was surprised as he heard a voice:

"Oh, Mr. Houston!"

"Yes, Marian."

"Oh, I am so glad! Mrs. Lisbon and I have been worrying about you." Then, walking beside him with a distractingly confiding air: "Ever since you and Jim Lisbon took such a stand against the strike some of the toughs down at the end of the village have been making threats. Mrs. Lisbon went to find Jim, and I got to worrying and came out to find you."

"Steady, now, steady," said Dick to himself. "Remember that she is nothing but a miner's little girl." Then aloud: "Well, now, that is mighty good of you, but there isn't a bit of danger. I—great heavens!"

They were enveloped in an unbreathable cloud of dust. There was a dull, muffled rumble, a little scream from Marian, then silence.

"Marian!" called Dick as he struggled to rise. Marian rose to her knees, struggling and gasping for breath. "The ground caved into a gallery. I have heard of it often."

"Are you hurt?" asked Dick.

"I—I think not."

Dick was now on his feet and pulled the girl up beside him. Then he took out his match safe and scratched three or four matches in rapid succession. They were in a pit formed by the sinking of the meadow into a mining level that had run too close to the surface. The pit was but half a dozen feet wide, but it was many times that to the field above. Dick dropped the match he held. "I won't light any more for awhile. We may need them later."

"Let's call," said Marian.

Dick gave a few lusty shouts, but silence seemed deeper than ever as he paused. A small hand crept into his, and his fingers closed warmly about it.

"I think I am frightened," half whispered Marian.

He chafed the slender fingers. It's useless to try to climb this soft clay." A mass of debris slid to their feet. "We've got to get out of this. He scratched a match, then gave a quick exclamation. "Marian, there is a level opening!" He paused. Through both their minds flashed a picture of the dangers that would attend any attempt to escape through the mine. Yet they knew that each moment in the pit might mean death. Then a quick plunge and they were in the darkness of the mine. They felt their way in silence for several minutes, then:

"Are you frightened, Marian?" asked Dick.

"Yes," said Marian, "but that does not matter."

A new tone in the soft voice puzzled Dick. It was as if a woman and not a child had spoken. New thoughts were crossing Dick Houston's mind. If this little girl were five years older, if she were educated, if she were not a miner's daughter, if— The slender fingers lay very warmly and confidingly in his. A soft, thick braid of hair touched his face as Marian flung it back over her shoulder. Dick smiled tenderly as he pictured the familiar little gesture.

"Keep up your courage," he said. "There is no actual danger, you know, except of a bad cold for you." Not daring to speak of his fear of fire damp, he added, "Let's rest a moment."

"The darkness almost suffocates one," half whispered Marian.

Some strange madness was possessing Richard Houston. Family traditions, ideals, ambitions, were gone before a whirlwind that swept his brain. Still holding the soft hand, "Marian," he said, "do you suppose that in a couple of years from now you could do more than just like me?"

"How much more?" asked a demure little voice beside him.

Dick paused. "Could you love me?"

"But I don't know you at all, and," still more demurely, "somehow I never planned to love a miner."

Dick flushed in the darkness. "Perhaps by that time I shall be something more than a miner, for—for you have grown to be a great deal to me, little girl."

"Did you ever know," went on the girlish voice, "that if a grownup girl were to wear her hair in a braid down her back and shortish skirts even a very grownup girl would look like a child?"

Dick felt somewhat dazed. "But why should she do that?"

"Oh, so the men wouldn't bother her."

More and more bewildered was Dick, yet one clear purpose remained to him. "Marian," he whispered, "do you love me?"

Then the cold, the darkness and the fear of the fire damp were forgotten as Dick felt acquiescence in the yielding fingers. But only for a moment. "Please, please," trembled the girlish voice, "let's first get out of this awful place!"

Head and heart in a turmoil, Dick started on. Almost immediately his outstretched hands found the gallery barred. They had followed a blind level! Back again, stumbling and weary, with the fire damp rendering them dazed and short of breath; then, along the left hand level, on and on, until almost discouraged. Suddenly Dick stumbled and fell on his hands and knees. Marian gave a cry of dismay, but Dick uttered a joyful shout. "The track, Marian! We are out of the old workings and we'll be at the surface in a few minutes!"

It was indeed but a short time more before the two stepped from the cage into the velvet dusk of the fall night. The stars gleamed softly overhead; the smell of dew wet meadows blew across their faces. The two stopped before beginning their walk up the street to the cottage.

"Whew! That's the hardest job I've had since football days," said Dick unthinkingly.

Marian looked up into his face. "Are you a college man?"

"Yes," said Dick.

"Are you any relation to the Houston who owns these mines?"

"His son. I came to learn the business from the pick up, as he did. But," he took the soft face between his hands, "that need make no difference, need it?"

Marian's reply seemed at first irrelevant. "I wrote a story of a coal miner. The editor liked it so well that he asked me for another chapter. I wanted good material and—and so—I really live in Boston."

Dick looked about him hastily. Then the little figure was almost lifted into his arms, while the great braid tangled in his fingers. "But I thought—I loved you when you were a sixteen-year-old miner's daughter!" he whispered.

"But, sir, if you really must know, I am twenty-two!"

"Then we will only wait for you to put up that braid." And Dick laughed like a boy.

A Crazy Man's Invention.

A famous New York alienist visited an insane asylum, where one of the inmates said to him: "I have invented a patent fly catcher. Greatest thing in the world. Here, I'll show you how it works." The man took a sheet of paper and drew a birdcage. "That," he said, "is a parrot's cage—just a common cage—but you observe that on this side there is a door with a heavy iron knob and that there is another door on the other side, also with a heavy iron knob. Now, you see, you take this parrot's cage and put it on a pedestal fourteen feet high, the pedestal standing on a marble slab. Then I place a ladder on this side, reaching up to one door, and a ladder on the other side, leading to the other door. This is how it works: The unsuspecting fly comes along and climbs up the ladder on this side. It opens the door by means of the iron knob, walks through the cage and opens the door on the other side. Then it starts down the other ladder. That's where we catch him!" the inventor continued excitedly. "That's where the invention is. That's where I shall get my money. You see, the fourth rung is missing in this second ladder, but the fly doesn't know it, and he falls on the marble slab and breaks his neck."

HOW IS YOUR POWER HOUSE?

A prominent medical specialist of the U. S., in a recent lecture before optical students, said: "I know of no more appropriate comparison than that of Dr. Chalmers Prentice, where he compares the brain of man to a power house, or electric light plant, and the wires leading from there to the electric lights all over the city, to that of the nerve fibres running in countless numbers from every part of the body to the vital brain centre, and he compares this eye-strain to a short circuited wire, using up the vital energy to overcome the eye-strain, thus depriving all other parts of the body of its power to perform its work. I have in the past found a number of these cases with normal vision, who were sure their eyes were "allright," yet I have developed 9D of latent hyperopia. Think of the vast amount of waste nerve energy used up every day to overcome this amount of error and still maintain normal vision." We use the "Prentice System" and Lenses in such cases with complete success. Consultation free.

REV. DR. SHEARER GAVE ADDRESS IN ST. ANDREW'S

SECRETARY OF LORD'S DAY ALLIANCE SAYS TEST CASES WILL SHORTLY BE INSTITUTED AGAINST G. T. R. AND C. P. R.

Rev. Dr. Shearer, of Toronto, Secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance, was in the city yesterday and occupied the pulpits of two of the local places of worship. At the close of the regular evening service at St. Andrew's church the Rev. gentleman gave an address in reference to the Lord's Day Act, which recently came into force in Canada. Owing to the inclement weather the attendance was not large. After the singing of a hymn and prayer, Dr. Shearer was introduced by the Pastor, Rev. R. S. Laidlaw. The Rev. gentleman, in his opening remarks, stated that he would speak briefly on the Lord's Day Act, which passed the Parliament of Canada on July 11th, 1906. He divided his subject into three parts, namely: "Why did we seek such an Act?" "How was it obtained?" and "What does it say?" The Act was sought because we wanted a Christian Sabbath preserved for our people. We are a toiling people and destined to be a hard-working people. As such the need of one day out of seven as a day of rest was plain. Previous to the Act going into force there were at least 150,000 Canadians who were toiling on the Sabbath Day. They had been robbed of that day of rest, but now the great majority of them have the Sabbath. The Act was obtained by the persistent efforts of the Lord's Day Alliance and the assistance rendered by the electors of the Dominion, whose petitions by the hundreds were poured into Parliament. The speaker then detailed some of the provisions of the Act and what it prohibited on Sunday, namely: Selling in Canada of Sunday newspapers; Sunday excursions by rail or boat, and the making up of freight trains at any station to be transported to another. Through freight, which is en route at 6 o'clock on Sunday morning, is the only freight allowed to be moved. In regard to the latter provision of the Act he claimed it had been violated and two test cases would shortly be tried the defendants being the two great railways of Canada. In concluding his address Dr. Shearer made an eloquent appeal to all to assist in having the heritage of a blessed Sabbath kept intact and not made by any a day of labor.

Bridge Street.

Rev. Dr. Judd, of New York, who is at present engaged in touring Canada in the interests of the International Reform Bureau, occupied the pulpit of Bridge Street Church last evening. The subject of his remarks was "The Vision that Makes the Reformer," and his text was from Acts, 2nd chapter, 17th verse:

> "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams."

The Rev. gentleman gave an earnest and practical discourse in reference to what the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ was doing for the world to-day. It was the desire that all Christian people of all nations should lock arms and thus by one united effort lift the world up to a better plane. This was the object of the International Bureau of Reform, and he was in Canada to get the Christian people of this country to assist in this grand and noble movement, a movement which had already accomplished much good in the country to which he belonged. It had been the means of having passed through Congress measures which were destined to do good and obliterate some of the evils which existed in that country. It was a movement in which all Christian people could assist and, he was pleased to state, were heartily assisting.

Baptist Church.

Yesterday proved a strenuous day for the McMaster Band in the Baptist Church. The morning service, conducted by the Band in the body of the church was well attended. The service was missionary in its character, and appropriate addresses were delivered by Messrs. Warner and Ray. The church, they said, which is most intensely active in missionary enterprise is the church which is most successful. Important, however, as foreign missions may be, we must ever keep before us the importance of the work which lies right at our hand. Mr. Williamson sang a selection entitled, "I'll go where you want me to go."

At three o'clock an open session of the school was held, the service being conducted by the Band. Short and earnest addresses were delivered by Messrs. Warner and Cameron, which were much appreciated by the scholars.

In the evening the seating capacity of the Baptist Church was taxed to its utmost to accommodate the crowd which gathered. Mr. Williamson sang "The Land of the Leal," by request, after which Mr. Edwards and Mr. Cameron delivered brief and impressive addresses. The male quartette sang the slave song, "Steal Away," which was very attentively listened to by the large audience. In the after service a number professed faith in Christ.

Bethel Hall.

The meeting last night in Bethel Hall was a large and appreciative one. Notwithstanding the bad condition of the weather there was a large attendance. Mr. Crombie gave a searching address on the three physical resurrections, viz.: Jairus' daughter, son of the widow of Nain and of Lazarus, who had been dead four days, a picture of the spiritual condition of what God was doing now during this dispensation in quickening dead souls into life.

Holloway Street.

At Holloway St. yesterday morning there was a large gathering for the monthly fellowship and preaching service. The pastor's text was Mat. 5, 13, "Ye are the salt of the earth," and his theme in deduction from the text was "Personal influence the greatest and most needed ministry of to-day." Our Lord may declare the beautiful Beatitudes, but His church must exemplify them, and especially parents before their children, in whom is the hope of the future. Every life is a sun, with its satellites, and every life must preach as they walk if they walk as they preach, and every one may preach a sermon as long as from their homes to the house of God on his day. The speaker expressed his gratitude for the Timely Topic and admonition to young men in Saturday evening's Intelligencer, and urged that we can only be the "salt of the earth" by the personal influence of Christ in our hearts and lives. In the evening the pastor's text was John 10, 10, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." The choir were assisted by the sunbeam choir of girls and boys, on the right and left of the gallery. Miss Price and Mr. D. Leitch sang "Over the stars there is rest," by Franz Abt.

Local Changes In the Grand Trunk Railway

Mr. J. R. Donnelly, who was for some time locomotive foreman here for the G.T.R. company, has accepted a position as superintendent of motive power for the Canada Atlantic. His office will be at Ottawa. Mr. Donnelly was deservedly popular with the local employees, who regret his departure.

Mr. Edward Fisher takes the place of Mr. Donnelly as local foreman, and there is no doubt that "Ed.," as he is popularly known, will fill the position most acceptably.

Mr. Robert Ivers, of this city, has been appointed locomotive foreman at Turcotte, near Montreal.

Mr. Joseph Hay, son of ex-Ald. Hay, of this city, has been appointed locomotive foreman at London, Ont.

Married At St. Michael's

RUSSELL — WILSON.

A quiet wedding took place at 10 o'clock this morning, at St. Michael's church. The groom was Mr. J. A. Russell, of Belleville, formerly of Hamilton, Ontario, and the winsome bride was Miss Annie Agnes Wilson, daughter of Mr. Robert Wilson, Wharf street. Rev. Father Twomey performed the ceremony. The bride was most becomingly attired in a travelling suit of navy blue Panama over taffeta, with hat to match. She was assisted by her sister, Miss Irene Wilson, who wore a gown of white dotted mulle and hat to match. Mr. Charles Wilson, a cousin of the bride, did honors for the groom. Soon after the wedding Mr. and Mrs. Russell left for the west where they will remain for a few days and then return to the city to take up their residence here. The groom is a valued employee of the rolling mills, and the bride is a sister of Miss Frankie Wilson, an employee of The Intelligencer office. The many friends of the young couple in this city will unite in wishing them every happiness and prosperity through their wedded life.

THE PUREST AND THE BEST

Can be said of all Clark's Meats. Ours is the standard quality. We stand behind our goods,

The Mass Meeting.

The mass meeting for men, held at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the opera house, and conducted by the McMaster Band, was fairly well attended. Revs. R. S. Laidlaw and C. H. Emerson occupied seats upon the platform, and took part in the opening devotional exercises.

Messrs. Ray and Cameron gave brief but pointed addresses. The former demonstrated how womanhood and manhood had been raised through the teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ. The gospel of Christ was the only thing which could solve the public and personal problems of the day. Mr. Cameron's address was in reference to the conversion of the robber who was crucified with the Saviour. Jesus heard his prayer, and said unto him, "To-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." If the Saviour heard his prayer will He not hear our prayers when He is now interceding at the throne on behalf of sinners? The speaker made an earnest appeal for all to forsake sin and accept Jesus Christ as their personal friend.

During the service the quartette sang with fine effect, two selections namely, "Blue Galilee," and "The Beautiful Land."

A number present signified their intention of leading a Christian life. The meeting was closed by the benediction pronounced by the Rev. J. P. Wilson.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

A FINE RURAL PLAY.

Few plays come as highly recommended as "When the Harvest Days are Over," which will be presented at the Carman next Friday, under the direction of Mr. Neil Twomey. The story is said to be a very probable one and interesting from start to finish. The comedy is rich and possesses a good deal of originality. Felix Haney, who is starring in this play, is too well known to require any extra words of praise. As Hez Huckins he is said to be doing the best work of what has been a highly successful career, and his singing of Hez Huckins, the village cut-up, demands nightly seven and eight encores.

Thinks There Is No Need of Protest.

Kingston Whig: A prominent clergyman who received a Lord's Day Alliance request from Toronto, yesterday, to make protest from his pulpit about the Kingston post office lobby being opened for a couple of hours on Sunday afternoon, put the typewritten circular in his waste paper basket, saying that there was no need of any protest.

Bitten By A Dog.

A lad named Willie Robinson reports to the police that on Saturday he was bit upon the leg by a dog, which, he alleges, is the property of a Mr. King, residing on Charles street. The wound made was of such a nature that a physician had to attend the boy.

MAN DROPPED 200 FEET.

Engineer Falls From High Chimney But Escapes Injury.

Chicago, April 8.—John Nagel, a constructing engineer, fell from the top of a 200-foot chimney at the Standard Steel Car Works in Hammond on Saturday, but in his fall he struck a projecting scaffold on the outside about 25 feet from the top, which enabled him to grasp a plank, thus saving his life.

Nagel was in charge of the building of the giant smokestack, and in order to see the progress he ascended to the top of the structure in a drop bucket. When the bucket neared the top the man in charge of the hoisting engine below failed to perceive Nagel's signal to stop, and the engineer was thrown over the edge of the narrow aperture above.

His fall was witnessed by hundreds of workmen on surrounding buildings, whose attention was drawn to the top of the towering chimney by Nagel's cries. He escaped practically unhurt, but the other men on the smokestack were so unnerved that they could not work for some time.

CURED BY THE SHOCK.

Insane Patients Recovered After Passing of Tornado.

New Orleans, April 8.—Several of the inmates of the State Insane Asylum at Jackson, La., may be discharged as cured within a short time as a result of the tornado.

When the physicians restored order and were able to make an examination the remarkable discovery was made that several of the patients had been virtually cured by shock. These men and women had been suffering from what is known as chronic hysteria. Some of them were in very bad shape just before the tornado, and the keepers believed they would be tenants for a long time. But a sudden change, which the doctors believe will prove permanent recovery, came after the first shock of the catastrophe was over.

Asylum Patient Found Dead.

Brockville, April 8.—When the guard was making his rounds at the asylum for insane Saturday evening, he discovered Samuel Pollock of Cornwall, dead.

Lace Curtains and Curtain Nets

We have never heretofore shown such a splendid array of choice patterns. Many designs entirely new and might be considered gems, if it is possible to apply that term to window drapery. The range in prices will merit your views, being very persuasive.

WINDOW SHADES

You will not see a better range of window shades in any of the larger cities than is shown in this store. The lace patterns are very pretty and we are showing them in white, cream and green colors. Prices from 35c up.

FLOOR OILCLOTHS

SEVEN WATER SPOUTS

Were Sighted From Bridge of Storm Tossed Ship.

Steamer Virginia From Kingston, Ja., Battered by Wind and Rain for Sixty Hours—Crew Utterly Exhausted—Galley Fires Extinguished—Cabins Flooded—Wind Reached Velocity of 60 Miles an Hour.

New York, April 8.—With seven of her crew more or less injured and the others utterly exhausted, the steamer Virginia arrived here Saturday from Kingston, Ja., after a desperate struggle with a storm of 60 hours' duration off Hatteras.

The wind reached a velocity of 60 miles an hour and rain fell in torrents. At one time seven water spouts were sighted from the steamer's bridge. An immense wave, which struck the ship about six hours after she had run into the storm, ripped off the tarpaulins that had been hastily battened down over the hatch openings, which had been left open to give ventilation to the cargo of bananas in the hold. Galleys, cabin and scuppers were flooded four feet deep, the rush of water extinguishing the galley fires.

Several of the mess-room and cabin force were more or less seriously injured. During the 60 hours which the storm continued Captain Gech remained continuously on the bridge and every man of the crew was kept at his post.

BORDEN TO REMAIN.

Minister of Militia May Succeed Lord Strathcona.

Ottawa, April 8.—Among well-informed politicians here it is said that Sir Frederick Borden, Minister of Militia, will return from England as Canadian High Commissioner at London.

There is an impression here that one excuse and another will be offered for a reorganization of the Laurier Cabinet. No one expects that Mr. Hyman will return to Ottawa as Minister. Mr. Emmerson is out. Presently there may be news of the shunting of Hon. Mr. Scott from the post of Secretary of State to make room for a younger man; then Sir Richard Cartwright will give way, and, with most of the Ontario delegation placed, Sir Wilfrid may find it easy to go ahead with the matter of rehabilitation.

Then new difficulties will beset him. The "next in line" are supposed to be Archie Campbell, W. S. Calvert and W. M. German. Are they Cabinet timber?

SMALLPOX IN BRUCE.

Fourteen Cases Reported From Township of St. Edmunds.

Toronto, April 8.—Fourteen cases of smallpox are reported from the Township of St. Edmunds, in the northern portion of Bruce peninsula. An inspector of the provincial board of health has been in this and adjoining townships for some two weeks past. The local authorities, he declares, have not given the support they should have done to his measures of precaution and prevention.

Sealing Ship Missing.

St. John's, Nfld., April 8.—The sealing steamer Southern Cross, which left this port March 11 with 172 men has not been seen since, and it is feared she has met with an accident.

The steamers, Adventure and Panther, which came in Saturday, report that, except for the Southern Cross, the entire sealing fleet has been accounted for. It is thought that she may have been driven from the sealing grounds and is now jammed in the ice floes far north. The ice is still thick at many points along the coast.

Copper King In Danger.

Trinidad, Col., April 8.—While former United States Senator William A. Clark of Montana was crossing a river 20 miles west of Trinidad, his carriage broke through the ice and was upset.

The Senator was thrown into the stream but was rescued by other members of the party as he was being held under the ice.

After the accident the Senator was hurriedly taken to a ranch five miles away and when he arrived there his clothing had frozen.

Anarchist Near Queen's Ship.

Toulon, France, April 8.—Queen Alexandra and Princess Victoria arrived here Saturday and went on board the royal yacht Victoria and Albert.

The police arrested a German on a small steamer in the vicinity of the royal yacht. He could not explain his presence on the vessel and was detained on suspicion of being an anarchist.

Montrealer Murdered.

New York, April 8.—The body of Frank Drake, who was shot and killed on the Bower Saturday night, will be shipped to his home in Montreal, Canada. A telegram was received in this city from his mother yesterday, asking that the body be sent there. Michael D. Manix is under arrest in connection with the murder.

Suicide Due to Ill-Health.

New York, April 8.—Francis E. Southard, 64 years old, senior member of the firm of Southard & Co., dealers in yellow pine at 11 Broadway, and living at the Rhinelander Apartments in Fifth avenue, shot and instantly killed himself in his home late yesterday. It is believed ill-health caused the suicide.

Arbitrators For Increase.

San Francisco, April 8.—The board of arbitration between the Southern Pacific Co. and the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, handed down its decision Saturday, awarding the telegraphers 7 1-2 per cent. increase in pay and a half day's work on Sunday, or in lieu thereof a vacation of 26 days in each year with full pay.

500 CHINESE HOMELESS.

Great Fire Destroyed Celestial Quarter at Steveston, B. C.

Vancouver, April 8.—The Chinese district of Steveston, the seat of the Fraser River canning industry, was totally destroyed by fire Saturday, and five hundred Chinamen were rendered business.

Fire started from a defective flue or stove-pipe in a house near the river bank at 3 o'clock, and to the piping of a southwesterly gale the whole Chinese section burned to ashes. Incipient fires broke out all over the town, and for a time it seemed that Steveston would be completely wiped out before the flames were got under control. The proprietor of the Star Hotel, one hundred yards distant, offered to sell all his interest in the building for a ten-dollar bill, and could not find a buyer, yet the hotel escaped practically undamaged.

Appliances for coping with the outbreak were of the most primitive description, but everybody turned out to fight the fire, and it was confined to the dictort waters it iaffich fined to the district where it originated.

Thousands of dolars' worth a buildings, stores and personal effects were destroyed, and many inhabitants barely escaped with their lives. Vancouver owners of the burned buildings estimated the loss at a high figure.

CANADA AN EMPIRE.

Outlook Says Many Canadians Favor Political Separation.

London, April 8.—(C. A. P.)—The Economist says colonial statesmen do not yet know with what profound disbelief the majority of Englishmen regard the policy with which Chamberlain's name is associated in the last few years, at the same time not suggesting that it is impossible to draw closer the bonds of union with the colonies.

The Spectator discussing reciprocity and the colonial conference, says "Surely it would be wiser for the Colonies to leave our fiscal system alone while we leave theirs alone, and let each section of the Empire manage its own commercial affairs its own way."

The Saturday Review says "Mr. Bryce can hardly have enjoyed his dinner at the Canadian Club at Ottawa."

The Outlook says "Not a few Canadians agree with Judge Longley that the Dominion is an empire in itself and openly advocate the right to exist as a political entity; many more hold Longley's opinions but have not the courage to express them in public.

SOUTH AFRICA CONSTABULARY.

Relations With the Boers Most Cordial, Says Steele.

London, April 8.—(C. A. P.)—Col. S. B. Steele in an interview stated that the relations of the South African Constabulary with the Boers were as cordial as those of the famous Northwest Mounted Police, all the men behaved like true gentlemen and the respect felt for them greatly added to their efficiency. Col. Steele also dwelt on the necessity of mutual confidence between officers and men in scouting.

Steel Plant Shut Down.

Lorain, Ohio, April 8.—Notices were posted at the mills of the United States Steel Corporation here Saturday that the plant would be shut down for two weeks, for repairs, beginning Saturday night. This will affect 8,000 men.

It is said that most of the employes of the great plant are union men. The enforced idleness of so many men at this time may have an effect upon the strike at the shipyards.

That the city authorities think so is shown by an order of Mayor King to Captain Cove of Company B. to keep his company at the armory under arms until further orders.

Escapes the Chair.

Albany, April 8.—On the recommendation of the Court of Appeal, Governor Hughes Saturday commuted to life imprisonment the sentence of death imposed upon Leonardo Broncado of New York City, who was convicted of murder in the first degree.

Broncado shot and killed Francesco Lapaglia June 1, 1906, in New York City. The evidence was to the effect that Lapaglia threatened Broncado on several occasions and assaulted him before the fatal shot was fired.

Dr. Drummond Dead.

Cobalt, April 8.—Dr. Drummond died at his residence at the Drummond mine at 10.40 o'clock Saturday morning.

He never regained consciousness from the time he was stricken with paralysis last Monday, and no hope has really been entertained. His wife and brother, T. J. Drummond, were with him when he died.

Deceased was 53 years old.

Burned In Mill.

Saugus, Mass., April 8.—Two men were burned to death in a fire which destroyed the H. B. Newhall Tide Mill early Saturday, causing a loss of $25,000. The dead men are Oscar Ellis and Michael Desmond, both of Malden. The bodies were found near a chimney where the men were in the habit of sleeping.

Torpedo Boats Active.

Toulon, April 8.—All the torpedo-boat destroyers here show signs of activity, and the squadron has been ordered to hold itself in readiness to go to Marseilles to carry the Corsican and Algerian mails in the event of an outbreak of the threatened seamen's strikes.

Cheese Factory Burned.

Brockville, April 8.—The J. B. Wilson cheese factory at Willowbank was burned to the ground. It was valued at $2,000 and insured for $1,200.

Australia Will Compete.

London, April 8.—(C. A. P.)—Australia is sending a team to compete for the Kolapore Cup at Bisley in July.

END NOW DRAWS NEAR

Thaw Trial Expected to Be Finished During This Week.

Dr. Hamilton, Alienist, to Take Stand To-Day—Will Say Defendant Was Insane At Time of Murder—Defence Finishes To-Morrow—Case Will Likely Go to Jury On Thursday.

New York, April 8.—That the long-drawn-out Thaw trial, now in its twelfth week, will be finished this week seems almost certain.

Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton, the alienist, who was on the stand when the case was suddenly stopped by the district attorney's suggestion, that the appointment of a commission in lunacy would be advisable, will probably be recalled to the stand when the trial is resumed on Monday. He has already testified that he believes Thaw was insane when he shot Stanford White, and he will probably repeat that statement.

Now Sane.

The lunacy commission, having decided that Thaw is now sane, Mr. Jerome will probably be prevented from asking Dr. Hamilton about his opinion of Thaw's present sanity. Therefore, there is little upon which he can cross-examine the alienist.

Whether or not the defence will call any more witnesses is problematical. It is said that they expect to require no more than one hour to complete their case. If this is true, there is no reason why the case should not go to the jury on Thursday.

District Attorney Jerome Saturday night said that he had no more witnesses whose evidence he would place before the jury.

Mr. Delmas for the defence should finish on Tuesday.

Mr. Jerome still says that he will not require more than one day, and, therefore, at the latest, he should complete his argument on Wednesday. Justice Fitzgerald's charge to the jury should not require more than three or four hours, and it is therefore very possible that the case will be in the jury's hands on Thursday.

Plea For Acquittal.

Mr. Delmas will go before the jury with a plea for acquittal, on the ground that Thaw's mind was unbalanced at the time he committed the crime, and that in view of the fact that he has since recovered his mental balance he should be allowed to go free. Mr. Jerome, on the other hand, will argue that Thaw was sane within the meaning of the law when he killed Stanford White; that the crime was planned and premeditated, and that he should suffer the extreme penalty of the law.

While Mr. Jerome conscientiously believes that Thaw is insane to-day, and should be confined in some institution where he could not be a menace to the community, the commission has decided that he is not, and there is nothing for the district attorney to do but to demand that Thaw be sent to the electric chair.

White's Effects Sold.

New York, April 8.—The sale of the furnishings of the late Stanford White was completed Saturday, the receipts of the day's sale being $77,985, and the total for the entire sale reaching $125,805.

The most important article sold was a sample of the grand Gobein tapestry, which brought $10,500.

BATTLESHIP FOR JAPAN.

Commission On Way to Place $11,250,000 Order In England

London, April 8.—It is reported here that the largest battleship in the world, to have a displacement of 21,000 tons, is to be built in England for the Japanese Government, and that a commission already is on its way here from Japan for the purpose of placing the contract with one or another of the great British shipbuilders.

It is believed that Japan would, in the future, build all her own warships, but is is now thought that a vessel of this size would be too great an undertaking for her, and it is known that the Japanese Admiralty has a full program for its home yards.

The cost of this new battleship will be about $11,250,000.

Rickard For West Durham.

Bowmanville, April 8.—The Liberal convention on Saturday selected William Rickard, ex-M.P. of Newcastle, to be the Liberal candidate in West Durham at the next provincial election.

The other nominations were W. J. Bragg, Thomas Baker, E. Clemens, and M. A. James.

Hon. George P. Graham, Liberal leader, reviewed the conduct of the Whitney Government, and compared its record with its promises before election. President R. D. Davidson presided.

Killed In Runaway.

Paris, April 8.—Saturday morning Robert McNaughton of South Dumfries received fatal injuries in a runaway.

His horse became frightened at the subway on Grand River street by a train and dashed down the long hill at a breakneck speed, crashing into the iron drinking fountain and breaking it in two.

The man's head struck the pavement with terrible force, and his skull was crushed. He died in the afternoon.

Czar Will Not Abdicate.

London, April 8.—Count Benckendorff, the Russian Ambassador, issued a statement saying there was "absolutely no truth in the report" that the Czar's abdiction was imminent.

Brockville, April 8.—A. Prosser of Cardinal lost a finger in a peculiar manner. He picked a sliver which had become embedded under a fingernail. Complications set in and it was found necessary to amputate the finger.

Crawford Is The Speaker.

Selected by Legislature to Succeed Late Hon. J.W. St. John Affecting Scene in the House--Touching Tributes to Late Speaker--Members With Tears, Express Sense of His Noble Character--House Adjourns as Mark of Respect--Session Near Its Close.

Toronto, April 9.—The spirit of solemnity characterized the impressive ceremonial which constituted the short session of the Legislature yesterday. The Speaker's gallery was preserved absolutely empty, until the election of the new Speaker, while the other galleries and the floor of the House were thronged with silent spectators. The Ministers and the leader of the Opposition came in together, all dressed in black, and took their places.

Then in the solemn hush the Sergeant-At-Arms marched in with the mace and placed it below the table.

The Prime Minister rose.

"Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly," he said, "you are aware of the mournful and sorrowful circumstances under which we meet to-day. I am asked by his honor, the Lieutenant-Governor, to convey to you the sad intelligence that Hon. Joseph Wesley St. John, Speaker of this Legislature has departed this life and that his seat in this Assembly is rendered vacant. His Honor asks you forthwith to choose a fit and proper person to preside over your deliberations."

Hon. Mr. Whitney intimated that the precedent being followed was that surrounding Hon. R. W. Scott, when 40 years ago, within ten days of the close of the Dominion session, he was called from the speakership to become a Minister of the Crown.

Mr. Crawford Chosen.

In accordance with the message of his Honor, the Prime Minister, moved the selection of Mr. Thomas Crawford (West Toronto) as Speaker. In so doing Mr. Whitney spoke in highest terms of Mr. Crawford as a respected member of the House, a gentleman of valued municipal experience and one held in honor by those who knew him.

Hon. Mr. Foy, the Attorney General, seconded the resolution. He believed that the selection would commend itself to all members on both sides of the House. Mr. Crawford was a man of experience and excellent good sense, and possessed an even mind which was both judicious and judicial. The Minister believed he would fill the office with impartiality and fairness.

Hon. Mr. Graham heartily acquiesced in the choice He thought Mr. Crawford would perform the duties of Speaker with dignity, fairness and good sense.

The Prime Minister and Hon. Mr. Foy then escorted Mr. Crawford to the Throne.

"No words of mine can express my feelings at this moment," declared the Speaker-elect, addressing the House. "I can truthfully say I appreciate the honor, but the circumstances bring pain to my heart and mind. I shall seek to discharge the duties in a manner worthy of the position."

A few moments later the Lieutenant-Governor clad in his robes of state entered the chamber with the Prime Minister. Having taken his seat on the Throne the new Speaker presented himself and was approved.

Prime Minister's Eulogy.

Then followed an affecting scene. Hon. Mr. Whitney, his voice choked with emotion briefly addressed the House. Members sat with their heads resting on their hands or desks, and spectators sobbed in the gallery.

"My words must be few," began the Prime Minister. I speak them in deep humility and with a wounded heart. I shall not attempt extravagant eulogy—such would be ill-pleasing to him who is gone.

"I am not equal to the occasion," confessed the speaker after a moment's pause, his voice breaking. "Mr. St. John came from the yeomanry of the Province," he finally continued. "The story of his life was one of absolute fairness and honestness of purpose. The man was an open book—he was transparently honest. He had a broad and Catholic nature. He held a position in the public esteem not given to many of us. If he saw the world about him happy, he was happy.

"I cannot express all I feel," concluded the Premier, "in the sacred grief of the home we have the deepest sympathy. Mr. St. John so lived his life that he fought the good fight and humanity was the gainer by his life."

Hon. Mr. Graham's Tribute.

Hon. Mr. Graham said on an occasion like the present when the very air seemed laden with grief and sorrow sat on every heart words seemed meaningless. "This Legislature," said the Liberal leader, "sits in the sombre shadow of a great sadness. We are compelled to ask, Why? That friendship should be thus ruthlessly broken, cut off is beyond the pen of mankind. We shall only learn why when the curtain lifts as the cycle of eternity rolls by. Mr. St. John was ardent in friendship and threw enthusiasm into every walk of life. He was big in stature, large of heart and broad of mind. We have all suffered a great loss—a friend has gone."

Other brief addresses were made by Messrs. W. H. Hoyle (North Ontario), J. P. Downey (South Wellington), Col. Atkinson (North Norfolk) and Allan Studholme (East Hamilton). Mr. Downey's tribute was one of the most eloquent utterances ever heard in the House.

Out of respect for the memory of the late Speaker the House then adjourned.

After Wednesday—the day of the funeral—the Legislature will meet at eleven o'clock in the morning, and Government business will have precedence. To-morrow the House will meet at two o'clock in the afternoon.

DISARMAMENT NOT PROBLEM.

Germany Will Refuse to Discuss It at Hague Conference.

London, April 9.—The Berlin correspondent of The Daily Mail says that Germany is heartily anxious for a definite result from The Hague Conference and regrets that the deliberations will not be confined to practical international questions in accordance with Russia's proposal. He adds that when the British proposal for the limitation of armaments is submitted, Baron Marschall von Bieberstein, as Germany's chief delegate, will define her position substantially thus: Disarmament for Germany is not a problem. It is a matter upon which she holds convictions of such a character that participation in any discussion of the subject would be utterly futile. She therefore leaves consideration of the matter to those who believe its discussion will repay them.

BRITISH HOUSE RE-ASSEMBLES.

Budget Expected to Lead to Prolonged Debate.

London, April 9.—Parliament reassembled yesterday after the Easter.

The budget will be introduced April 18, and is expected to lead to lively and prolonged debate.

The prospects seem slight for any early effort to deal with the question described in the King's speech as the "unfortunate differences between the two Houses."

As a result of the large amount of work before Parliament, an autumn session seems to be inevitable.

King Edward In Spain.

Cartagena, Spain, April 9.—King Alfonso, the Dowager Queen Christinia and the other members of the royal party arrived here at 7.30 yesterday morning from Madrid, in order to meet the King and Queen of England.

The British royal yacht Victoria and Albert, escorted by warships, was sighted later in the day and King Alfonso went out to meet King Edward and Queen Alexandra on board the Spanish royal yacht Giralda.

The royal visitors were accorded a magnificent reception on their arrival here.

The Official Gazette yesterday published a royal decree appointing King Edward an honorary captain-general in the Spanish army.

Dr. Drummond Buried.

Montreal, April 9.—The funeral of the late Dr. William Henry Drummond took place yesterday afternoon from St. George's church to Mount Royal Cemetery. The body arrived at 9.30 and through a blinding snowstorm was taken to the church.

Dr. Drummond's three brothers were the recipients of letters, telegrams and cables from all parts of the continent and Europe.

Among those who telegraphed was Earl Grey.

Boy Convicts Saloonmen.

Ottawa, April 9.—A boy, aged 15, appeared in the police court yesterday and gave evidence against five hotel men for selling himself, a minor, intoxicating liquors.

The boy acted by himself and stood a long cross-examination well.

The saloon-keepers were fined $10 each solely on his evidence,

Holds Sister For Boy's Death.

Quebec, April 9.—The jury in the matter of the 14-year-old boy named Amedee Carrier, who was killed on Monday last at St. Charles, Bellechasse, rendered a verdict holding Alexena Carrier, sister of the boy, responsible for her brother's death. The young prisoner is only 14 years of age.

Another Big Shipment Of Dress Goods

LATE steamers have just brought us another lot of choice VOILES, BROAD CLOTHS and WORSTED SUITINGS. These are the most fashionable colorings and newest weaves. The suitings are in short lengths not more than two dresses in any pattern which makes them exclusive.

SILK VOILES are very popular in the largest FASHION CENTRES and we are showing these in Black, Cream and all the leading colors, It will be a pleasure to show them to you.

More Long Gloves.

Another new lot of the much sought after long Gloves in Silk, Lisle and Kid in Black, White, Cream, Champagne, Sky Blue, Pink and Navy.

Ladies' Colored Stockings

Colored Hose for Ladies will be much worn this season and we have put them into stock in all the leading shades both plain and lace.

Dainty Wash Goods

Our counters have never before displayed such a choice collection of Dainty Wash Material. From France, from Germany, from England, from the United States and from our own Canadian Looms, the best and choicest from each.

The Printings and shadings in the fine French Organdies and Voiles surpass anything before seen here. Most of these are in short lengths, so that not more than two dresses can be sold of the same pattern.

The way the ladies are buying these is evidence enough of their beauty.

Come and select your Summer Gown while the assortment is at its best.

Lovely designs from 20c to 50c per yard.

Our Stock of Rugs

Another shipment just arrived from AUSTRIA which brings our Rug display up to the finest yet. Customers have told us after visiting the largest cities in CANADA that they could find nothing choicer and backed up their assertion by purchasing from us. We are agents for this district for Templeton's Celebrated Scotch Rugs and we have durings the past month been sending parcels of them out to many of the large towns in this vicinity. We sell them at the very lowest possible prices and although the makers have recently advanced their prices very materially, we are selling all the season's importations at old Prices. Let us figure on any of your Carpet or Rug Requirements.

MEN'S HATS

The Celebrated CHRISTY make for which we have been appointed sale-selling agents in Belleville.

They are here in all the new shapes, both soft and stiff in black and fashionable colors.

Besides these we show the new shapes in the best CANADIAN and AMERICAN makes, all priced in the modest way that prevails in our Men's Furnishing Department.

TIMELY TOPICS.

City Fathers have raised the tax rate, and now all we have to do is to raise the money to pay the taxes.

* * *

The coal man's happy as a king
'Cause winter lingers in the lap of spring.

Property-owners of this city were probably prepared for an increase in the tax rate this year, but few it is safe to say, looked for the high jump which the said rate received, namely, [illegible] mills, or about 33 cents on each $100 of assessment. A comparison of the rate last year and this will prove interesting;

	1906	1907
High School	1.4	1.35
Public School ...	3.2	3.60
Municipal	19.9	21.85*
	23.5	26.80

*Including local improvement debentures.

* * *

The Separate School rate is 7 mills, which brings the rate for Rev. Father Twomey's parishioners up to the very respectable total of 30.20.

* * *

It would be unwise and unfair to attempt any drastic criticism of Ald. Marsh's figures, which appear in another column to speak for themselves. Modern improvements cost money, and if people have them they must pay the piper. The fact that, out of a total expenditure of $84,231.23, more than two-thirds of it are uncontrollable, must not be lost sight of. But the overdraft of $2000, carried over from last year, is something which should not occur again. Pay as you go is a fine motto.

Mira
MARVELOUS
TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

Ointment quickly cures Itching Piles, Eczema, and other skin troubles.

Lee Corrigan, 475 Ferguson Ave., N. Hamilton, had Eczema since childhood. He consulted specialists—lay weeks and weeks in hospitals—and despaired of ever getting better.

"I thought Mira would be like other remedies I had tried," he writes, "but, to my delight, a few hours after the first application I felt great relief. It has worked wonders for me."

Don't put it off—get a box of Mira Ointment at once and be relieved. Price 50c.—6 for $2.50. At druggists'—or from The Chemists' Co. of Canada, Limited, Hamilton—Toronto.

The Chairman of the Executive placed himself on record as believing the present assessment is too low, a state of affairs which, if correct, is, of course, apt to give the tax rate an inflated appearance. Without denying the truth of Ald. Marsh's figures, however, it may fairly be pointed out that the city, a few years ago, went to considerable expense in having the assessment revised by a commission. Are we to infer now that the work of that commission was unsatisfactory? However, whether the assessment be high or low, the amount to be raised by taxation is the same. The trouble is that a low assessment is apt to make the tax rate appear abnormally high.

Mr. J. T. Osborne, formerly a well-known resident of this city, now of Calgary, writes as follows; Enclosed please find express order to apply on my subscription to the Daily Intelligencer. Your great family journal is eagerly sought for by each member of our family to obtain the news for the City of the Bay, for it is through that channel alone that we obtain much of the general news of the city. The members of the Belleville contingent in this growing city of the west are all doing well, and from reports many more will be coming out here this coming summer."

At an evening party shortly after Easter Monday a young lady had just finished the "Moonlight Sonata," and received an admiring chorus of "Thank-you's." The silence was broken by a dear old lady near the piano saying, "Ah! I always like 'Home, Sweet Home.'"

"Home, Sweet Home!" exclaimed the startled young lady.

"Yes," continued the old lady, placidly beaming through her spectacles "My daughter plays it. I always know it when she crosses her hands. It is lovely."

Lindsay H. Hamilton Died Of Pneumonia.

POPULAR MEMBER OF POPULAR FAMILY DIED THIS MORNING—SECOND AFFLICTION IN BRIEF PERIOD.

A few days ago Mr. Lindsay H. Hamilton, of this city, went to Big Island, Prince Edward County, for the purpose of trying to regain health. The visit, however, proved to be an unlucky one, as he was stricken with an attack of pneumonia and, although everything that medical skill could suggest was done, he passed away at an early hour this morning.

Deceased was the eldest son of the late Mr. Wm. Hamilton, manager of the Merchants Bank, who died suddenly a few weeks ago. Lindsay, or as he was familiarly known about the city, "Herkey," was 22 years of age and was born at Lindsay, but for the greater portion of his life lived in Belleville. He was for some time connected with the Montreal Bank at Guelph, but recently had to relinquish his duties owing to ill-health. He came home in the hope that he would soon recover. Deceased was unmarried. He was very popular, had a large circle of acquaintances in this city, and was a member of St. Thomas' church. A mother, four sisters and three brothers survive. The brothers are, Harry, at Renfrew; William and Robert, of this city, and the sisters are Mrs. Wm. Thomson, Mrs. R. E. Orr, Misses Marjorie and Gwendolin, all of whom reside at home. The afflicted ones will receive the sincere sympathy of all citizens in this their second bereavement in a short time. The remains were to-day brought to the city.

Card of Thanks.

Mrs. Holmes and family wish to convey their thanks to the friends for their kindness and sympathy during their recent bereavement.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

A SUCCESSFUL PLAY.

"When the Harvest Days Are Over," which comes to the Carman next Friday, is from the pen of Neil Twomey, a young American playwright who, in a comparatively short time, has become one of the few successful authors who write for the stage. His latest work, "When the Harvest Days Are Over," is reported to be even better than Mr. Twomey's other rural work, "The Postmaster's Daughter," which was produced at the Grand Opera House, New York, the week of June 11th, and received the unanimous praise of the press of that city—in fact it was the first piece of that nature to receive better notices than "Way Down East" and "York State Folks," two of the greatest rural successes of late years.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The Ontario and Quebec Provincial Committee is planning this summer to be present at eight camps, including the artillery camp at Petawawa, which will be carried on during the greater part of the summer. Sir Frederick Borden, K.C. M.G., Minister of Militia, said recently: "Gradually the Association tent has become the most popular part of camp life." As an institution of the militia, Canada was the first to discover its advantage.

A very prominent Belleville citizen writes from the Capital: "I suppose you can easily duplicate this in Belleville." We trust that the contagion will spread to our city and inspire some to perpetuate their family name in substantial gifts and start the ball rolling.

The Board of Directors met at 4 o'clock to-day. The business men meet at 7.15 and the seniors at 8.15. —Com.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

Facts Are Wanted.

The Toronto Globe in discussing the recent tragedy at Ottawa endeavored to attain the attitude of the Pharisee and hold out that while members of the present Liberal Government had sinned, still the Conservatives had also been guilty of gross wrong-doing. Here is what it says:

"What may have been true in the days of the Tory Government before 1896 is not true under the Liberal Government in 1907. The undenied and undisguised immorality of a half dozen Tory leaders then is no excuse or palliation for one Liberal leader's misconduct to-day. It is to the credit of the Liberals that they expect and demand a high standard of personal character in their leaders."

We would ask The Globe to name the half dozen Tory leaders who were guilty of undenied or undisguised immorality, says the Woodstock Express. That is an extravagant statement to make, and particularly so when the records of past history fail to produce facts that would serve as evidence to substantiate such assertions. If the Grit organ hopes to divert public observation from the recent scandals unearthed at Ottawa by building up a story of alleged immorality on the part of former Conservative leaders, then assuredly will it be defeated in its purpose. Even if Conservative leaders had erred that would be no excuse for the misconduct of Liberal leaders to-day. But, aside from the Canadian Pacific scandal, what record of the late Conservative Government can The Globe point to as being of an immoral nature? The Canadian public is too well read these days; they are too fully conversant with public affairs to accept such a statement of The Globe without a grain of salt.

Duty lies not in the unearthing of excuses. The Laurier Government has sinned, and sinned in a most wholesale fashion, but duty should be rather of the character of an atonement than an effort to hold position through a plea that is of the Pharisaical variety.

Wants 'em Jailed

Toronto, April 9.—Mr. Daniel Blea, game warden for the district of Parry Sound, paid a visit to Chief Game Warden Tinsley yesterday. He states that representatives of large American firms are swarming into the district and buying up furs, most of which are the skins of animals trapped out of season. These furs, he says, are then smuggled out of the country. Another complaint against these men is the way in which they cheat the Indians, from whom they purchase, giving little or nothing for the very best pelts. Otter and beaver, which are very plentiful in the district now, and upon which there is a close season until 1910, are also being bought up by these men. Instead of the Government imposing a fine for such an offence, Mr. Blea thinks that three months in jail for the first offence and six months for the second should be the punishment imposed.

The City Council.

(Concluded from page 7.)

Ald. Panter said he could not tell who had given authority to use the streets for the removal of the building. There had been many complaints about the streets being blocked.

The Mayor said he understood that some action would be taken in the matter.

The Clerk stated that there did not appear to be anything in the city's by-laws governing the case.

Several Aldermen — "Then it is time there was."

THE MUD PIES.

Ald. Starling wished to know when the mud piles on certain streets were going to be moved.

Ald. Panter — "They are being moved as fast as they can be."

INTRODUCTION OF BY-LAWS.

Ald. Marsh introduced six by-laws which he said it would be necessary to pass at this session.

A motion prevailed that the time of the Council be extended for two hours.

The following by-laws were then introduced:

A by-law to levy taxes for municipal purposes.

A by-law to levy taxes for Public School purposes.

A by-law to levy taxes for High School purposes.

A by-law to levy taxes for Separate School purposes.

A by-law to regulate collection of taxes for sprinkling of Bridge St.

A by-law to regulate the collection of taxes.

In regard to the latter by-law, the collection was fixed as follows:

Taxes paid on or before June 1st, 2 per cent. discount.

Taxes paid on or before July 15th, 1 per cent. discount.

Taxes paid on or before Sept. 1st, par.

After Sept. 1st, 5 per cent. added.

The by-laws to appoint a collector of taxes and to raise by debentures $3000 for additions to Grier Street school were left over until next meeting.

The by-laws were passed through their various stages and numbered from 1309 to 1314. Ald. Panter was chairman in committee of the whole on by-laws.

STREET REPAIRING.

The following streets were ordered to be repaired;

Mill street, from Dafoe street to the Canifton Road.

Railway street, from Mill street to Bettes street.

Emily street, from Railway street to the railway track.

Dundas street, from Front to Pinnacle streets.

Front street, from Pinnacle street to the wharf.

The approaches to the lower bridge are also to be repaired.

MOTIONS.

Moved by Ald. Panter, seconded by Ald. Thompson, that the sum of $25 be set aside for the purpose of sprinkling Front street from Dundas street to the Wharf.—Carried.

The Clerk was, on motion, authorized to prepare a by-law in reference to the removal of buildings from one portion of the city to another, and also to prohibit traction engines from going through Front street.

Council adjourned.

Oronhyatekha's Will

LEFT SEALED DIRECTIONS IN REGARD TO A PORTION OF HIS ESTATE.

Toronto, April 9.—The will of the late Dr. Oronhyatekha has been filed for probate by the executors, the Union Trust Company. The will was dated Oct. 24th, 1905, and disposes of an estate valued at $59,559.54 of which $53,093.54 is personality and $6,450 realty.

The personality includes $30,000 insurance in the Mutual Reserve of New York, $5,000 in the Provident Savings Life Insurance Co., $2,000 in the Temperance and General Life, $4,089 in jewelry and wearing apparel, $3,372 in farm stock and produce, $1,400 paid on a yacht in course of construction, $1,625 in mining, industrial and other stocks, and $5,448.54 in cash.

The realty is the "Pines," a farm of 150 acres of the Indian Communal land on the reservation at Deseronto, worth $4,500, a lot in Deseronto worth $1,200, and 10 acres in the Orange Vale Colony, Sacramento County, Cal., worth $750.

Dr. William Acland Heywood Oronhyatekha, son of the testator, receives the Log Cabin and grounds on Foresters' Island, with the right to sell it during his lifetime to the Supreme Court of the order. Should he not do so, at his death it reverts to the order for the benefit of the Foresters' Orphans' Home. The remainder of the island, save "The Wigwam," and its grounds, which is the property of his daughter, Mrs. Catherine Evangeline Oronhyatekha Johnston, is conveyed to the Foresters.

All the testator's debts are to be paid out of his insurance. His sister-in-law, Elizabeth Hill, his two brothers, Geo. P. Martin, Six Nations Reserve, Newport, and Simon Martin, Deseronto, and two sisters, Ann Powles, of Deseronto, and Margaret Flanders, of Greenlawn, Long Island, New York, receive $500 each.

The executors, the Union Trust Company, are given $12,000 to be disposed of as directed in a sealed letter.

The daughter, Catherine Evangeline, was not married at the time the will was made. Her father stipulated that she should receive the "Pines," and should she marry other than an Indian and thus disqualify herself from holding the property, it was to go to her brother, Acland. All the deceased's personal property at 209 Carlton street, where he lived, go to Miss Lillian Barker. The residence goes to his son and daughter in equal shares. On the death of his son or daughter the estate of the deceased shall go to the survivor.

A WOMAN TO BE PRETTY

Must Have Luxuriant and Glossy Hair, No Matter What Color.

The finest contour of a female face, the sweetest smile of a female mouth, loses something if the head is crowned with scant hair. Scant and falling hair, it is now known, is caused by a parasite that burrows into the scalp to the root of the hair, where it saps the vitality. The little white scales the germ throws up in burrowing are called dandruff. To cure dandruff permanently, then, and to stop falling hair, that germ must be killed. Newbro's Herpicide, an entirely new result of the chemical laboratory, destroys the dandruff germ and of course, stops the falling hair, and prevents baldness. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit Mich. Two sizes, 50c and $1. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

SPORTING NOTES.

Dr Lasker has won the chess championship match with Frank J. Marshall, scoring 8 wins and no losses. Seven games were drawn.

They're not so slow in England. The Grand National Steeplechase was at Liverpool run on a Friday, and on Saturday night it was all on the moving pictures in some London music halls.

L. G. Bennett, of Port Hope, who owned the former ice champion Looking Glass, when he was good, has a pacing mare called Hazel Wilkes, full sister of Muriel Wilkes, 2.16 1-2. She has no record but it is said she can step faster than her more noted sister.

George Powell, the Orillia horseman and one of the old guard, is soon to locate in Oshawa, where he and his son, George J., will open up a public training stable. The Oshawa track is a new one, just built last year, but is complete in every way. It is the intention of the horsemen there to give a race meeting this summer and in case they do, it is almost sure to be a success, for there are a number of real good sportsmen in that growing town.

Trying to Obey New Act

Toronto, April 8. — The Canadian Pacific Railway Freight and Traffic Department made an effort on Sunday to obey the new Lord's Day Act, only moving perishable goods.

In the past the railway authorities have utilized Sunday to clean up their freight business of the week, so that they might get a fresh start on Monday. In their efforts to obey the law yesterday the officials have blocked traffic and it will take them some time to pull up. On Sunday only four trains left Toronto Junction, while only one arrived here. The usual number in and out of this point would be about 25.

The change is not very acceptable to the men who are compelled to lay over Sunday in Havelock in east, London in the west, and Orangeville or Owen Sound in the north.

The Grand Trunk Railway ran their usual number of Sunday trains.

EUREKA!

Yes, I Have Found It at Last.

Found what? Why that Chamberlain's Salve cures eczema and all manner of itching of the skin. I have been afflicted for many years with skin disease. I had to get up three or four times every night and wash with cold water to allay the terrible itching, but since using this salve in December, 1905, the itching has stopped and has not troubled me.—ELDER JOHN T. WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS LYDIA GOULD WELD.

A Boston Girl Will Very Likely Plan Our Biggest Battleship.

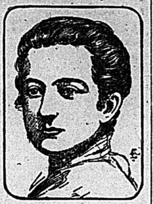
There is one girl who may look the part of a secretary for some home for stray cats, but who is building battleships.

She is Miss Lydia Gould Weld, of a famous and wealthy old New England family. She is employed by the Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Construction company.

When just budding into womanhood Miss Weld concluded to be of some use in the world. A little story is told concerning Miss Weld and Mrs. Lucia Ames Mead, sometimes termed "a temporal vicegerent of the Prince of Peace." Miss Weld had announced her intention of learning to build battleships. Mrs. Mead was horrified.

"My dear Miss Weld," declaimed Mrs. Mead, "one battleship costs as much as an entire university. One is educational, and the other is totally destructive. I am astounded."

"My dear Mrs. Mead," responded the girl, "your mathematics are correct, but I question your logic. Frequently there are occasions in the onward march of civilization when one good battleship properly handled is worth more to God and humanity than forty average universities."



MISS LYDIA GOULD WELD.

So Miss Weld fitted for technology and matriculated. Donning her leather apron, baring her well bred arms, greasing, oiling and blackening her pretty fingers, she worked at the bench, the forge, the lathe, the anvil and at her books. After three years of savage plugging at naval architecture Miss Weld graduated at the head of her class.

Miss Weld one day amazed the millionaire owner of a big steam yacht by running the pilot house out and the engine room in on a cruise in a heavy sea.

President Orcutt of the big Newport News company is very proud of his fair employee, who helps him build some of the biggest battleships.

The Wife's Allowance.

Should the married woman have an allowance?

Well, rather.

The husband who will make his wife run to him before he will give her $5 ought to be sent to the rock pile.

Said one man:

"When my wife wants her pet terrier to bark she gives him candy. I train her the same way."

It is the old harem idea brought down to date.

Many a man will write out checks to pay a $100 bill and not give the matter a thought, but watch him grunt when his wife asks him for a little $5 piece.

The really independent woman nowadays is not the wife of the prosperous merchant nor the petted daughter of the real estate man—no, indeed. The woman who can afford to buy two—two—well—er—lemonades and not have to give an account for the item is the woman who is out in the world earning her own living. Then men growl because the girls nowadays want to get away from home to earn a living.

And every once in awhile some fellow rises up before the world to have his say about woman's little evasive ways. Who teaches her to do this if not the man who trains her to go on her pretty knees every time she wants to have two bits of her own?

"What do you want money for? Isn't my credit good?" asks her lord and master pompously.

How would he like to be compelled to charge every ten cent cigar and the drinks for himself and the other fellow?

On allowance? Well—just ask any married woman.

No man who has the least respect for himself or his wife will force her to beg for money or even humiliate her by compelling her to ask for it.

Pony up, Mr. Husband. Treat her as you would like to be treated.

Cultivate Good Manners.

Good manners must not be mistaken for "mannerisms," which should ever be avoided. The former spring from a constant regard and thought for the feelings of others, from habitual self denial, from a love of gentleness and peace, while the latter is merely affectation.

There can be no true politeness where there is no consideration for others. Good manners are shown in small deeds rather than the big actions of life, in the everyday intercourse rather than at occasional parties.

There is no woman so respected, so sought after and so admired as the woman whose easy, gracious manners put every one at ease—the woman who never forgets what is due to others rather than to herself, who is always ready to help with voice and deed. To such a one doors open quietly; employers recognize her worth and reward her by quick advancement; while those who serve under and with her forget their churlishness or bad temper in her pleasant smile and gracious bearing.

It has been said that "money is a key to open every door," but there are occasions when gold has no avail and when manners alone are able to effect an entrance. True politeness cannot be too early taught, and it is best taught by example rather than precept. If the housewife and mother possesses that great virtue, servants, children and all those who come under her sway will soon fall into the same way of speaking and acting.—Philadelphia Ledger.

When Buying Gloves.

"In selecting a pair of gloves," said a glove saleswoman, "the best plan is to test the kid by stretching it. Take the side seams between the thumbs and fingers and pull. If the kid is soft and pliable, the pores small, even and not specially noticeable and the glove immediately takes on its original shape it gives evidence of not only being elastic and therefore full of new life, but of being of a fairly good quality. The heavy walking gloves can be tried in the same way, but as sure a test as any is in smelling them, and if there is a rather fragrant odor like that of Russian leather they, too, should be all right. The stitching in the seams should all be carefully examined to see that it is perfect and that there are none sewed so close to the edges that they will tear out. If well made, they should have a small gore between each of the fingers."

The Girl With Thin Arms.

A private pointer for the long, slender armed girl:

Don't fall into the snare of dressing your bony elbows with what the fashion books call "softening frills of lace."

Don't you believe it.

That frill will fall over the very curve you wish to display and fall away from the hollow you wish to hide.

Fix the bottom of your elbow sleeves with a close band of black or dark colored ribbon. Let it be quite snug, so that what little flesh there is there will swell out impressively.

The plain turn back elbow cuff gives the same effect, and there is bound to be some taper to your arm if the outlines are clearly defined.

Try it and see.

How to Make Starch.

To make boiled starch, allow one tablespoonful of starch to two tablespoonfuls of cold water, then add half a teaspoonful of borax and a small piece of wax candle. This keeps the iron from sticking. Pour on boiling water, stirring carefully all the time until these ingredients are well mixed and creamy looking and the starch is cooked. It should then be strained through a piece of muslin and the basin be covered with a plate to prevent a skin forming. If the starch is too thick, it may be diluted with cold water, and this should be added as soon as possible after the starch has been made.

Three Things to Beware.

A writer in Good Housekeeping says: "Beware," said my doctor, "of three things—beef which is so rare as to be actually raw, which may be the breeder of tapeworms; old potatoes from which the sprouts have not been properly extracted, which contain a poison which may cause illness, and any green salad vegetable, such as lettuce, cabbage, celery, chicory or cress, unless you know it has been most scrupulously cleaned. In the stems and under the curled up leaves are frequently to be found germs, tiny worms or the eggs of insects, that cause trouble if they get into the human stomach."

How to Black a Stove.

Wash off all the grease spots with soapsuds, and if there are any rough, rusty places or spots where something has burnt on the stove rub with a piece of coarse sandpaper. Mix the blacklead to the consistency of cream with vinegar or water. Apply this to the stove when cool, and when nearly dry rub it with a stiff brush until it shines. If stoves are blackleaded while they are hot, the blacking burns on and will never take a really good polish.

Quenelles With Spinach.

Make a force meat of two pounds of veal, season with mace, salt and pepper, add one-quarter pint of cream, mix well and poach in clear soup. Drop a soupspoonful at a time in the boiling soup, take out and keep hot. Have ready some well chopped and seasoned spinach, pile in the center of the dish and place the quenelles around. This makes a very nice and dainty entree.

Mildew can be removed from linen by a preparation of soft soap, powdered starch and salt, used in equal proportions, and to which the juice of a lemon has been added. Paint both sides of the linen with this and put linen out in the air until stain is removed.

A good formula for eye wash is fifteen drops of spirits of camphor, one teaspoonful of boric acid and two-thirds of a cup of boiling water. It is perfectly harmless.

Gutta percha clotheslines are much stronger and last longer than cord. They are not affected by the wet and can be kept absolutely clean with a damp cloth.

An' the daisies an' the violets are carpet for your feet!
An' it's fish, fish, fish,
An' the line a-goin' "swish!"
An' it's then I'm free and happy
An' have my will an' wish!

Put me on a river bank—mile or two

Electric power from sunlight appears more wonderful than harnessing the streams or wind. Yet we know something of the vast heat of the sun. Hitching the sun to run electric motors for furnishing light and power for our homes and factories is the very latest achievement of the modern work of harnessing the elements to do man's work; and one square yard of sunshine may represent on the average one-horse power.

Every year from 800 to 1,200 couples go to England from the continent, mostly from Germany, to be married. To comply with the conditions of the English law the bride usually goes over first, stays one night in a hotel, and gives notice of the marriage on the following day. Then the man arrives and the ceremony takes place. It is generally by license, as otherwise both would have to stay in England for four weeks.

What are the chemical parts of which a human being is composed? This is one of those curious questions that need careful going into, but a well known scientist recently announced that the material for a man weighing 150 pounds can be found in the whites and yolks of 1200 hens' eggs. Reduced to a fluid, the average man would yield 98 cubic metres of illuminating gas and hydrogen enough to fill a balloon capable of lifting 155 pounds. The normal human body has in it the iron needed to make seven large nails, the fat of 14 pounds of candles, the carbon for 64 gross of crayons, and phosphorus enough for 820,000 matches. The following story illustrative of the worship of the uniform is told by Tales: Prior to the last solar eclipse the colonel of a German regiment of infantry sent for his sergeant and observed: "There will be an eclipse of the sun to-morrow. The regiment will meet on the parade grounds in undress uniform. I will come and explain the eclipse before drill. If the day is cloudy the men will meet in the drill shed as usual." Whereupon the sergeant drew up the following order of the day: "To-morrow morning, by order of the colonel, there will be an eclipse of the sun. The regiment will assemble on the parade grounds, when the colonel will come down and superintend the eclipse in person. If the sky is cloudy the eclipse will take place in the drill shed."

A Fisherman's Fortune.

London, April 9.—A fisherman named Forbes has sailed for Canada to take possession of a steam yacht and a substantial sum of money recently left him by a Canadian magnate whose life he saved at great personal risk.

LOOSER IN MORALS.

Bishop of London So Describes Married Men.

"Taking them all round, married men are much looser in their morals than single men." This affirmation by the Bishop of London, England, quite startled his hearers at a meeting of the Council for Promoting Public Morality. Those present were pleased, however, to learn, on the Bishop's authority, that London is becoming more moral, thanks to the efforts of the police. There is still, however, much to be done. The Bishop said he would never rest content until the open sale in shops of things to make sin easy was suppressed.

Underground London.

Nearly 500 miles of sewers are situated beneath the feet of London's population, and this includes only the large sewers, several of them so large that a number of boats could float down them abreast. Some idea of the enormous cost of draining London may be gathered from the fact that the drainage works and machinery alone cost £8,000,000 sterling.

The three main sewers in London run from Fleet street to Hampstead, from Blackfriars to Abbey Mills, and from Harrow to Old Ford. Connected with these are a multitude of smaller sewers, measuring about twelve feet in diameter, which makes London one of the best-drained cities in the world.

A thousand men are employed all the year round, not even excepting Sundays, in keeping London properly drained, and the stupendous total of 1,000,000,000 tons of sewage is chemically treated every twelve months and taken away in sludge vessels to the North Sea.

At Barking, where the sludge is dealt with, there are fourteen sewers measuring thirty feet across; that is to say, any one of them would be wide enough for a small tugboat to pass down. Here the sludge, after being chemically treated, has to go through enormous iron cages, resembling gigantic colanders, which keep back solid objects, such as pieces of wood, old boots, and so forth, whilst not infrequently valuable articles of jewelery are found wedged between the bars of a cage.

The King En Route.

In the early part of the year King Edward almost always takes a short trip abroad, and the following few points about His Majesty's mode of traveling will not be out of place.

Frequently, when traveling incognito, he favors the Dover and Calais route, and on his arrival at the Gare Maritime of the latter town, partakes of a light luncheon, which invariably consists of clear soup, two poached eggs on toast, a wing of cold chicken, and a plentiful supply of fresh fruit. His Majesty rarely takes cheese, and liqueurs even more seldom.

His luncheon over, King Edward orders a huge bundle of newspapers and periodicals to be brought to his carriage, and these, together with a supply of cigars, keep him occupied until his arrival in the French capital. His Majesty is an inveterate newspaper reader.

It is an interesting and perfectly true fact that for early morning and unofficial enjoyment, the King far prefers a pipe to cigars or cigarettes.

London's Huge Appetite.

The secretary of the Public Health Committee says the total amount of foodstuffs that reach London yearly is between 2,500,000 and 3,000,000 tons, of which rather more than two-thirds arrives by water and less than one-third by rail. Three-fifths of the whole quantity is consumed by the Londoners, the remainder merely passing through in the course of transit elsewhere.

The shipments include 1,000,000 tons of meat, fish, milk, butter, eggs, lard, etc.; 500,000 tons of fruit and vegetables, including sugar and preserved fruits, and 1,400,000 tons of grain and flour. It is pointed out in the committee's report that the system of inspection is inefficient and that oleomargarine is largely sold as butter.

SELECTIONS

MIDDIES IN THE MAKING.

Our Naval Cadets Learn to Splice Ropes, Furl Sails, Etc.

It is probably not generally known how the United States government trains the youth upon whose shoulders will rest the responsibility of maintaining the high standard of the navy. His apprenticeship, according to Leslie's Weekly, is not unlike that of any other young man learning a trade, the fundamental principle being the proper kind of tools and when and how to use them.

A midshipman's tools, so to speak, are ships, thus rendering a thorough knowledge of seamanship an essential part of the training. This begins with lessons in splicing hemp and wire rope, after which the young men are given practice in handling sails on the indoor mast in the seamanship building, which is an exact counterpart of the mizzenmast of the training ship Severn and is seventy-two feet in height.

The midshipmen go aloft, furl, reef and set sails, etc.—in fact, go through the entire seamanship drill. A net is spread at the foot of the mast for protection, as a fall on the concrete floor would be far more serious than on the deck of a ship. Accidents, however, are infrequent.

Drills on the Severn begin early in the spring and continue throughout the cruise, which lasts from June until September. The midshipman thus becomes accustomed to ship life. The work is hard and the discipline severe during these drills. There is little tendency to shirk duty, and the future admirals do everything on shipboard, on deck and aloft, even to clearing up the deck and stowing away the ropes.

From a picturesque point of view seamanship practice on the Severn surpasses all other similar exercises. It seems that on shipboard the sense of the reality of the thing is ever present, and one accustomed to witnessing these drills notices that on the deck of the old Severn the middies are more active, more in earnest, and the manner in which they climb and swing around the rigging does credit to an old sailor.

Each man starts in with a practical seaman's duties and as he continues his course is advanced to the duties of the petty officers and later to those of the junior commissioned officers.

Our Bigness.

Bigness is said to be a quality which appeals especially to Americans. However that may be, a purely scientific interest justifies the spreading of information contained in a recent bulletin of the United States geological survey about the size of the United States. The area of the United States proper, exclusive of Alaska, island dependencies and the Panama strip, is given as 3,026,789 square miles. The absence hitherto of an official standard resulted in a discrepancy between the computations of the census bureau and the general land office. A conference was called between these departments and the geological survey, and the bulletin of the geological survey is the result.—Youth's Companion.

The Table Top Cold.

"You have, madam," said the physician, "what I call a table top cold."

"What is a table top cold?" the lady asked.

"It is a cold brought on by marble tops in the late fall and winter. You ladies always wear short sleeves, and you always lean your bare arms on the icy surface of marble tables. This contact sends a chill all through you—a chill that you disregard. But in the morning you awake with a heavy cold.

"Marble table tops in the winter should be covered with a cloth if they are going to be leaned on. Then the table top cold would disappear."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Real Estate In Korea.

One of the most astonishing regulations has been made regarding the transfer of real estate in Korea. No one is to be allowed to sell or buy real estate except by permission of the governor. This is apparently a move on the part of the Japanese to prevent the selling of any land in Korea except to people that they approve, for the governors are, of course, under the Japanese advisers. It makes no difference that foreigners have as good a right to buy land as the Japanese. The matter will have to be tested in the courts before the powers will allow their citizens to be curtailed in their privileges in the peninsula.—Korea News.

A Plague of Malaria.

The excessive prevalence of malaria in Greece is engaging the attention of English physicists. It is said to be checking the development of rural life and is a very serious thing for the nation. Out of a population of 2,500,000 there were 250,000 cases of malaria annually, and the deaths were about 1,760. Last year the number of cases increased to 960,000 and the deaths to 5,916. Professor Savas of the University of Athens and physician to King George is initiating a movement to deal with the plague.

A Mechanical Man.

Frederick Ireland, a German inventor, has produced a mechanical man, made of wheels and springs, which enable it to walk, write and ride a bicycle. A writer in L'Illustration (Paris) gives a description of the remarkable invention and says "all that it lacks is speech and hearing." The inventor has named his androide enigmarelle.

ndre with his fingers on his sword- returned her studied gaze. He ld make out that her hair under her od was fair; her voice, her step, re those of a girl, and what he could of her figure shrouded in its long ak bid well to be shapely. Yes, she s young, this woman, but a pest on t mask!

"You are not the officer I expected," remarked at last.

'He was wounded; he could not ne, so they sent me in his place," dre answered at once.

"I understand," she replied with a iet nod—"but they said two would be nt."

"My companion is outside guarding e horses." Whereupon she lifted the ntern and inspected him closely. An- e, ready for anything, stood quite ll. "If you doubt my word," he added relessly, "I will take you to him w."

"No," she answered, replacing the ntern on the table, "your word is ough; the word of an English offi- r," and she turned to cross the kit- en.

Andre's face was calmness itself, but s blood was tingling with fear, curios- y, revenge. Never in his adventurous e had he been so thrilled as at this ld-blooded traitress in a mask. But, astered as he was by an overpower- g desire to probe her secret to the ttom, he was also carefully studying ery nook and cranny. There was ly one way out of the room—by the or, which was half-open. He carefully oved so that he might face it, and if swift rush were necessary not have e table between him and the road to cape.

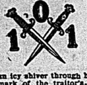
"There are the papers," she said in r passionless tones. She had taken em from a cupboard in the wall.

He betrayed no eagerness, but his ngers trembled and his heart thump- d wildly as he looked them through y the dim light of the lantern, one ye all the time watching the masked irl, who quietly kneeled down by the re with her back to him and began to low on the embers with a bellows.

"They are what you want, are they ot?" she remarked over her shoul- er.

"I believe so," he answered as care- essly.

Yes, the vivandiere was right. The aper was a complete plan of the rench encampment, marking accur- tely the positions of each battalion nd each battery, and in the corner as drawn in blood a curious sign— wo crossed daggers with 101 inserted n the gaps:



t sent an icy shiver through him, this countermark of the traitor's success and good faith. God! they were betrayed indeed to those damned Austrian hounds and English dogs. But he, Andre de Nerac, had saved the King and the army of France!

"I thank you," he said, folding the paper up and putting it deliberately within his cloak.

"I do not desire your thanks," she replied as she blew away some ashes.

Andre stared in dumb bewilderment at her on her knees there in front of the fire. Should he run her through at once or strangle her for an execrable traitress? The woman betrayed neither fear nor interest. She seemed to have forgotten his presence.

"Are you 'No. 101'?" he asked at last.

"Oh, no." She was laughing softly. "I am only her—agent."

"Then the trait—then she is a woman?"

"Yes." She stood up and shook some cinders from her cloak. "Yes, she is a woman." And Andre knew she was lying. The fingers on his sword relaxed. Kill her he could not—yet. Depart he could not—yet. For he was in the grip of a weird fascination—of a secret whose mystery numbed his senses.

"It is marvellous," he muttered, "but the English army thanks 'No. 101' and you."

"Yes," she answered indifferently, "it is marvellous, but the English army is nothing to her nor to me. For myself I detest the English officers, but like you, sir, I simply do as I am bid. Give me the gold and I will wish you good-night."

The gold; English gold! Pest on it! The vivandiere and he had thought of everything but that. The perspiration swelled on to his forehead. He grasped his sword and took a step towards the doorway.

"I was given no gold," he said brusquely and waited with drawn breath.

"No?" She shrugged her shoulders and astonished him by kneeling down and taking up the bellows. "It is like English officers to buy secrets and not pay for them."

"You are unjust to the English," he protested. Ah! that surely was a stroke of genius.

"I know them, the English," she said without looking round.

Dead silence broken only by the wheezy puffs of the bellows. Pity, fear, astonishment, and a burning curiosity wrestled in Andre's breast. Was this masked girl flesh and blood or a devil in human form?

"Do you want the papers back?" he demanded.

"They are not mine to ask. I was told to give them to you; keep them."

The icy contempt in her voice stung him. If it had not been for France he would have flung them at her and then strangled her on the spot.

"Before I wish you good-night," he said after a pause, "will you do me the honor to remove your mask?"

"Why?" She wheeled slowly, still on her knees.

"Why does even an English officer ask a woman to do such a thing?"

She rose and came close to him. "I will take off my mask with pleasure," she said, "if you, sir, will do me the honor to take off your cloak and share my supper."

Andre could not check a start. Had she guessed the truth or was this diabolical coquetry?

"Permit me," she said softly, and before he could move a finger she had wrenched his cloak asunder. "Ah!" she cried, "I thought so. A hero in the uniform of a Chevau-leger de la Garde with a naked sword and I—a woman—defenceless, alone. You an English officer—you—you!"

She had slipped from his side. The table with the smoking lantern was between them.

"Monsieur le Vicomte de Nerac," she whispered, "any woman can make a fool of you."

Andre slammed the door behind him. "Traitress," he swore. "Your last hour has come."

She gazed at him calmly. "Listen," she said, "listen! Monsieur Spy. To-morrow you will be shot by the English—and the papers"—she laughed—"will still help towards the ruin of France."

Andre halted sharply. What was that outside? Horse hoofs in the clearing—two horses! The English officers were here and he was trapped, trapped, as God lived, by a woman who flouted his uniform and himself.

"You will not escape," he said with set teeth, "and I have the papers."

"Pooh!" she flicked her cloak in his face.

A loud rapping on the outer door.

"Enter," she called. "Enter, Captain Statham, the door is not bolted."

Captain Statham! They had met again and not in the salon of a woman of pleasure. Andre laughed aloud.

The latch was being lifted. It was now or never. Twisting his cloak round his left arm as the Spaniard does in a duel with knives, in a trice Andre, sword in hand, was over the table with the spring of a cat. When he had punished the traitress he would deal with Captain Statham. But the woman was too quick for him. The legs of the table met him in the stomach and sent him staggering back. Through the sickening pain he could hear her soft laugh of victorious contempt. A crash. She had hurled the lamp to the floor and was past him, missing his sword point by just half an inch. The blade quivered in the woodwork. Half-mad, he grabbed at her mask—it came off—but she was gone.

"We shall meet again," she called, "your business and mine I hope does not end here." A spurt of flame shot into his eyes. The oil of the exploded lamp had set the dry, rotten timbers ablaze and the kitchen was alight. Quick as thought Andre hurled himself after the girl. She had doubled to the right—there was another door as he guessed leading to the back—she was through it and he after her, snatching at her figure in the pitchy darkness. For two seconds he held her cloak—she twisted out of it—and he fell back with a curse against the wall. She had escaped.

And now the flame from the kitchen revealed Captain Statham standing in the front doorway, stupefied, his eyes glaring like a madman's. With a cry he flung himself on Andre. A cold pain in his left arm—Andre was stabbed—but this was no moment for vengeance, only for flight, for on his escape hung the safety and honor of France. He rushed into the open at the back. To find his horse—to find his horse!

"I have seen her," he heard Statham cry as he whipped round the cabin. It would be a race across the clearing now, for Statham's companion must be waiting on the other side, and in the roar of flame it would be as light as day in this grisly thicket. What if his horse were not there? Two to one then. Bah! should he turn to meet them as it was? No, the papers—the papers first—vengeance would follow later.

For one second Andre crouched behind the hut. Ah! there was his horse—there was the other officer twenty paces off. Could he do it? He must.

"Jesu!" came the words in the voice of George Onslow as Andre doubled round the corner, "it is the Vicomte, Statham; we are betrayed. This way for God's sake—ha!"

Crack went Onslow's pistol. Andre had leaped across the clearing. He had missed, but the flash almost singed Andre's hair.

One slash of his sword and his horse was free.

"Good-night, gentlemen," he shouted in victorious bravado, "we shall meet to-morrow. Mes saluts et au revoir!"

In went the spurs and his maddened horse was bursting through the wood. Another pistol-shot and they were after him, but he had a good start and he knew that no beast alive could overhaul the beautiful blood mare he had bought in England. A roar of flame behind him—the crack of the wood—two pistol bullets singing through the swirling raw air—a ghastly vision of that half-naked man and woman in the horror of the clotted grass, his horse's hoofs stamping out the dead woman's face as she lay where he had left her—a ride as of devil-tormented goblins through the pains of hell—that was Andre's recollection of his return until he dropped fainting within his own lines.

Two flickering candles danced in his eyes as he opened them.

"Bravo!" whispered a caressing voice. "Bravo!"

He was lying in a long chair and the little vivandiere was kneeling beside him.

"Bravo!" she reapted, "and now drink—drink!" She forced brandy, glorious and hot, down his throat.

"Ah!" He sat up. The horror was slowly fading away, though he could still see floating between her face and his that black cabin roaring red, and that outcast woman's face crushed into pulp beneath the iron of his horse's shoe. "The papers—the plans," he muttered.

"They are here," she waved them softly, they were stained with blood. "Yes, we are saved—France and the army and the King are saved and you—you have saved us."

Andre smiled, letting his head drop. He was supremely happy. Denise would hear of this—Denise—ah!

"Come, my friend," the vivandiere whispered, "look at yourself. It is too droll."

He took the mirror from her and laughed—laughed loud and long. Here was, indeed, a picture of a ruffian with a uniform torn and singed, the paint smeared over his cheeks, one sleeve cut away, and his left arm bandaged! Pah! that was where Statham had stabbed him. He would pay for it to-morrow—no, to-day—to-day.

"I found the papers when you fainted," said the vivandiere. "I wept when I found them, for I was sick with fear that you had failed, and now, mon ami, I take them to Monseigneur le Marechal."

"Yes, Mademoiselle, they are yours."

Then Andre told his story while she listened eagerly. But he did not tell her all, for instinctively he felt some things he had discovered that night had better be locked as a secret in his own heart until he knew more.

"I do not think that was 'No. 101,'" she remarked thoughtfully. "But it is a pity you did not see her face. Some day hereafter it might be useful to be able to recognize that woman."

"Perhaps so," he assented, and he added to himself, "I shall see it before I die. It is written in the stars." For the curious thought haunted his mind that if he had seen that woman's face he would never have returned. Yet Captain Statham had seen it; suddenly his cry, his look in that narrow passage, rose before him. Was it what he had seen which had shot such awful fear and horror into his eyes? Could it be that the girl in the mask was—ah! he must wait before the question was answered. And the answer would certainly come. That too was written in the stars.

"And now sleep, Vicomte," his companion whispered. "In four hours the dawn will be here. A battle is at hand, and once more you must fight for the fair eyes of your mistress, for the honor of France and the King."

She half-carried him to the bed. The flame-red pictures of the night kept shooting through a blackness of pain in his eyes. How tired and weak he was. From far away a trumpet note rang, a drum throbbed, a snatch of revelling song bubbled mockingly up:

"Et son amour ridicule,
A fait rire tout Paris, ris ris."

"I made a promise," dropped the soothing words in his ear, "but Monsieur le Vicomte must never betray the secret to Monseigneur and the King. Yet remember, I beg, there is nothing—nothing—I will not do for you if I can serve you, for I am grateful—more grateful than a woman can say." A cushion was slipped under his neck. Two soft arms enfolded him for a brief second. "The lips, Vicomte," came the caressing chant—"the lips that a king has kissed salute you." His head rested on her breast. "Adieu!" She had vanished and his numbed senses ebbed away into an enchanted oblivion. The Loire floated at his feet, the autumn trees rustled a perfect pleasance and peace, and Denise standing beneath the carved mantelpiece with "Dieu Le Vengeur" in a scroll of gold above her had him in her forgiving arms.

Ha! What was that? Hoarse voices and cries, the rush of feet, of horses, of wagons, and of guns, the rattle of the drums and the challenge of trumpets. Andre leaped up, flung the window wide open. The dawn was here, and hark, hark! Those are the silver trumpets of the Chevau-legers de la Garde de la Maison du Roi. The trumpets of the Guard calling as they called at Steinkirk. To horse! to horse!

And what is that away yonder through the pearly mist of the morning out there in the enclosures and coppices dripping in the dew of May? Answering calls and the feverish thud of drums. They are coming—the white-coated Austrian hounds and the red-coated English dogs! They are coming! To horse! to horse! For to-day we must fight for the honor of France—fight that we may have the play promised to the army by the actresses of the Theatre Francais when Monseigneur the Marechal de Saxe has won yet another victory for His Majesty, Well Beloved. Ah, they shall see, those English dogs, what lies in the hearts and swords of the nobles of the Guard. Fontenoy! Neither they nor we will ever forget Fontenoy.

CHAPTER X.

The dull boom of a gun away on the right greeted Andre as he flung himself into the saddle, and the trumpets were echoing all along the line from the citadel of Anthoin over the slopes on which the brigaded army lay right up to the forest of Barry which covered the French left. A plumed officer galloped up to him. It was the Chevalier de St. Amant.

"The Dutch and the Austrians," he cried, "are concentrating opposite us on our right, but the centre of the attack will be"—he waved his sword northwards of Fontenoy—"the English form the enemy's right flank."

"And the Maison du Roi?"

"Will make the third line of the cavalry behind the carbineers and the foot guards yonder. But you are wounded, Vicomte?"

"A scratch—nothing at all," Andre replied brusquely.

The Chevalier looked at him, smiled, and galloped away.

It was past seven o'clock. Andre paused to cast a hasty eye out towards Maubray and Veyon, whence the foe must come. Around him staff officers cantered this way and that; hoarse orders were being shouted, regiments were falling in, deploying, lining the entrenchments, one, two, three deep. Everywhere the strenuous confusion and fierce excitement of an army hurriedly preparing for battle. Over the plain hung a soft grey mist gently rolling up as the day grew, but dimly in the distance, past the enclosures and the coppices in the midst of which the wrecked hamlet of Bourgeon still smoked sullenly in the raw air, troops—cavalry mainly—were collecting. Yes, the enemy really meant business. It was to be an assault along the whole front and there was no time to waste.

With the Chevau-legers de la Garde Andre found St. Benoit.

"Where the devil have you been?" his friend demanded. "We looked for you everywhere last night. Jeannette and Gabrielle supped in my coach."

"Two assignations," Andre laughed. "Such fun, I can tell you."

"And you got that slit between the two, I suppose

"Yes, and a good deal more. Hullo! What's that?"

The guns from the citadel and the redoubts on the slopes had begun in real earnest, answered as yet feebly from the enemy's left. St. Benoit and Andre trotted forward to make the position out.

"Mark you there!" cried St. Benoit. "Those are English cavalry forming up and see—see! There come the red-coated blackguards behind 'em. By God! they're going to let us give 'em a taste of our quality."

"Do your imagine they will dare to march across the plain in the teeth of our artillery?" Andre asked.

"It looks like it," St. Benoit replied smiling. "And so much the better."

The pair watched eagerly. The rattle of muskets crackled up from the left—the skirmishers, the Pandours and Grassins are out, and every minute it is hotter and hotter work; the smoke drifts up, and through it they can catch glimpses of red-coated infantry falling in, company on company, battalion upon battalion, in the rear of the covering squadrons of horse. Ha! our guns up here have chimed in now, and already there are empty saddles in the dragoons so placidly arrayed amongst the lanes and enclosures, but those stolid islanders mind it as little as a fisher does flies on a July day. Down rolls the smoke, wafting in sullen clouds, shrouding the slope and the enclosures, only broken by fitful puffs of air or torn by red flashes and the dull plunge of the round shot. Yet this is a mere prelude up here, though on our right the engagement has really begun.

"Monseigneur, poor devil!" whispered St. Benoit, but what a spirit."

Yes, that is Monseigneur le Marechal de Saxe, carried in a wicker litter, for he cannot sit his horse. He is dying of dropsy is Monseigneur, but he will see for himself, and as he is carried along he sucks a leaden bullet to assuage his raging thirst. The fire of battle glows in those eyes which Adrienne Lecouvreur and so many women have adored, and it inspires every man on whom his glance falls, so full of confidence and calm is he as he issues his orders, serene, majestic, and watchful. No troops in the world can ever force this entrenched camp he is thinking, and before death takes him he will win another great victory for his master, King Louis. Northwards of Fontenoy is where he mostly prefers to stay, for this is the critical place where by a miracle the French position may be turned, and here he holds the Maison du Roi and his reserves in leash. Those English are such stubborn devils when they are in the stomach for a tussle at hand grips. We must be ready even for miracles.

An hour—another passed. The Chevalier emerges from the drifting smoke with welcome news.

"The Austrians and Dutch are retiring," he says. "Can you not hear their drums beating to re-form? Down there we have handled them so roughly that they have sought cover, huddled behind Bourgeon. Their horse is broken and tumbled up, and the plain is littered with their dead. They won't trouble us much more."

"It will be the same here, worse luck," St. Benoit grumbled. "Those cursed artillerymen are to have all the honors to-day. We shall not be wanted at all."

"Do not be too sure," Andre said quietly. And the Chevalier nodded in agreement before he spurred off to carry a message to the King, who with Monsieur le Dauphin is watching the fight near the Hermitage of Notre Dame des Bois.

Boom! boom! on our front at last. Those are the English field-pieces beginning to reply to the salute we have been lavishly doling out. They fire well, those English artillerymen, and their shots come plumping into the entrenchments and crashing into the forest. The men begin to drop in the first line.

"Look at that fool De Grammont," Andre muttered, pointing with his sword.

An officer on a white charger was galloping to and fro in front of his regiment of guards, encouraging them in this gallant madcap fashion to keep steady under the ever-increasing fire.

"By God! he's down," he exclaimed as he saw the white horse stumble and fall, struck by a six-pounder; and friendly arms are carrying his shattered rider dying to the rear.

"Poor De Grammont!" said St. Benoit, wiping away a tear, "never again will his hot-headed chivalry lead us into a devil's trap as at Dettingen."

And he was right. De Grammont, who had ruined a French army on the Maine, had fought his last fight that morning, for a cannon-ball had smashed his thigh.

"Drums! English drums!" Andre cried excitedly. "They are advancing—can't you hear 'em? We may be needed—thank God! we may be needed now."

Below and across the roar of the guns, through the dirty smoke blended with the last wisps of the pearly mist, throbs in a glorious challenge the solemn tuck of English drums and the marching call of English trumpets. They are coming on now. Can we not see the flutter of English colors and the flash of light on epaulet and sword?

"A noble sight that!" muttered St. Benoit with a catch in his throat.

"They are fit for gentlemen to cross swords with," said the generous Andre. "I hope they'll last till we can meet them as they deserve."

Through the smoke they could both make out how the cavalry had fallen to the rear and the infantry was calmly advancing across the plain in two long lines with the Hanoverians stepping out on their left. Aligned as on the parade ground, never halting, never hurrying, shoulder to shoulder, not a falter, not a wrinkle, the great red column in two long lines comes on to the music of its drums; to-day these English dogs will achieve the impossible if they can. But can they? Surely not. From Fontenoy shriek the cannons, from Eu roar our guns, taking them in flank and in front; there are gaps in the files—they close; a hideous rent—it is sealed up; like a great scarlet wave they roll on majestic in irresistible silence. Nothing can stop them, not all the guns in Europe—marching on, marching on, marching on unreasoning, dogged, straight into the throats of our artillery and the muzzles of our muskets, mad—mad—mad, but the madness that intoxicates the heart and ennobles the soul. Dutch and Austrians have twice faced this hellish fire and twice recoiled, but these English will come on; they said they would storm the entrenchments on the left, and get to them they will, for a promise is a promise, and they have English gentlemen to lead them.

For a time they are lost in the smoke and the roar and the gentle folds of the slope.

"They are broken," cried St. Benoit. "Well, they did their best, but it's a pity——"

"Broken! by God!" burst out Andre, "look there—they've done it—done it—and——"

A cry has risen from the French ranks, a cry of rage and dismay and surprise.

The smoke had suddenly lifted, cut asunder by the flashes of the guns, and it revealed a superb spectacle. Not a hundred yards from the entrenchments, right across our left front almost on the top of the slope, have suddenly emerged into sight the grim faces of those serried red lines. The English infantry are on us—actually on us! Hoarse commands, repeated, a quiver, they have halted, the drums still placidly beating, colors gently flapping, while the officers calmly redress their battalions.

A frenzied moment, for behind on the slope here it is our footmen's first real sight of them, and Swiss Guards, Gardes Francaises, the regiments of Courtin, Aubeterre, and of the King are hurried, dashed, into order. What are we waiting for? Keep cool for God's sake! We have got to fight for it now. This is going to be a serious affair.

And then a touch to stir the blood. An English officer has quietly stepped forward—it is my Lord Charles Hay. Politely he doffs his hat to the French lines and raises his flask as a man drinks a health at a banquet. "Gentlemen," he cries in French, "I hope you will wait for us to-day and will not swim the Scheldt as you swam the Maine at Dettingen." A dozen angry voices go up in bitter protest at the taunt, and here, in the third line, we Chevau-legers de la Garde grip our swords in ferocious wrath. My lord turns round. "Men of the King's Company," his voice rings out, "here," he points with his cane, and waves his hat, "here are the French Guards. You are going to beat them to-day," and at once rolls up in a tumultuous crescendo the thunder of an English cheer, drowning the orders of the French officers, quelling the tornado of the guns. Again and again it surges through the columns, that challenge as of blooded hounds on the quarry at bay.

"For what we are about to receive," Andre heard an English officer call out, waving towards the French muskets, "may the Lord make us truly thankful," and the cheer melts into a gay, grim laugh, cut short by a hideous volley, for the Swiss Guards have fired straight into the column at thirty paces distance. Down go red-coats by the dozen, but they remain unshaken. A minute to draw breath, and the turn

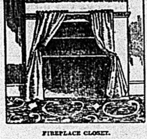
A FIREPLACE CLOSET.

It Makes a Convenient Place to Keep Hats and Shoes.

A fireplace that is not in use and that does not present as nice an appearance as the room surroundings demand may easily be improved by transforming it into a closet, as shown in the accompanying illustration. Remove all the interior fixtures and put in their place a set of small shelves. Then arrange a silk or tapestry curtain in front. Suspended from a brass rod it looks artistic and acts as a screen. The interior makes a very convenient shoe and hat closet.



FIREPLACE CLOSET.

One Sided Girl.

"She has pretty hair," the athletic girl admitted, "but it is never dressed evenly. The right side always looks much better than the left."

"That is because she never moves her bureau," said the wise girl. "Her room is so small that she can't haul things around, so month in and month out her looking glass stands in the same corner by the window, and month in and month out she dresses with her right side to the light and the left in shadow.

"Consequently one half of her face and hair is well groomed, while the other half gets only a lick and a promise. Any girl who would avoid looking one sided must dress one week with her right side to the window, the next week with her left side to the light."

Get Lightweight Hats.

Never buy a heavy hat if it is possible to get a light one. Insist that hats if made for you are made with the minimum of weight. Heavy hats cause headaches, gray and falling hair by impeding the circulation. A heavy hat worn only two or three hours a day is responsible for the feeling of heaviness that attacks so many and that disappears as soon as the cause is removed or within half an hour afterward. It is well to have hats differing in their point of pressure on the head so that in changing from one chapeau to another the head may be rested, in sections at least.

Home Sewing.

The tissue paper patterns and sewing machines have placed the possibilities of dainty underwear within the reach of every woman. Of course handwork is to be preferred, but very beautiful work may be accomplished by the machine, especially if the saving of time is an object or many pieces are to be made. Hemstitching may be done on some machines by placing several layers of paper between the pieces to be stitched, and then, after stitching, pulling the paper away.

THE CARE OF RUGS.

How to Sweep Large Ones and to Dust Small Ones.

Some housekeepers have concluded that they prefer two or three small rugs in a room to one large one which is too heavy for a woman to handle and beat. A great single rug covering the center of the room looks well, even if of no better quality than a good Smyrna. But smaller rugs must be of better quality to prove satisfactory. Provided there is a large rug down and no man willing or to be hired to beat it, by care it can be kept in fair condition for several weeks. Of course it must be swept where it is. Having dusted the movable ornaments and chairs and carried them to another room and dusted and covered other things that are conveniently moved, sweep the rug in the direction of the warp in short strokes and take up the dirt along the edges on the floor. Now sweep the rug again in the opposite direction after scattering over it bits of dampened newspaper pressed as dry as possible. Turn the edges up and brush out underneath for a few inches. Now sweep the bare floor with a dust brush, and after the dust has settled wipe the floor with a slightly damp cheesecloth and the rug with another cheesecloth dampened in water to which a few drops of ammonia have been added. In this way the rug will look bright and be quite free from dust.

Tea leaves when used to take up dust are apt to stain delicate colors. The above method of cleaning a rug may seem troublesome to one who would prefer to attack it with a broom and give it a vigorous digging, but it would be no cleaner by her treatment, and the walls and furniture would be loaded with dust, to say nothing of discomfort to the sweeper in breathing the dust.

If small rugs are used, do not allow them to be taken out and shaken by one end or, in fact, shaken at all, for this is the way to break them into rags, along the edges at least. Hang over a line and beat with a rattan, or, better yet, have the rugs laid on the grass and beaten on the wrong side first and then turned.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Ireland is called the Emerald Isle because of the richness of its verdure, the term being first used by Dr. William Drennan, the author of "Glendalloch" and other poems, published in the latter part of the eighteenth century.

AGRICULTURAL.

Resisting Potato Blight and Rot.

It is well known that some men are more liable to disease than others. In a general way potato growers realize that there is a like difference in their potatoes. This fact has attracted but little attention heretofore in America. In Europe, where the potato is an even more important crop, potato breeders have for a decade and more been making it a matter of chief effort to originate disease-resisting varieties. The writer was sent to Europe by the United States Department of Agriculture three summers ago to secure samples of these for trial in comparison with the most resistant American varieties. About one hundred of these varieties from Europe and fifty from America, have since been under trial by Prof. Stuart of the Vermont Experiment Station. The outcome has much of encouragement, as will be seen from the following figures showing the relative amount of rot in 1905—German and Holland varieties, 6.6 per cent.; English and Scotch varieties, 18.3 per cent.; French varieties 22.2 per cent.; American varieties, 32.6 per cent. The difference in blight of the foliage was almost as marked. Resistance of foliage to blight and of tubers to rot do not always go together, but they do in many cases. It is evident that American potato breeders have much to gain from the aims and methods of their European fellow-workers. Unfortunately, the German and Holland varieties so far obtained are of the coarse factory type of potato, hence not to be commended for American culture unless it be for starch and alcohol making. The British are ideal as to quality, but they have not yet become fully acclimatized and have not as yet given yields which serve to commend them. Perhaps they will later. While not advising these for general culture at present, it is evident that the European varieties may at least be good for breeding purposes, and the outcome of these trials should certainly encourage every potato specialist to seek to improve the disease-resistant qualities of the crop.

Disease resistance is dependent not only upon the special variety but upon the vigor of the seed. Northern grown seed is best; the Europeans prefer seed dug before fully mature and from soil not highly fertilized. Since varieties best suited to one locality and soil are not necessarily best for another, and since all varieties soon weaken or "run out," it follows that the best developments in potato culture demand that much more attention and encouragement than heretofore be given to local potato breeders, and to special seed potato growers, that they may be induced to supply for each locality the best of seed, specially suited to the needs of the region and of well-proved disease resisting varieties.—Prof. L. R. Jones, Vermont Experiment Station.

THE POULTRY YARD.

Notes for April.

The chirp of the young chick is heard in the land. Turkeys, ducks and geese are turning their attention to rearing their families. The die has been cast, so far as selecting the parent stock is concerned. Now all that is left is to make the most of one's selections by proper care and attention to the growing stock from now to fall.

Care from start to finish has more influence over the growing stock than many of us seem to realize. One day's neglect will set the growing chick back three; a week's neglect may cost more than a month's delay in growing them to market poultry; one or two week's neglect may defer the beginning of the egg-producing period from November till May.

We have seen March and April-hatched chicks sold to summer-resort hotels in July weighing over 3 pounds. We have also seen May-hatched chicks offered to country hotels in February that only weighed three pounds. Those sold to the summer-resort hotels in July were brought to the three-pound weight in three months, while those offered in February had not reached a greater weight in nine months. Those sold in July were plump and attractive, and brought a profitable price; those sold in February did not bring in return a value equal to the food they consumed. The first lot had been fed from start to finish for best results; the others had been carelessly fed and cared for, finally ending in a sale at less than the cost of production. These are living examples of the results that come to the two classes of poultry growers; the one would make a success of any kind of live stock growing, the other a failure.

The point to be considered in April is the producing of as many eggs as possible from the best selected laying hens from which to hatch and rear the laying pullets of next year. Avoid the possibility of hatching your next flock of pullets from stock that does not lay in winter. Winter egg-producers should produce pullets that will go and do likewise. Hens that fail to produce eggs in winter will probably produce pullets fashioned after their own kind.

Spring is the natural egg-producing period. All the hens and pullets should lay in April. Hens that do not lay in April should be marketed as soon as possible, if they belong to the kind that eat their heads off even in spring. Men and women who do not earn their living starve. Hens that do not earn their living rob the feed box of what should be distributed among the egg-producers.

It is never too early to rid the chicken coops, the hen houses and the runways of the possibility of insects, roup and other infections. If your growing chicks contracted gapes last season, be sure to remove the broods to an entirely different locality from where they were grown last season. Ground that was contaminated last year will grow a stronger crop of gapes worms this season than before. Remove the broods as far from this locality as possible, and plow and cultivate the ground they were grown on last season. In this way only you are likely to be rid of the pests. Diarrhoea is the most frequent destroyer of young chicks. Incubator chicks that come from the machine before the yolk of the egg has been entirely assimilated should be kept quite warm in the brooder and fed scarcely at all for 48 hours. The warmer they can be kept (not over 100 degrees), and the less they are fed for the first three days, the better. Such treatment is thought to finish the assimilation and the drying up of the yolk of the egg. If this yolk is not thoroughly assimilated, consumed and dried up before the chicks become chilled, they will be apt to die of diarrhoea. At one model poultry farm they have a beautiful set of inside shelf brooders where the young chicks can be kept very warm, dry and comfortable under the influence of sunshine for the first week, and a very small loss of the chicks resulted.

The second serious danger to the young chicks comes from cold, or over-heating in the brooder. Over-heating or too close confinement debilitates; too much chilling or cold debilitates; dampness debilitates. All these conditions cause an anaemic condition and makes the chicks very susceptible to indigestion and diarrhoea. The third danger comes through the presence of vermin, gapes and exposure to unwholesome conditions. The prevention and removal of all these is necessary for the best care.

Turkey growing is seriously held in check by vermin and the susceptibility of the poults to damp and cold. If the vitality of the young poults has not been undermined through the existence of blackhead in the parent stock, they will be much easier to grow than if born with the injurious influence of this disease in their systems. It is too late this season to remove the influence of the parent stock. This should have been attended to as advised in earlier issues of this paper. Lice can be obliterated, and exposure prevented. In this way many more poults will live to maturity. The poults should be fed early and often on very small particles of grain, a little animal food and milk curds, but too much hard-boiled egg, milk curd or millet seed will certainly destroy them. A teaspoonful of hard-boiled egg or the same amount of milk curd may be fed to a dozen young poults every other day. A mixture of one-fourth milk curds, one-fourth hard-boiled egg and one-half bread crumbs, thoroughly mixed together and fed one or two feeds per day to the young poults, is admissable, providing that their food ration for the day is composed of small particles of grain,—such as oatmeal, cracked wheat, corn grits and a little grit.

Young ducks can be successfully grown, provided they are fed a plentiful supply of dry-mixed mash food, with plenty of water to drink. Whole corn is not so good for ducks or geese. Dry-mixed mash food, composed of a little ground cornmeal, some grounds oats and more than one half of the entire mash of bran and middlings, with some short-cut green grass or clover mixed therein.

The gosling should be fed as above until ten days or two weeks old. Up to this time they can wander in a confined lot with the mother goose. After ten days or two weeks old, let them run at large with the parent stock, and almost entirely gain their living by grazing, provided there is plenty of grass for them to graze over, and water for them to drink and swim in.

THE HORSE.

Care of Stallions.

Mr. F. C. Warren, of Valley Junction, Wis., a practical horse breeder and excellent judge of horses, has contributed valuable information concerning the care of stallions to a bulletin on horse breeding recently issued by the University of Wisconsin, from which we clip the following:

"What I have learned by thirty years of experience relative to the care and management of stallions I am willing others should know, and should it prove of service to any one I shall feel well paid for the trouble I have taken. A few things that I consider of great importance are first, before using the stallion to mares let him get some age. No colt will breed as well as an old horse from eight to sixteen years old, provided the horse has been properly taken care of. Next, avoid all pampering, both as to care and feed. Feed and work him as you would any horse, not over-heating or over-exerting him.

"If not situated so you can work or drive him, have a good, roomy yard where he can run and exercise at his own free will. There are three things that should be remembered that are not conducive to fertility in the stallion or to soundness, strength or longevity in his progeny, viz., idleness, pampering with unhealthful food, and putting him to service when too young. If these matters are observed and you will limit your horse to the proper number of mares you will get good results.

"In regard to the number of mares a horse should serve there is a great difference of opinion, and there is also a great difference in horses as to their ability to serve without injury. A two-year-old colt that has been well kept will serve quite a few mares without any perceptible harm at the time, but in after years he will show it both in himself and his progeny. My advice would be not to let a colt serve till he is at least four years old, and five is better. Then allow him about twenty mares, and increase ten a year till you have got him to serve as high as fifty, never letting him go beyond this number, and never let him serve more than two a day.

In writing this article I have kept in mind this important matter—the good of the stallion and his progeny, and how to use him to get the best there is in him for the greatest number of years. I know stallioners frequently allow their horses to serve one hundred mares in a season, and even more, but no horse can do this and do justice to himself, his stock and his owner.

"As to feed, we would give him a liberal quantity of oats and bran, two parts oats and one of bran, twice a day, and once daily through the mare season a good feed of boiled barley with a little flaxseed cooked with it; mix with bran and feed hot at night. This with good timothy hay and sufficient grass to keep his bowels open should constitute his daily feed, with perhaps a few ears of corn occasionally.

"Remember this one important matter, keep your horse healthy and as near a natural condition as possible. To do this you must feed and exercise him properly. This must be continued all through the year.

"The man who keeps his horse right just through the mare season and then confines and keeps him in an unhealthy state all the rest of the year will find himself with an unprofitable stallion in a short time."

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

Cheese that has become dry can be pounded on a plate with a knife—or, better still, in a wooden bowl with the end of the rolling pin, and a small piece of butter. When mixed, it can be used, seasoned with pepper, for sandwiches, and the remainder, well pressed down, stored in a covered jar. It can also be grated and used for cheese dishes.

Kerosene oil may be used with very satisfactory results, in taking out wagon grease or tar spots if used while the grease is fresh; then wash out in cold, soft water, using no soap.

If threads draw hard and break easily when preparing a piece of fancy work a little white soap rubbed on the wrong side of the linens is an advantage. A lather applied with a brush is often convenient and does not harm the linen.

A good way to brighten a carpet is to put a half tumbler of spirits of turpentine in a basin of water, dip your broom in it and sweep over the carpet once or twice, and it will restore the color and brighten it wonderfully.

In cleansing soiled articles in gasoline it is best to use the gasoline hot. This is a secret of professional cleansers well worth knowing. The gasoline is easily and safely heated by placing the receptacle containing it in a larger one containing hot water. The gasoline will quickly become very hot. Let the soiled articles soak an hour, covering all with a thick cloth to prevent evaporation.

The removal of foreign bodies from the ear should always be left to the physician, and is a simple matter in skilled hands if crude and unavailing efforts have not preceded. Attempts to relieve itching of fullness in the ear by scratching with hard substances, as matches or the finger nail, are most urgently deprecated.

Cold water, a tablespoonful of ammonia and soap, will remove machine grease where other means would not answer on account of colors running, etc.

By rubbing nickel and silver ornaments with a woollen cloth saturated with spirits of ammonia they may be kept very bright with but little trouble.

To press a hem, plaits or a large plain surface take an old piece of cotton material (a pillow case would do) and, after placing the material to be pressed with the right side down, thoroughly wet the muslin and wring it out, place it smoothly over the material and iron until dry.

When cleaning paint use two pails of water and two sponges. In one pail dissolve some dry soap, and with this wash the paint thoroughly. Then rinse with the clean water in the other pail, and dry the paint by wringing the sponge out. This method does not injure the varnish.

If necessary to wash face while it is smarting with sunburn, do not use cold water, but water as hot as can be borne, which will relieve the inflammation.

Children eat, sleep and grow after taking Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea. Brings rosy cheeks, laughing eyes, good health and strength. A tonic for sickly children. 35 cents, Tea or Tablets.—D. M. Waters.

FURNACES IN ENGLAND.

John Bull Prefers to See a Blaze In Open Grate.

According to London papers, Englishmen are up in arms over a threatened invasion of what they regard as one of their inherent rights, the right to keep their houses uncomfortably cold. At a recent meeting of remonstrants resolutions were passed condemning a rumored attempt to supplant open fires with furnaces. The British husbands and fathers assembled agreed that home would be anything but attractive had it always an atmosphere reminiscent of the House of Commons, or, worst still, of the reading room of the British Museum.

There is reason to believe that the house that is improperly heated possesses a number of advantages over the house that is thoroughly heated, although it is impossible to persuade people on this side of the water that any change is desirable. It costs much less partly to heat a house—to heat the ends of two or three rooms—for one thing, and that is an important consideration, surely, when coal goes up whenever the temperature goes down. Again, given an armful of logs piled near an open fireplace, and almost anybody can keep a fire going, whereas it is a very different matter to descend to the cellar and fix a furnace. The trouble with most furnaces is that they are located in the cellar.

Then, too, if callers call at all at a house in which their teeth chatter they remain only long enough to "pay their respects"; they do not accept invitations to be seated and rock the hours away chatting about nothing in particular while the members of the family on whom they are calling are waiting for an opporunity to go to bed.

It isn't surprising that Englishmen are opposed to warm houses, but why they continue to cling to open fires is a mystery. The open fire is more or less ornamental, it is true, but it merely serves to accentuate the general chill and gloom which pervade the [illegible] English "living room."

Montreal Live Stock.

Montreal, April 8.—(Special.)—Cable advices from Liverpool and London on Canadian cattle were stronger and noted an advance in prices of 1-4c to 1-2c per pound, with sales at 12 1-2c, and Americans at 12 1-2c to 13c. Exports from St. John, N.B., and Portland last week were 863 cattle. At the Montreal Stock Yards' West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending April 6 were 3050 cattle, 113 sheep and lambs, 2450 hogs and 1935 calves, while the offerings this morning for local consumption were 1016 cattle, 75 sheep and lambs, 978 hogs, and 314 calves. A feature of the trade was the weaker feeling in the market for cattle, and prices compared with those of a week ago showed a decline of 1-4c per pound. A big snow storm lasting all morning prevented intending buyers in many instances from coming to the market. Cable advices from Liverpool on Saturday for Canadian cattle noted a further advance in prices, as compared with a week ago, but this fact had no influence on the local situation, as exporters were not disposed to operate any more freely than usual, and only a few loads were purchased at 5c to 5 1-4c per pound. Choice beeves sold at 5 1-4c to 5 1-2c; good, at 4 3-4c to 5c; fair, at 4 1-4c to 4 1-2c, and lower grades from 3c to 4c per pound. A stronger feeling developed in the local market for hogs this morning, and prices advanced 10c, due to keen competition between local dealers for supplies. Sales of selected lots were made at $7.40 to $7.50, weighed off cars. Supplies of sheep and lambs continue limited, and as the demand is very keen from butchers for this class of stock, prices are firmly maintained. Sheep sold at 4 1-2c to 5c, and yearling lambs at 6 1-2c to 7c per pound. A few spring lambs sold at $4 to $8 each. There was an active trade done in calves, of which the offerings were fairly large and sales at $2 to $8 each.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

East Buffalo, April 8.—Cattle—Receipts, 53,000 head; slow and 10c to 20c lower; stockers and feeders, 10c to 15c higher; prime steers, $5.60 to $5.90; shipping, $5 to $5.50; butchers', $4.40 to $5.25; heifers, $3.75 to $5.10; cows, $3 to $4.50; bulls, $3.25 to $4.00; stockers and feeders, $3.75 to $4.65; stock heifers, $2.75 to $3.50; fresh cows and springers, active and $2 higher, $20 to $52.

Hogs—Receipts, 17,00 head; active and 10c to 15c lower; heavy, mixed yorkers and pigs $7; roughs, $5.90 to $6.10; stags, $4.50 to $5.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 9200 head; active; sheep, steady; lambs, 30c higher; lambs, $5 to $9.25; yearlings, $7.75 to $8; wethers, $6.25 to $6.75; ewes, $4.75 to $6.25; sheep, mixed, $3 to $6.25.

Chicago Live Stock.

Chicago, April 8.—Cattle—Receipts, about 30,000; market mostly 10c lower; plain to best steers, $4.40 to $6.70; heifers, $2.75 to $5.25; cows, $3.50 to $5; stockers and feeders, $2.30 to $5.10; bulls, $3.30 to $4.40; calves, $2.50 to $7.

Hogs—Receipts, about 54,000; market 15c to 20c lower; choice heavy shipping, $6.60 to $6.65; light butchers', $3.00 to $6.65; light mixed, $6.55 to $6.57½; choice light, $6.55 to $6.65; packing, $6.50 to $6.55½; pigs, $5.75 to $6.50.

Sheep—Receipts, about 20,000; market strong to 10c higher; sheep, $4.50 to $6.65; yearlings, $7.25 to $7.25; lambs, $6 to $8.80.

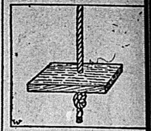
FOR YOUNG FOLKS

SINGLE ROPE SWING.

How to Make One and the Way to Start and Operate It.

Sometimes a rope will be found lying about the barn or back of the house which could be used to make a swing, but it is not quite long enough for the purpose. That is the time a single rope swing may be made which will furnish enough fun to suit any boy.

The end of a soap box makes a good seat. Bore a hole in the middle of the board, pass the rope through and tie a knot in the bottom. Tie the other end around a branch of a tree as far away from the trunk as possible. Let the board be not more than six or seven inches wide.



THE SINGLE ROPE SWING.

A good athletic boy can have great fun with such a swing. There is a knack in handling it, but when once mastered he can swing back or forth perfectly straight in any direction. Grasp the rope as high as you can reach, stand far back and with a quick jerk lift yourself off the ground and straddle the swing. The board should be far enough from the ground to let the toes touch, then by touching the ground occasionally it is possible to keep going straight and not revolve. If some one is near by to push, you can be pushed in a circle like a merry-go-round.

A CURIOUS PLANT.

It Eats Up Flies and Insects That Alight Upon It.

One of the most curious plants is found in the vivarium of the Pennsylvania university. The name of this wonderful plant is the Pinguicula candata, and the name is as long as the plant is small. The plant is small and modest and has a pretty flower and pretty leaves.

Despite its innocent looks and small size it is an object of terror to all insects, for it has the qualities of fly paper, and should any guileless insect stop upon its sticky leaves it could never get away, because the leaves have a sticky substance upon them which retains the insect. As every insect passes this plant its inviting looks tempt the insect to spend a few minutes of recreation upon its pretty leaves.

But, alas, it never leaves the surface of the leaves until it is absorbed by this fly catcher, when it goes to enrich the constitution of the plant. As the leaves are always covered with insects the plant flourishes into one of the most thrifty plants. This "insect catcher" of Dame Nature would be a boon and a blessing to many housewives who are troubled with mosquitoes and flies, for if a few of these plants were placed on a table in a room infested with the above named insects the room would soon be free from these little pests, which are so abundant during the warm weather.

Woodpeckers.

The woodpeckers have so long been looked upon as the good friends of mankind that it would seem impertinent to bring any charges against them, and yet the good they do is of very doubtful quantity. As they peck around the trees in the fields and orchards to devour the worms and insects they make no distinction between the destructive and the nondestructive creatures. In fact, their choicest morsel of food is a small creature that spends its entire life in eating the most injurious tree insects that we have. Unless the woodpeckers can make up for the loss of these beneficial insects by keeping down the injurious ones the birds must be classed among the nuisances rather than the friends of mankind.

The Magic Tumbler.

Fill a saucer with water, place a small coin in it. Then ask some one to take the coin out of the saucer with his fingers without getting them wet. He will, of course, say that it is impossible and will perhaps ask you to do it.

Take a tumbler and a piece of crumpled paper. Light the paper and place it burning in the tumbler, then immediately invert the latter in the saucer. The water is immediately sucked up into the tumbler, and the coin can be taken out without wetting the fingers.

The Dreamland Train.

When I would go to fairyland,
  Upstairs the station lies.
Just after dark the good train leaves;
  An early start is wise.
I take a special sleeping car;
  There is no fare to pay.
But mother dear collects a kiss
  Before I start away.
And then she tucks me in my berth
  And turns the light down low.
I always fall asleep before
  The train begins to go.
Through all the night the train flies on;
  It is a famous run.
And when the morning comes at last
  I'm wakened by the sun.
And then I find I'm somehow home
  And in my little bed.
Do you suppose 'twas all a dream,
  As my big sister said?

INSUFFICIENCY OF THE OCULAR MUSCLES.

In many cases the problem of eye-strain, like that of heart-strain, is an individual muscular problem, and the determination of the exact point where the physiological merges into the pathological (the healthy into the unhealthy) depends not only on a proper estimate of optical defects, and individual capacity for compensation, but also a careful consideration of a number of variable factors, such as age, general health and conditions under which the eyes are habitually used. But while the heart muscle has its regular intervals of complete rest, the eye muscles, in many varieties of error and in many occupations, are kept continuously on the stretch for hours at a time without relaxation of any kind. Consequently the ocular compensation often breaks down, entailing not only failure of sight, but in many cases very serious results to other organs. Do not wait for this condition. Tax Rate Was Struck At Meeting Last Night.

Council Fixes It at 26 4-5ths This Year--Much Additional Expenditure, Says Ald. Marsh--Overdraft Of $2,000 From Last Year--Chairman Of Executive Claims Assessment Is Too Low--A Bunch of By-laws Passed--Question of Privilege Which Was Not Pressed--Some interesting Figures.

The City Council met in regular session last night and transacted a lot of business, the most important of which was the striking of the tax rate. The rate this year will be a little over three mills higher than last year's, which is "going some," as our friend the professor would say. A few interested listeners were in the back benches. As was expected, the session was a long one.

Ald. Burrows' was the only vacant chair.

TROUBLE AT THE START.

After the minutes of the previous session had been read and confirmed, Ald. Starling rose to a question of privilege. By the report of the last Council meeting, as published in the papers, he saw that Ald. Marsh had intimated that some aldermen had interfered with the Tax Collector in the discharge of his duties. He (Ald. Starling) desired Ald. Marsh to name the Alderman he referred to.

A point of order was taken by Ald. Marsh that this was not the proper place for the matter to be discussed and the point of order was sustained.

The matter did not come up again.

COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

From the City Treasurer, stating that Mr. W. E. Vandervoort, lessee of the market, had paid in $1750, and that only $50 more was owing to the city by the lessee.

From the corporation teamsters, asking for an increase of pay, but no amount was specified.

From the Surveyor, stating that the stone wall on the east side of Pinnacle street, abutting Bellevue Terrace, was in a dangerous condition as it was bulging out, and he had closed up that portion of the thoroughfare. Also that a fence on the north side of Dundas street, between George and John streets was dangerous and interfered with pedestrians by leaning over the walk, and on top of the fence was barb-wire.

REPORTS.

The reports of the various Civic Committees were laid upon the table.

A report was presented from the Board of Health asking that the isolation hospital be erected at once.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

On motion the Council went into Committee of the Whole on Reports, etc., Ald. Butler in the chair.

The reports of the various standing committees, as already published, were passed without discussion.

A recommendation prevailed that the Rolling Mills company be allowed to extend a siding on Wharf St.

A recommendation prevailed that $120 be paid to Mr. C. Cook for the watering of Bridge street and a by-law to that effect was ordered to be passed

A recommendation prevailed that certain repairs be made to the fire halls and also to the two fire engines, the same to be left in the hands of a special committee.

A report was presented recommending that the premium of $1000 be paid to the Guarantee Accident Insurance Company to insure the city against accident.

On motion the report was adopted.

The communication from the Board of Health, re isolation hospital, was on motion referred to the Executive Committee.

The Gas Committee reported recommending that 25 per cent. of the cost of erecting the new gas holder be paid to the company building the same. The report also stated that certain articles not needed at the works had been sold to the highest bidder.

The communication of the Street Surveyor, re the wall on the east side of Pinnacle street at Bellevue Terrace and the dangerous condition of the fence on Dundas street, was considered.

Ald. Panter said that the trees growing had the effect of bulging out the wall in question.

A motion prevailed that these matters be placed in the hands of the Solicitor, Street Surveyor, Ald. Panter and Starling, with power to act.

The teamsters' petition for an increase of pay was taken up.

Ald. Panter moved that the matter be referred to the Public Works Committee.—Carried.

The communication of the City Treasurer, re the lessee of the market, and also the tenders for the market for the ensuing year were on motion referred to the Market and City Property Committee.

THE ESTIMATES.

In presenting the estimates for the year, Ald. Marsh, chairman of the Executive Committee, said there was virtually no change in the estimates since they had been considered by the committee. It was found to be absolutely impossible to give the chairmen of the various committees all they had asked for this year. He had no apology to make for the high rate of taxation for this year, namely 26.80 mills, as the various expenditures had to be met and there was no other way of meeting them. If our assessment was upon a proper basis the rate would not be as high as it was. It was a fact that our assessment last year was some $26,000 less than it was in the year 1894. Why was this? There must be something wrong with the method of assessing. What he (the speaker) thought were assessed too low were the vacant lots about the city. Some years ago they were assessed at a much larger figure than they were to-day. The speaker instanced a number of places in Ontario where the population was not near that of this city and yet the assessment was in some cases over a million more than here. He thought there was no reason why our assessment could not be increased. He hoped the chairmen of the various committee would do all in their power to keep within their estimates this year and then moved that the estimates for the year, as follows, be adopted:

UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED.

Ald. Panter thanked the chairman of the Executive Committee for the liberal manner in which he had dealt with the Public Works Committee, but still thought the amount to its credit would not, with the other work necessary to be done, place our principal thoroughfare in a proper state of repair.

Ald. Starling complimented the chairman of the Executive on the manner in which he had presented his estimates, but thought that each committee had not properly considered the estimates.

Ald. Marsh said the estimates had been carefully considered at two meetings of the Executive Committee. There was in the estimates an item of $2,000, which had to be provided for over the expenditures of the various committees last year. There were also increases in the Public and High School and Separate School rates, Board of Health, salaries and police expenditures. The city's assessment this year over last was increased by about $60,000.

After Ald. Green had spoken a few words of commendation in reference to the preparing of the estimates they were unanimously adopted.

PREPARING THE ROLLS.

Ald. Marsh said the assessment rolls would have to be prepared as soon as possible. It was necessary that this be done before the 1st of June.

In answer to an enquiry the Clerk stated that it would require about two months to prepare the rolls.

A motion prevailed that the matter be left in the hands of the Mayor, Ald. Marsh and Thompson, they to secure help, if necessary, to prepare the rolls.

ENQUIRIES.

Ald. Marsh asked if it was a fact that a larger quantity of gas was now being made at the works.

CONDITION OF GAS WORKS.

Ald. Green, in replying, spoke at some length in reference to the gas works. He said the new manager had informed him that the make of gas had not, until the past few days, been satisfactory. This was owing to some of the retorts not being in a proper condition. More gas was being made now. In speaking of the recent trouble at the works on account of the men leaving, Ald. Green said there was no intention on the part of the Gas Committee or the new manager to make a change in workmen employed at the works, but for some reason they chose to leave and it put the manager and Gas Committee in a bad box. One day the new manager was virtually alone at the works. It was stated the men had been unfairly dealt with, but such was not the case. It was a case of the men being disposed to hold up the city. The manager gave the committee every reason to hope that better results in the future would be shown.

THE NEW GAS HOLDER.

Ald. Starling asked if 25 per cent. or any portion of the expense of building a new gas holder had been paid.

Ald. Green said that a portion of the material for the gas holder was here and that 25 per cent. had been paid over to the contractors.

MOVING A HOUSE.

Ald. Thompson asked about the house that was being moved down Albert street. For three weeks the streets had been blockaded, and he considered it was time that some action was taken in the matter.

G.T.R. EXPRESS WRECK

One Killed and Two Injured Near Huntsville.

North Bay Fast Train Crashes Into Rear of Stalled Freight—Crew of Latter Suffer—Debris Set On Fire—Passengers Escape With Severe Shaking—Wreckers At Work For Five Hours.

Huntsville, April 9.—The North Bay express, which left Toronto at 11.30 Sunday night, crashed into the rear of a stalled freight train three miles north of Huntsville early yesterday morning, killing the brakeman of the freight and seriously injuring his assistant and the conductor.

When the collision occurred the three men were in the van, the escaping steam from the express locomotive causing the death of Richardson and the injury to the other two.

The van and several other cars were smashed to pieces, and the scattered ashes from the stove set fire to the debris. The engineer of the express, J. Firman, and his fireman, jumped from the cab of the engine just in time.

A few passengers in the smoking car were given a shaking up, one man having his face cut with the glass from a broken window.

Richardson leaves a widow and child in Midland, where he was a member of the L. O. L., and his widow will receive $1,500 from the society. The two other injured men were conveyed to the General Hospital at Huntsville, and latest reports ensure their recovery.

A miscalculation on the part of the officials is held as being responsible for the smash. The express was 10 minutes behind when the freight left Huntsville, and it was thought that the latter could reach the siding at Novar in time to give the passenger train a clear right of way.

The wrecking crew from Allandale had five hours good work in clearing away the tracks.

Dead: Brakeman Nelson Richardson, Midland.

Injured: Duke Wellington, Allandale, conductor, badly scalded. Brakeman T. Myers, Allandale, seriously injured.

WALL FELL ON FIREMEN.

One Killed and Three Fatally Hurt In N. Y. Fire.

New York, April 9.—Fire early yesterday partially destroyed the car barns and power-house of the Metropolitan Street Railway Co., extending from 145th to 146th streets, and from Lenox avenue to Seventh avenue. During the course of the fire one fireman was killed and three others probably fatally injured. The financial loss is heavy.

The dead—Captain John Ryan, of Engine Co. No. 80.

Injured—John Connors, fireman; John Roxbury, fireman; F. D. Lepold, fireman.

The men killed and injured were fighting the flames from a second storey fire escape on the Seventh avenue side of the building when the wall fell, burying the men in the debris. Captain Ryan was taken out dead and Fireman Lepold, who was rescued alive, was probably fatally injured. He told the rescuers that six men besides the captain were in the ruins and that all were dead. Later it was found that all but Connors and Roxbury, who were taken out gravely injured, had escaped with a few bruises.

The fire started in the repair department from a grounded wire in one of the cars and communicated to the paint and varnish rooms, which burned so fiercely that it took the firemen nearly three hours to bring it under control.

After Fur Smugglers.

Toronto April 9.—American fur houses have been employing Jews to smuggle Canadian furs across the border, is the charge made by Game Warden Dan Blea of Parry Sound district in a report to Chief Game Warden Tinsley.

Beaver and other skins are bought from the Indians and sneaked over the border. The close season for these furs lasts till 1910, and the animals are increasing in number.

Warden Blea suggested three months' imprisonment for a first offence at illegal trapping, and six months for a second.

Oblates Will Build.

Ottawa, April 9.—The Oblate Order are thinking of erecting a theological grand seminary on Ottawa University grounds. Since the burning of the university here private premises have been occupied by those studying for the oblate order or the secular priesthood.

Receiver Heavily Punished.

St. Thomas, April 9.—Moses Levin, for selling brass stolen by boys, was yesterday sentenced to one year in Central Prison, and Charles Service and W. Bryson, who pleaded guilty to stealing brass from the Wabash, were given six months each.

Immigrants In Pulp Woods.

Kingston, April 9.—The steamer Rosemont, which has been granted a passenger license, will take 290 immigrants to Simpson Island, on Lake Superior, on the first trip. The immigrants are to work at the pulp wood industry.

Floods In Servia.

Belgrade, Servia, April 9.—Widespread floods, caused by the melting of the snow, have wrought devastation in many Servian towns.

Railway traffic is interrupted, and a number of fatalities have been reported.

ESTIMATES GO THROUGH.

Labor Act In Operation — Quebec Contracts Criticized.

Ottawa, April 9.—In the House of Commons yesterday morning Hon. Mr. Lemieux stated that through the operation of the new Labor Act the strike of 700 coal miners at Springhill, Nova Scotia, had been terminated.

The parties to this dispute were not at first aware that the compulsory investigation bill had passed Parliament, but when they became so aware, the men went back to work pending a settlement. Mr. Heron thereupon urged enforcement of the act in the case of the strike now in progress at Taber, Alberta.

In reply to Col. Hughes, Mr. Fielding related the "facts" of the retirement of Lord Aylmer, as shown in the records. Mr. Bennett asked if Col. Vidal would be retired in two years' time, and Mr. Fielding replied: "Sufficient unto the day is the good thereof."

The Nova Scotia estimates passed, as did those for Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

Some criticism was leveled at the preponderance of Quebec contracts awarded to Ottawa contractors, but this was explained as due to the fact that these contractors were better acquainted with general conditions than local men could be. The Quebec items went through, making a total vote for the day of about a million and a half.

FIX WATER BOUNDARIES.

Treaty Drawn Between Great Britain and United States.

Washington, April 9.—It was officially admitted yesterday that a treaty had been drafted between the United States and Great Britain, providing for the appointment of a joint commission, which will consider all of the complex questions connected with the water boundaries between Canada and the United States.

This will include such questions as the disposition of the waters of the great lakes; the regulation of the use of the water at Niagara Falls for power purposes and the whole general subject of fisheries regulations, not only for the great lakes but for the Atlantic and Pacific states.

The treaty will require the approval of the United States Senate to become effective, but it is possible that an arrangement in the nature of a modus vivendi will be reached between Secretary Root and Ambassador Bryce in the near future.

DELMAS' PLEA FOR THAW

Beginning of the End in Famous Murder Trial.

Evidence In Case All In — Counsel Commence Their Struggle With Jury—Address of Defending Lawyer—Dramatic Masterpiece — Tells Tragedy of Two Young Lives—Traces Course of Evelyn's Betrayal.

New York, April 9.—The curtain began to fall yesterday on the dramatic trial of Harry K. Thaw, charged with the murder of Stanford White.

Attorney Delphin M. Delmas, the California advocate, began his long anticipated address to the jury in the afternoon, and after he had spoken for more than two hours and a half, adjournment was taken until to-day. Mr. Delmas expects to finish his speech before the luncheon hour is reached.

District Attorney Jerome will make the closing address of the trial tomorrow and Thaw's fate should be in the hands of the jury by Wednesday evening. Justice Fitzgerald ordered the jury locked up until the end of the trial. The judge's charge to the jury will be delivered immediately after the district attorney concludes his speech, which will take up three or four hours.

Declaring that he would not base his plea upon the "unwritten law," because his client found ample justification in the written statutes of the State of New York, Mr. Delmas made a sriking appeal to the sympathy of the jury. But so far as he went yesterday, the subject of Thaw's sanity or insanity at the time he committed the homicide was not even hinted at. Mr. Delmas grounded his argument solely upon the story of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw.

"Even a beast protects its young," he declared with scornful emphasis, "but this unnatural mother deserted her daughter in this city of millions to be betrayed by a false friend, to be lured into a gilded palace, and there left the victim of a gray-haired man, wounded, bleeding and devoured."

Jerome Not Present.

All of Thaw's family were in the court-room. They sat stolid, as usual, throughout Mr. Delmas' argument, their features betraying no emotion which they might feel. Thaw turned to them from time to time, as his attorney seemed to strike some telling blow, and they smiled back, reflecting his own pleasure. Thaw also turned frequently to his wife, who, in the last stages of the trial, as in the first, seems to be bearing the stress of the trial. She had a responsive smile ready for his every look.

District Attorney Jerome was not in court to hear Mr. Delmas' speech. His assistant, Mr. Garvan, took voluminous notes, however. Mr. Jerome, it was said, was busy with the preparation of his own address.

The "Real Facts."

Mr. Delmas began his appeal to the jury by quoting from an utterance of District Attorney Jerome during the trial. He said:

"We have no right if the real facts were known to be here trying this man, and would be absolutely prohibited by the statutes."

Defended by Written Law.

"In the performance of my task, it is perhaps not improper to say that I shall make no attempt to influence your passions, no attempt to make your sympathies overbalance your judgment, I shall not call on such a flimsy thing as the 'unwritten law.' This defendant finds his justification in the written law, in the statutes of this state. In the written law he finds all necessary to protect his life and his liberty.

The Tragic Story.

"The story is that of two young people whom fate by inscrutable decree had determined to link together, to be united and walk through life in the company of one another. The story covers only a few years. It is the saddest, most mournful and most tragic which the tongue of man has ever uttered or ear of man ever heard."

He told of Evelyn's early life. "As she became the family drudge, assisting her mother in the household duties. But nature had endowed her with the fatal gift of beauty—a beauty which manifested itself in early youth and a gift with which the mother soon saw means of supporting the family.

Assails White.

"At this time," he said, "we find a man whose hair was tinged with gray, who had an excellent wife and an accomplished son, fixing his eyes upon the fated child and determining to make her his.

"The child was left alone. In one of those dens fitted up with all the beauty and taste which this man of genius possessed, into one of these dens this child was lured and found herself alone with this man, old enough to be her father, the man who was to be her protector."

He accused White of the crime, the penalty for which he declared that President Roosevelt had said in a message to Congress should be visited with death. This was one of the suggestions which Thaw himself made to his counsel for his summing up—one of the suggestions which played so important a part in the proceedings before the lunacy commission.

Hummel's Affidavit.

That Evelyn Nesbit's story was true, and was told to Harry Thaw, formed the subject of the argument for more than an hour. Mr. Delmas declared that the only evidence the district attorney had to bring against the girl was the "miscalled affidavit," conjured by Abraham Hummel.

Speaking of the latter, Mr. Delmas again drew heavily upon the bitterest adjectives of his wide vocabulary, and asserted with emphasis that it would require more than the word of a perjured man to send Harry Thaw to an ignominous death. Hummel was charged by Mr. Delmas of having committed deliberate perjury upon the stand when he swore he was not acting as Evelyn Nesbit's counsel, and that no action was contemplated in her behalf. He said the so-called affidavit had itself convicted the man of falsehoods.

Protest Against Commission.

At the morning session of court, Mr. Jerome formally protested against the confirmation of the report of the lunacy commission. He made no argument, however, and his motion was quickly overruled. The defence then sought to have Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton testify that Thaw was insane at the time he committed the alleged murder. The district attorney prevented this by an objection to Dr. Hamilton's sur-rebuttal.

He was sustained, and Mr. Delmas announced that the defence rested. Mr. Jerome made a similar announcement, and then an adjournment was ordered until two o'clock, that the jurors, who were to be deprived of their liberty, might adjust their business affairs.

WIFE WHIPPED HIM.

Farmer Complains of the Short Comings of His Spouse.

Toronto, April 9.—In the non-jury assizes yesterday, Mrs. Forsythe of Altona, Pickering Township, brought suit against her husband, Ralph Forsythe, to compel him to maintain her as his wife. She alleges non-support.

Forsythe says his wife's shortcomings are as follows:

Refused to get dinner on Sundays, saying two meals were plenty.

Left the cows for him to milk during harvest.

Neglected to mend his clothes.

Spent two days a week from home.

Struck him with a pair of horseshoes.

Whipped him.

Lifted a plate to throw at him.

Threw a granite teasteeper twice one morning, hitting him each time.

Called him a liar, a hog, a fool, a rogue, a worse thief than some in prison.

Threw part of a loaf of bread at him. Encouraged children to call him nicknames.

The son stated that the house was a little hell on earth, and the daughter told of frequent punishment administered to her mother by her father.

The case goes on to-day.

SURVIVES 60,000 VOLTS.

Winnipeg Electrician Undergoes a Wonderful Experience.

Winnipeg, April 9.—After receiving the shock of a flash from 60,000 volts, Eugene Pilon was picked up unconscious, but still living, at the sub-station of the street railway Sunday.

The current passed right through him, leaving the impress of his feet burnt into the floor, the soles of his shoes being burnt off by the powerful current which had struck him, and which, in passing out, bored deep holes into the concrete.

It is stated by an expert that probably the carbon in Pilon's pencil attracted a jump spark from wires at a distance of 10 inches and this would be near enough to give him a terrible shock, although not the full force of the current.

Second Unknown Suicide.

Toronto, April 9.—The body of an unknown man was found dead in the men's lavatory at Centre Island yesterday morning, with a bullet wound in his head.

Deceased was clean shaven, about 5 feet and a half in height, and of fair complexion. He carried a nickel watch and 11 cents in money. Three street car tickets and one return ticket to the island were found on him. He wore an Irish frieze overcoat, pepper-and-salt coat and vest and striped trousers. A hard black hat was lying beside him. A five-chambered 32-calibre revolver was on the floor. Four chambers were loaded.

There will be no inquest.

Ex-President Assassinated.

City of Mexico, April 9.—Gen. Manuel Lisandro Bassillas, former president of Guatemala, was assassinated Sunday evening in Calle Seminiarro as he sat in a street car.

The car stopped and a young man about 17 years of age climbed aboard, and rushing at the general stabbed him twice, the first blow severing the jugular vein, the second cutting his face He died instantly.

The assassin gave his name as Yose Estrada and his home as Ocos, Guatemala.

Laurier May Preside.

London, April 9.—(C. A. P.)—The Standard says it is felt that Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman should take the chair at the colonial conference, but if he is unable, the responsibility should naturally, by virtue of seniority, devolve upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Upon this proposition there is entire unanimity of opinion.

Costly Ghost Story.

Winnipeg, April 9.—The Press, in the court of appeals, has lost its "ghost" case and is assessed $1,000 damages.

Miriam Gomez Nagy had claimed $10,000 from The Free Press stating in item that a house of hers on St. John's avenue was haunted.

Puerto Cortez Has Fallen.

Mobile, Ala., April 9.—Advices received yesterday say that Ceiba was taken April 3 by the Nicaraguans without a shot being fired. The Nicaraguan forces then left for Puerto Cortes, which cable advices say, is now also in the hands of the Nicaraguans.

Women In Finnish Diet.

Helsingfors, April 9.—The returns of the elections for members of the Finnish Diet show that 19 women, of whom nine are Socialists, have been elected. This is the first occasion that women representatives have been elected to any national legislative body.

Trouble With Ice.

Buffalo, April 9.—The steamers Robbins and Elphicks, which sailed from this port on Saturday, are reported fast in a big field of ice opposite 18-mile creek. Eleven steamers sailed hence Sunday.

Mr. Delmas' Final Appeal.

Urges Jury to Give Thaw Benefit Of the Doubt.

Counsel Makes Much of the Effect of Evelyn's Story On Prisoner's Mind--Says Thaw Was Delegate Of Providence--Jerome Must Prove His Sanity--Appeal Touches Unwritten Law--Defence Closes.

New York, April 10.—One more day and the concluding chapters of the trial of Harry K. Thaw for the murder of Stanford White will have been written into history.

With an oratorical appeal to both the written and the unwritten law, for the justification of his client, Delphin M. Delmas, the California attorney, concluded his exhaustive summing up address to the jury yesterday afternoon.

With the exception of the moments when he was reading from testimony to establish the truth of Evelyn Thaw's story, which he said had been given with "sublime renunciation," Mr. Delmas' speech was one of sustained oratorical effort. He threw about the form of Harry Thaw the cloak of chivalrous knighthood. "Why," he shouted, "should we who admire the chivalry of the knights of the middle ages, who went about redressing wrongs and rescuing maidens in distress, withhold our sympathy from this brave man?"

The Hand of Providence.

"Ah, gentlemen," the advocate went on, "if Harry Thaw believed he was the instrument of Providence, who will say he was mistaken?"

"The man who had brooded on this subject for three years, who had pictures of dreadful horrors haunting him day and in the stillness of the night, could not be human to retain the calmness of reason. Gentlemen, put yourselves in his place; picture to yourselves the horrors he went through and do justice to Harry Thaw," he said.

Mr. Delmas discussed but briefly the testimony of the expert witnesses, declaring that whatever weight might attach to their utterances was on the side of the defendant.

He declared the burden of proof as to Thaw's sanity at the time of the homicide rested with the prosecution, which had failed to make out its case.

The Benefit of the Doubt.

"Before you send this young man to his doom, you must be satisfied of his guilt beyond every reasonable doubt.

"A great English judge once said that it is better that 99 guilty men should escape rather than that one innocent man should be punished. If there is one chance in a hundred that this defendant was of such unsound mind as not to know the nature of his act, then you must give him the benefit of that doubt.

Thaw's Insanity.

"The district attorney will make light of the experts because they have not studied the species of insanity from which they say Harry Thaw is suffering. It is a species of insanity which has been recognized of every state of the Union—from Canada to Mexico, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

"It will suggest its name," he declared. "I would call it dementia Americana. It is that species of insanity which makes the American man believe his home, his wife, his daughters, are sacred and that whosoever stains the virtue of his threshold violates the human law.

The Unwritten Law.

Mr. Delmas' closing was an almost direct appeal to the unwritten law. He said he left Thaw's fate in the hands of the jurors, with every confidence that he would be acquitted under that golden law—the oldest law of all—the foundation of all laws—"Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

New Law Unworkable.

Winnipeg, April 10.—It is stated that the Canadian Pacific Railway have found that some of the provisions of the new Lord's Day Act are unworkable.

When the act came into effect orders were given that no work should be done on Sunday, except that incidental to the handling of through passenger trains. No trains were to leave the local yards between Saturday night and Sunday midnight.

Local employes are said to have declared that it was impossible to do the work which had to be done under these conditions.

Fire on Strikebreakers.

Hamburg, April 10.—Imported laborers, who were unloading the steamer Louise, on returning from supper Monday night, found the way blocked by a cordon of strikers, who drove the strikebreakers off with sticks and stones. One striker fired a pistol at the fleeing Englishmen, wounding one of them in the thigh.

The cargo congestion of the harbor continues. Nearly 300 steamers and over 50 sailing vessels are awaiting to discharge or take on cargoes.

Killed by Falling Wire.

Amsterdam, N. Y., April 10.—The plant of the Amsterdam Broom Co., the largest independent brush and brown concern in the country, was completely destroyed by fire early yesterday.

William Sullivan, aged 27, a member of the paid fire department, was instantly killed by a falling wall. He was to have been promoted to captain to-day.

Revising Divorce Laws.

St. Petersburg, April 10.—The Holy Synod is preparing a project for the revision of the divorce laws, enlarging the basis for divorce, which is now practiced on limited grounds, and has resulted in a considerable decrease in marriages.

Snowstorm In Gotham.

New York, April 10.—New York awoke yesterday to find itself in the midst of a driving snowstorm, vastly more suggestive of January than of April.

LONDON SURPRISED AT TREATY.

Appointment of Commission to Consider Boundaries Causes Surprise.

London, April 10.—The statement cabled from Washington that an Anglo-American treaty has been drafted, providing for the appointment of a joint commission to consider the boundaries and fisheries question between the United States and Canada has caused much surprise in official circles here.

True Just the Same.

Washington, April 10.—It is stated here the probably lack of advices upon recent developments in the exchanges that have occurred between America and Great Britain relative to the settlement of the questions between the United States and Canada accounts for the above statement from Londin. While the agreement reported is not quite as comprehensive as was at first supposed, it is now authoritatively stated that negotiations have been formally conducted with the result of reaching a basis for a treaty that shall provide means with settlement of all questions relating to the fresh water fisheries and control of the international waters and streams.

HILL'S LINES IN CANADA.

Mileage Will Equal That of the Great Northern In the States.

Winnipeg, April 10.—President Louis Hill of the Great Northern Railway Co., says:

"The Great Northern system is endeavoring to secure mammoth terminals in Chicago, Minneapolis and Winnipeg. We have already secured all the land necessary for handling business for years to come in Portland and Seattle. If our Canadian plans do not miscarry I expect, within the next ten years, to have a railroad system there which will be almost an equivalent of the Great Northern system as it is to-day in the United States."

Further, he said the Great Northern will touch Winnipeg, Brandon, Regina, Calgary, Edmonton, probably Prince Albert, and may traverse the Peace River country with a line several hundred miles further north than any Canadian line.

WOOD FAMINE IN WINNIPEG.

Impossible to Get Fuel—Snow In Bush to Blame.

Winnipeg, April 10.—Winnipeggers are confronted with just as great a shortage of fuel wood as at any time during the serious shortage which prevailed during the winter.

The supply of cordwood in Winnipeg to-day is practically nil, and those who are in need of this commodity will have to use coal in its place.

One of the principal causes of the present famine has been the abnormal depth of snow in the bush all winter, preventing operations of any kind. Coupled with this is the partially crippled condition of the railroads.

Frozen to Death.

Regina, Sask., April 10.—Adolph Stadel, a farmer from Bethune, has been found dead in his shack.

Stadel was supposed to have left for Germany last December. It now appears that he went to spend a last night in his shack and was frozen to death.

Man's Face Blown In.

Rochester, N. Y., April 10.—As the result of an explosion yesterday morning of a barrel of oil of tar, in the cellar of Blau & Barnum, wholesale druggists, John Schleifer, an employe, had his face literally blown in and died soon afterwards.

Another Big Shipment Of Dress Goods

LATE steamers have just brought us another lot of choice VOILES, BROAD CLOTHS and WORSTED SUITINGS. These are the most fashionable colorings and newest weaves. The suitings are in short lengths not more than two dresses in any pattern which makes them exclusive.

SILK VOILES are very popular in the largest FASHION CENTRES and we are showing these in Black, Cream and all the leading colors, It will be a pleasure to show them to you.

More Long Gloves.

Another new lot of the much sought after long Gloves in Silk, Lisle and Kid in Black, White, Cream, Champagne, Sky Blue, Pink and Navy.

Ladies' Colored Stockings

Colored Hose for Ladies will be much worn this season and we have put them into stock in all the leading shades both plain and lace.

Dainty Wash Goods

Our counters have never before displayed such a choice collection of Dainty Wash Material. From France, from Germany, from England, from the United States and from our own Canadian Looms, the best and choicest from each.

The Printings and shadings in the fine French Organdies and Voiles surpass anything before seen here, Most of these are in short lengths, so that not more than two dresses can be sold of the same pattern,

The way the ladies are buying these is evidence enough of their beauty.

Come and select your Summer Gown while the assortment is at its best.

Lovely designs from 20c to 50c per yard.

Our Stock of Rugs

Another shipment just arrived from AUSTRIA which brings our Rug display up to the finest yet. Customers have told us after visiting the largest cities in CANADA that they could find nothing choicer and backed up their assertion by purchasing from us. We are agents for this district for Templeton's Celebrated Scotch Rugs and we have during the past month been sending parcels of them out to many of the large towns in this vicinity. We sell them at the very lowest possible prices and although the makers have recently advanced their prices very materially, we are selling all the season's importations at old Prices. Let us figure on any of your Carpet or Rug Requirements.

MEN'S HATS

The Celebrated CHRISTY make for which we have been appointed sole-selling agents in Belleville.

They are here in all the new shapes, both soft and stiff in black and fashionable colors.

Besides these we show the new shapes in the best CANADIAN and AMERICAN makes, all priced in the modest way that prevails in our Men's Furnishing Department.

Boys' Three-Piece Suits

We have full lines of Boys' Three-Piece Suits for Boys from 4 to 18 years of age. They are manly dignified suits and many of our boy friends who have worn them—WILL NOT HAVE A SUIT WITHOUT A VEST.

The Department of Physics, at the Guelph Agricultural College, will this year continue an excellent work which it has carried on for two seasons. The lecturer in Physics writes us thus:

"During the past two seasons the Department of Physics has been endeavoring to emphasize the importance of underdrainage, and arrangements have been made whereby our services are available to anyone wishing advice in matters relating to drainage. We have full equipment for drainage, survey work and, when requested visit a man's place, survey his land, give him a map showing elevations of all parts surveyed, together with location of drains, their grade, depth, etc. There is no charge made for this work except the travelling expenses of one man, consisting of railway fare, meals and cartage of instruments. These expenses are very light, as arrangements have been made with the railway companies whereby we can travel at one cent a mile each way, i. e., a man living fifty miles from Guelph would have an outlay of $1.00 for railway fare and 25 or 50 cents for cartage; one living one hundred miles away, an outlay of $2.00 for railway fare, and 25 or 50 cents for cartage, and so on."

This, it would appear, is a chance which all wide-awake people, who need drainage improvement, should take advantage of.

The Ontario Legislature has passed an amendment to the consolidated municipal act. Heretofore municipalities have been held liable for accidents on defective highways. Under the amendment the municipality must be notified of the dangerous condition of the road ere it can be held liable. This may work a hardship on the stranger, but it will be a protection to cities, towns villages and townships. A municipality can not keep its roads in the best condition all the time. Its officials cannot be here, there and everywhere. Too many persons who would not take the precaution of notifying the authorities of any dangerous spot are only too eager, in case they met with a mishap to enter claim for damages. They were not slow about serving notice of a lawsuit, but would not go across the street to point out the possibility of an accident. The municipalities are to be congratulated on the victory that they have won.

Who would not be a Presbyterian in Canada, when any good things are to be secured? There are nine Lieutenant-Governors, six of whom are Presbyterians: one Anglican: two Roman Catholics.

"Yes, it is a fact," says the Presbyterian Witness, "the Governor of P. E. Island is a Presbyterian; the Governor of Nova Scotia is a Presbyterian: the Governor of New Brunswick is a Presbyterian: the Governor of Ontario is a Presbyterian. The Lt.-Governors, Hon. D. H. McMillan of Manitoba, and Hon. James Dunsmuir of British Columbia are Presbyterians. The Lt.-Governors of Quebec and Saskatchewan are Roman Catholics; and Hon. G. H. Some people run away with the idea that this is how the Emmerson case now stands: Hon. Mr. Emmerson claims he was slandered by the Fredericton, N. B., Gleaner, and has taken criminal action against the editor of that paper. The real facts of the case are these, as neatly set forth by the Hamilton Spectator:

"Mr. Emmerson is not prosecuting anybody for criminal libel; he is simply issuing preliminary papers in suits for damages for slander. A criminal libel case could be fought out in a few days; but the proceedings taken by Mr. Emmerson can be postponed, deferred, suspended or dropped at the will of the plaintiff, can be made to last for years. He has done exactly what the Globe intimated he should not do, and has left undone the thing the Globe insisted upon so earnestly, so forcibly, so fiercely. According to the Globe he has neglected to give the only answer an innocent man could give — action under the criminal code; he has evaded the issue by seeking another course."

THE MICROSCOPE

Proves That Parasites Cause Hair Loss.

Nine-tenths of the diseases of the scalp and hair are caused by parasitic germs. The importance of this discovery by Professor Unna, of the Charity Hospital, Hamburg, Germany, can not be overestimated. It explains why ordinary hair preparations even of the most expensive character fail to cure dandruff: because they do not, and they can not kill the dandruff germ. The only hair preparation in the world that positively destroys the dandruff parasites that burrow up the scalp into scales called scurf or dandruff, is Newbro's Herpicide. In addition to its destroying the dandruff germ Herpicide is also a delightful hair dressing.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. Two sizes, 50c and $1.00. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Port Hope Liberals Are In Open Revolt.

Port Hope, April 9.—The recent announcement that the Dominion Government has accepted the onus of undertaking the expenditure of enlarging the Cobourg harbor for the reception and convenience of the G.T.R. car ferry in preference to the lesser ultimate expenditure involved for improving the Port Hope harbor, has caused intense indignation among all classes here.

Leading Liberals cannot longer conceal their chagrin and disgust, and so grave is the situation in the Liberal ranks that an open revolt is threatened. A few hold out the hope that a substantial grant would be made to improve the Port Hope harbor to enable deep-draught tonnage for the Upper Lakes to serve the important manufacturing industries on the lake front, but this is not regarded as probable.

Rumors are current that not only will local Liberals allow Durham to go to the Conservative candidate by acclamation at the next Dominion election, but that their influence will extend to the contiguous township of Hamilton, in West Northumberland, to defeat the Liberal candidate in that debatable constituency where Government favors have been so extravagantly lavished of late.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

Change in Mail Rates

Canada and the United States have come to a new agreement in reference to the conveyance of each other's mails in the respective countries. The arrangement under which both countries have been carrying each other's mail at domestic rates and without an international accounting dates back to 1875. Then and for some years the arrangement was fair enough. But for several reasons its operation grew one-sided until the Post Office authorities say that of late years they have been carrying ten tons of United States mail for every ton of Canadian mail carried by the United States.

The new arrangement changes the rate on second-class matter to one cent per four ounces, or four cents per pound. United States magazines and periodicals have been coming into Canada at the postal rate of one cent per pound. This is now changed to four cents per pound. The effect probably will be to restrict competition with Canadian periodicals.

English magazines and periodicals have had to pay eight cents per pound postage, just eight times the rate on United States magazines, and their circulation has been restricted in consequence. In May this rate will drop to four cents, and then the English and American periodicals will be on the same footing so far as postal charges go. Thus, while the new regulations probably will effect some reduction in the volume of American magazines coming into Canada, the circulation of British periodicals should be stimulated.

Laurier's Inconsistency.

Some Conservative newspapers are now quoting a speech made some years ago by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in which he discussed purity in public life, saying, among other pertinent things: "There must be offenders "in all communities. There was a "Judas among the apostles. No "crime to anybody if any association finds that it has amongst it "a Judas; but the crime commences "when the offender, being detected, "instead of being punished, is kept "in office." There have been offenders in the Liberal community since the party attained power, many of them. Some of them have been detected. None of them have been punished. On the contrary, offenders have been protected, and in some instances have been rewarded by promotion to better paid offices. In Parliament—both in the House and in the sessions of the committees, the endeavor to cover up the evidence of wrong-doing has been palpable and unblushing.

But this, says the Montreal Gazette, is not a good reason for raking up an old speech of Sir Wilfrid's, made in the days when he lusted for office and found a highly moral tone a cheap and effective weapon. There is nothing to be gained by charging the Premier with inconsistency, for of all his qualities, good, bad and indifferent, it is the most conspicuous and most generally recognized. If these newspapers had attempted to convict the Premier of consistency they might have interested public opinion.

Oronhyatekha Was a Stickler For Ceremony

(Toronto Saturday Night.)

The late Dr. Oronhyatekha delighted to tell a little story concerning his part in the reception given the Prince of Wales—now Edward VII.—in 1861. The anecdote throws an interesting sidelight on the character of the Mohawk Indian who became the great head of the Independent Order of Foresters.

At the Queen's Hotel, in Toronto, the Prince and the Duke of Newcastle, who accompanied him, took up their quarters, and there they received the representatives of the Indian tribes. A young Mohawk brave, decked in all the pride and paint of his tinsel and feathers, came before them as the representative of the Six Nations. He was a fine specimen of the race from a physical standpoint, and the English Prince and the Duke eyed him with interest. They wanted to converse with him, but it had to be done by means of an interpreter. The Prince asked if the young Indian would come across the great pond with them.

"For what?" asked the brave in return. "To be shown as a curiosity—as a wild man of the woods?"

The future King hastily explained that he did not propose to make a show of the red man, but to educate him in the English ways at the university. To this the Indian agreed, stipulating jokingly that he would not like to go across in the same boat with the Royal visitors, however. The young Mohawk was Oronhyatekha.

A few days later the Royal party was at Stratford and there a party of civilized Indians was brought before them. One healthy, robust, young fellow excited their admiration. He was dressed in ordinary white man's clothing, and he gave his name as Peter Martin. The Duke looked at him steadily for a minute or two, walked around him and viewed him from all sides, and then said:

"Say, my man, aren't you the young Indian brave who was presented to us in Indian garb as the representative of the Six Nations a few days ago at the Queen's Hotel in Toronto?"

Oronhyatekha—for it was he under his English name of Peter Martin—replied that he was. The Duke was still puzzled.

"Well, you speak to us in very good English now, and you spoke to us through an interpreter there—why the difference?"

Oronhyatekha drew himself up with native dignity. "I was then the representative of the Six Nations tribe," he said.

MANY WOMEN'S LIVES ENDANGERED

THEY ARE PARTICULARLY EXPOSED TO LA GRIPPE AND CONTRACTION OF THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES.

Weather conditions and the unavoidable dust and floating disease germs of large shops, factories and streets render the life of the women and girls engaged in business peculiarly exposed to danger. Thousands of our noblest and most deserving young women are the victims of la grippe and throat and lung trouble and early decline through these conditions. A very large number of society women expose themselves to colds, bronchitis, catarrh, la grippe and other diseases through anxiety to look attractive by wearing "transparencies" and other ridiculously light forms of dress. Ninety-five per cent. of these cases could be prevented or cured by the use of Psychine, the greatest system-builder and germ destroyer known to medical science. It is especially beneficial to women in all stages of health, and a great preventive of disease. It has abundantly proven its thorough reliability in the arrest and cure of all forms of decline, wasting diseases and throat and lung trouble which so often follow la grippe.

"I herewith send my photo and testimonial for Psychine. I was given up 16 years ago as an incurable consumptive by Prof. Lyman, Rush Medical College, Chicago. I suffered several years after this until I heard of Psychine, and through it I was restored to perfect health, which I have enjoyed for the past ten years. My sickness began first with la grippe and catarrh of the head. I readily advise la grippe and catarrh sufferers to take Psychine."

MRS. A. WELLS,
Lyndall, Man.

Psychine, pronounced Si-keen, positively and quickly cures coughs, colds, catarrh, la grippe, bronchitis, chills, night sweats, consumption, and all stomach troubles. For sale at 50c and $1 a bottle at all druggists, or at Dr. T. A. Slocum, Limited, 179 King St. W.

D. & D. Institute.

HOW MATTERS ARE PROGRESSING UNDER THE SUPERINTENDENCY OF DR. COUGHLIN.

The Peterboro Review publishes the following letter from this city:

Belleville, April 9.—The provincial institute for the training and education of the Deaf and Dumb will close for the summer holidays about the middle of June. Since Dr. C. B. Coughlin, lately of Peterboro assumed the duties of superintendent of the institute, he has won the confidence and esteem of the pupils and teachers. Dr. Coughlin is an excellent disciplinarian, and takes a deep, personal interest in the instruction and welfare of each of the 229 pupils under his charge, who come from all parts of the province and range in ages from 5 to 21 years.

All the pupils are given a good education and the boys are taught useful trades.

It is probable that Dr. Coughlin will this summer attend the great convention in Glasgow, Scotland, where instructors of the deaf and dumb from all parts of the world will gather for an interchange of ideas and experiences.

Dr. Coughlin, speaking to your correspondent to-day, said that he purposed increasing the amount of oral teaching done at the institute. Heretofore only two lessons of 45 minutes each have been given each day, the system being almost wholly manual. About fifty per cent. of the present students have a useful amount of hearing and this will be cultivated — and developed. Autophones will be used. Many children are able, after a few weeks insight and practice, to read the lips of a speaker, and thereby learn exactly what is communicated, although he or she may not hear a word. The pupil is able to answer, as all have use of their vocal organs, but these organs of speech have never been cultivated, because they have not been taught oral communication. Very few of the children in the institute were born deaf. The affliction has been the result of measles, scarlet fever, or some disease, which has bereft them of hearing, early in life.

In reports received so far from the various heads of institutions, the chief instructors appear to favor the oral method of teaching.

Prof. Crouter, of Philadelphia, formerly of Belleville, states that fully 96 per cent. of all the pupils in his school are benefitted thereby. Dr. Coughlin has had wonderful results so far with oral teaching and intends giving this system a thorough trial. He will have several hours a day devoted to it and will also make a liberal use of the autophones in connection with the education of those who have a fair amount of hearing. The experiments so far have given evidence of most satisfactory results and excellent advancement has been made.

The comfort and convenience of all the pupils are well looked after.

They are given clean, well-cooked meals and their sleeping quarters are models of neatness and care. The interior management of the institute is all that could be desired, and, on a recent visit, the Grand Jury of Hastings county paid a warm compliment to the superintendent and staff for the manner in which they found everything conducted about the big seat of learning for the deaf and dumb.

CANIFTON.

The usual annual high water played havoc with one of the leading industries of the village. The saw-mill, the property of Miss Sutherland, was dislodged from its foundation, half of it being carried down the river. The remaining portion backed the water up on the grist mill, which adjoined the property, so that it is rendered useless for the present. Mr. H. Eveleigh, the lessee of the mill, has secured a portable saw-mill to manufacture the logs in the yard.

Miss Maude Watts, the daughter of Mr. Wm. Watts, who has been in Kingston, Jamaica, for the past two years, engaged as bookkeeper for a large mercantile firm, has returned to her home and is receiving the congratulations of her friends on her almost miraculous escape from the earthquake. Miss Watts tells many thrilling incidents of the catastrophe. She has brought with her a fine collection of the products of the island.

Harry Males, of the Bank of Commerce staff, Peterboro, has returned, after spending a few days with his parents here.

Miss Black spent a pleasant holiday with friends in Odessa.

Mr. M. O. Haight has given up his milk route in the city and is engaged in the Union cheese factory for the coming season.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Shorey and family spent Easter with relatives at Newburgh.

Foster Gunsolus, of Madoc, has returned, after spending a few days with his grandfather, Mr. Peter Gunsolus.

Mr. Timothy Farnham accompanied his daughter, Mrs. E. L. Reid, to her home in Bancroft.

Mr. Frank Brintnell, of the Customs Department, Toronto, spent Easter with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Brintnell.

Miss Boyce, of Colborne, is stopping with her mother at "The Hedge."

Mrs. J. Ockerman and daughters, of Madoc, are visiting friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Farnham, of Bancroft, paid this village a flying visit recently.

Mrs. Barnum, who for some time past has been living with Mrs. E. P. Brintnell, has gone to her home in Madoc.

Mr. R. Mason has purchased a house from Mr. Frank Farnham and will become a permanent resident of our town.

James Richardson, of Belleville, one of the firemen in the employ of the Corby Co., has taken up his abode in part of the Thompson House.

Owes Cure to Zam-Buk

PROMINENT MANAGER'S TELLING TESTIMONY.

Mr. D. R. Gourlay, advertising manager for the well-known piano firm of Gourlay, Winter & Leeming, Toronto and Winnipeg, is amongst the prominent men and women who testify to Zam-Buk's great curative power. He writes to the Company as follows:

"Gentlemen,—I have pleasure in stating that upon the recommendation of a relative I purchased a box of your remedy (Zam-Buk), and by a few applications entirely cured a very severe sprain of the back. While not given to indiscriminate use of, or belief in, patent medicines, I can conscientiously recommend Zam-Buk.

"Sincerely yours,
"(Signed), D. R. Gourlay."

That is just where Zam-Buk proves its superiority! It is treated by men and women who have tried it, as altogether different to ordinary preparations. Doctors, hospital nurses, trainers, matrons of convalescent homes—all give Zam-Buk a good word—and better still, they use it. Zam-Buk is as good for muscular stiffness, sprains, rheumatism and sciatica as it is for skin troubles. Base ball players and athletes in general find it invaluable. For spring eruptions, pustules, scalp sores, itch, eczema, ulcers, boils, abscesses, blood poison, cuts, burns, bruises and abrasions, it is a speedy cure. Takes the soreness out of wounds almost instantly, and kills all disease germs thus preventing festering and inflammation. All druggists and stores sell at 50c a box, or post free from the Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price, 6 boxes for $2.50. Send 1c stamp for trial box.

Ways When You Clean House.

Never work all day at housecleaning unless you want to be thoroughly worn out. After doing a certain amount of work take a resting spell. Don't forget to take a good luncheon to keep you in good physical condition during this trying time.

To remove pencil marks from paint use a piece of lemon dipped in whiting.

To remove finger marks from door knobs and locks use pure soap and old cheesecloth.

Stains on marble can be removed with salt and lemon juice.

All paint should be scrubbed with soap and a brush, if actually dirty, but it should not be allowed to get in any such condition.

When the furniture looks sticky or smeary too much furniture polish has been used.

Wash all white paint with warm water and soap.

When cleaning the refrigerator do not forget the waste pipe. It can be cleaned with a cloth tied around a stick, or with a brush which comes for the purpose. In washing out the refrigerator use warm water with a little soda. If there is a musty smell in the refrigerator open the doors wide, and, if possible, give it a sun bath.

If you have a wooden lattice piece on which the ice rests the musty odor comes from this, and can only be got rid of by getting a corrugated tin ice rest.

When tea stains come on the fine linen they can be taken out even after a long time by the application of glycerine. Take a little of the best quality glycerine, and with it rub the stained parts. Afterwards wash as usual.

When cleaning brass use the regular metal polish, but put a little paraffine oil on the cloth. This will give a fine polish and will not tarnish.

When the cane chair seats are out of shape turn up the seats and with hot water and soap wash the cane work until thoroughly soaked, and leave the chairs to dry upside down in the air, when the seats will become firm and tight again.

Matting may be cleaned with salt water, applied with a small brush. Rinse and dry thoroughly.

A little borax put in the water in which table linen or towels are to be washed will prevent them from fading.

When washing pink muslins or linens, instead of using blueing, take a piece of turkey red, soak it thoroughly in the rinsing water until this becomes pink. Then rinse the goods out in the pink water.

Raw potato juice will remove stains from the hands, and also from woollen materials.

To remove soot from the carpet spread the spots with table salt and let it remain on a few minutes. Brush off the loose salt lightly into a dustpan, and then brush carefully with a wide, clean, dry nail brush, following the grain of the carpet.

Canadian Horse Show.

THE GRAND NEW EXHIBITION IN TORONTO, ON MAY 1ST, 2ND, 3RD and 4TH.

The first Canadian National Horse Show will be held in Toronto, on May 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th. This is the successor of the famous Canadian Horse Show, which is now divided into two parts, consisting of the Spring Stallion Exhibition in March, and the Canadian National Horse Show, in May. As it was also the thirteenth year of the Show, the unlucky number was avoided by a new organization representative of the whole province, as well as of the city of Toronto.

The Show promises to be greater and better than ever, and the St. Lawrence Arena, the new building erected by the city, is admirably suited for the purpose. There are no less than seventy-two classes devoted to the harness, saddle, hunter horses and ponies, and the sum of $7,000 is distributed.

The principal officers of the new Association are Mr. George W. Beardmore, M.F.H., president; W. J. Stark, secretary; Stewart Houston, manager. Reduced rates equivalent to a single fare for the round trip are offered on all railways.

The Church Militant.

Hayes, S. D., April 9.—By thrashing two drunken cowboys who tried to make him drink with them, the Rev. John McVey, a Methodist circuit rider and missionary, has made himself the most popular preacher in South Dakota.

Mr. McVey was going to a distant church last Saturday, and, just after fording Bull Creek, was set upon by Weary Carney and Dog Temple, two cowboys. They tried to make the preacher drink and threatened to pour whiskey down his throat.

Mr. McVey, who was on the foot-ball team while at school, licked both men and so aroused their admiration that they went with him to the meeting.

During service Temple arose and told of the occurrence, and he and Carney both promised to quit drinking.

HUNTINGDON COUNCIL.

Town Hall, Moira, April 1, 1907.

Council met pursuant to adjournment; all members present; minutes of last meeting read and adopted.

A communication was received from R. J. Graham, Belleville, signifying his desire to purchase the town hall, Moira, for an evaporator, in case the Council intended to sell.

Moved by S. Ray, seconded by P. McInroy, that whereas R. J. Graham has signified his desire to start an evaporator in the township of Huntingdon, and would be willing to purchase town hall, at a reasonable price, for that purpose;

And whereas the Council is willing to entertain a reasonable offer for the same; be it therefore resolved, that the Clerk notify Mr. R. J. Graham that the Council will meet him at the town hall, Moira, any day that would be convenient for him, to make arrangements with regard to the sale thereof.—Carried.

Moved by W. E. Tummon, seconded by A. Beatty, that H. Reid be paid $10 for support of Mrs. Caldwell, from 1st March to 1st May.—Carried.

S. Danford asked the Council to open the Concession road allowance between 13 and 14 concessions for about 3-4 of a mile on east side of Madoc gravel road.

Moved by W. E. Tummon, seconded by A. Beatty, that the Council meet on road allowance to examine and consider the advisability of opening same.—Carried.

Mr. Peterson asked for a grant of $20 on side line road between 18 and 19, in 5th concession. Laid over until June.

The road surveyor produced agreement made between John and James Baker and road surveyor re road job on 10 Con. road, which showed the job was done according to agreement.

The assessors handed in their roll which on motion of W. E. Tummon and P. McInroy, was accepted.

F. Kellar applied for grant on side road between lots 10 and 11 in 4th Con.—Laid over until June.

On motion of W. E. Tummon and A. Beatty, the assessors were paid $50 each.

Moved by W. E. Tummon, seconded by S. Ray, that the Court of Revision be held on Monday, June 3, '07.—Carried.

Moved by W. E. Tummon, seconded by S. Ray, that the Collector's time for delivering roll be extended until 27th June.—Carried.

On motion the Council adjourned until 27th May.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE TRAVELLING MAN.

Could I pour out the nectar the gods only can,
I would fill up my glass to the brim
And drink the success of the Travelling Man,
And the house represented by him;
And could I but tincture the glorious draught
With his smiles, as I drank to him then,
And the jokes he has told and the laughs he has laughed,
I would fill up the goblet again—

And drink to the sweetheart who gave him good-by
With a tenderness thrilling him this
Very hour, as he thinks of the tear in her eye,
That salted the sweet of her kiss;
To her truest of hearts and her fairest of hands
I would drink with all serious prayers,
Since the heart she must trust is a Travelling Man's,
And as warm as the ulster he wears.

I would drink to the wife, with a babe on her knee,
Who waits his returning in vain—
Who breaks his brave letters so tremulously
And reads them again and again!
And I'd drink to the feeble old mother who sits
At the warm fireside of her son
And murmurs and weeps o'er the stocking she knits,
As she thinks of her wandering one.

I would drink a long life and a health to the friends
Who have met him with smiles and with cheer,
To the generous hand that landlord extends
To the wayfarer journeying here:
And I pledge, when he turns from this earthly abode
And pays the last fare that he can,
Mine Host at the Inn at the end of the Road
Will welcome the Travelling Man.

The Supplementary Estimates Amount to Over $500,000.

Items Included Are of a Desirable Nature—$34,000 For Colonization Roads—Flags For Rural Schools—Protection of Trees—Higher Salaries For Teachers—Taxing Mineral Rights—Fish and Game Bill.

Toronto, April 10.—The estimated Provincial expenditure for 1907 is $7,035,332. At the Legislature yesterday Hon. A. J. Matheson submitted the supplementary estimates. These amount to $516,201, while the main estimates reached $6,519,131. The expenditure for last year amounted to $6,720,179.

Prominent among the items in the supplementaries is $34,900 for colonization roads, $21,735 for board of health and factory inspection, $500 for Mr. Speaker Crawford, $8,200 for the Text Book Commission, $5,000 for flags for the rural schools, $6,000 for fruit growers and the protection of trees, $9,600 for colonization and immigration, $85,700 for hospitals and charities, $100,000 for changes in the Toronto asylum and $12,000 to the exploration survey branch of the T. & N. O. Railway from Cobalt to Sudbury.

The amendments by the Minister of Education to the public schools act were put through committee. Of the extra $380,000 provided for rural schools this year, the largest portion—about $250,000—will be distributed on a basis to induce higher salaries. The minimum remains fixed at the amount of the township grant, viz., $300. The school receives nothing on salary unless it exceeds the township grant. The amounts paid as inducements vary according to the assessments of sections, the poorer sections receiving the larger inducements.

The balance of the money goes in fixed grants for equipment and accommodation, and also on the class of teachers' certificates.

Hon. Dr. Reaume introduced a measure respecting the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway. This is a consolidation of the various acts relative to the Government railway. It also does away with the per mile land grant vested, under other measures, in the commission, and which they had authority to dispose of to meet the cost of the railway. As the cost is being met by the Government, by loans and otherwise this provision is now considered unnecessary.

Manhood Suffrage Registration.

Hon. Mr. Foy introduced an act amending and consolidating the manhood suffrage registration act. He said the only change of importance in the measure had regard to supplementary registration. The present law was that after the usual sittings for registration there shall be supplementary sittings. It had been suggested by the chairman of the Toronto board of registrars that a better method would be to permit, on the regular days, applications to be made by a relative or person living in the same house, by putting in the affidavit of the person unable to be present but desiring to register. Afterwards this would be confirmed by the person for whom the application was made.

The intimation was forthcoming during the discussion in committee of Hon. Mr. Foy's statute law amendment act that Government consideration is shortly to be given to the matter of renumeration received by Division Court clerks and bailiffs.

Some important changes are indicated in the act. Every Division Court clerk is, under it, entitled to retain for his own use in each year all the fees and emoluments earned by him up to $2,000. Thereover the Provincial Treasurer gets 20 per cent.

Public Schools Act.

The House went into committee on Hon. Dr. Pyne's bill to amend the Public Schools act. It provides the basis of distribution of the extra grant by the Government to supplement the municipal grants towards larger salaries for teachers.

Hon. Dr. Pyne drew attention to the clause providing for the possible dissolution of consolidated schools. This, he said, was designed to enable the dissolution of the consolidated school at Guelph if the authorities there, as had been intimated, deemed it necessary or advisable.

Hon. Mr. Graham thought the consolidated system had never had a fair show. He thought consolidated schools in system were sound.

Hon. Mr. Harcourt pointed out that in many parts of the States they had been a distinct success. They brought to the doors of the rural residents good high schools.

Mr. Preston (Brant) asked the Minister of Education to bear in mind in framing his legislation the banishment of the evils of truancy and child labor. He urged also that feeble minded children should have special care and training. Mr. Preston asked if any provision was being made for the instruction of foreigners coming into the country.

Hon. Dr. Pyne said the matter had been largely left to the night schools as the foreigners were usually past school age.

Mr. Preston suggested that the House endorse the school penny savings banks.

Taxing Mineral Rights.

Mr. P. H. Bowyer (East Kent), who suggested the amendment to the Municipal act providing for the taxation by the municipality of the mineral rights reserved by the Canada Company in their sale of land to the farmers—which amendment has been embodied by the Government in the new act—laid before Hon. Mr. Hanna, the Provincial Secretary, the problem of the collection of the tax.

Mr. Bowyer pointed out that unless the procedure for collection was specifically outlined the company might make an effort to dodge or refuse to pay the tax in an effort to have it charged up against the farm or surface rights. The member for East Kent suggested that a similar course be followed to that which obtains in other municipal taxation. If the company failed to pay its mineral tax for three years, the mineral rights would be put up for tax sale and could be bought in by the farm-owner. In this way the tax could be collected or redress given to the farmer or land-owner.

Hon. Mr. Hanna said that the course suggested by Mr. Bowyer was what would follow upon the owner of the mineral interest refusing to pay the tax on such interest and that the sale of such interest would in no way prejudice or affect the owner of the surface rights.

Fish and Game Bill.

The House followed on in committee on the fish, fur bearing animals and game bill of Hon. Dr. Reaume. Mr. Graham broached the question of game preserve leases which came into prominence through the application of the Tademac Club. Mr. Whitney, taking up the matter, said the transaction sought was a sale of land, not a lease. He believed, however, that the waters of the bay were under lease and the application was for the purchase of land on two sides thereof.

The license for shooting deer and caribou, as decided by the committee was increased from $25 to $50 per season.

CENSURED FOR WRECK.

G. T. R. Blamed For Negligence In Not Giving Time.

Huntsville, April 10.—The jury, in the case of Nathaniel Richardson, killed in a rear-end collision between Grand Trunk passenger train No. 51 and a Grand Trunk freight train Monday, returned a verdict that the death was caused "through the negligence of the Grand Trunk Railway in ordering the freight train to proceed to Scotia Junction when insufficient time was given to reach that point before the passenger train was due there, and that the crew of the freight are censurable for not taking more precautionary measures to protect their train when they knew they were running behind time."

Arthur Wellington, the freight conductor, said he had orders to proceed to Scotia Junction at 10 miles an hour, while the passenger train, scheduled at 22 miles an hour, was due to reach the junction 45 minutes before the freight could reach there.

Brakeman Meyers said only one fusee was dropped from the rear of his train to warn the approaching train.

Engineer Firman of the express stated that no danger signals were noticed on the track, and that his train was running at average speed. The collision occurred on a curve, when no opportunity was given to stop.

Engineer Hargraves of the freight said five minutes were lost at Huntsville, and the run of four miles occupied half an hour. He told his conductor to keep his eye open for No. 51.

Give Fair Play to

A really reliable remedy for headache—Zutoo.

If you have got it into your head that Zutoo Tablets will hurt you, you are mistaken.

It isn't fair to us for you to judge Zutoo by the drug cures.

It isn't fair to yourself to suffer from headache, when this really harmless vegetable headache cure is within your reach.

The fair thing for both of us is—to judge Zutoo on its merits—to test it.

If you find it does not cure your headache, sick, nervous or otherwise, in twenty minutes, and leave you feeling good every time—no bad after effects, then discard it.

But do not condemn it unfairly without a trial, and keep on suffering from headaches. You really do not have to, and one trial of Zutoo will prove it.

All we ask for Zutoo is fair play—that you give it a trial before concluding as to its merits or demerits.

Wont you do this? You'll be glad ever after if you do.

We'll send trial tablets for nothing, or you can buy them at dealers in 10c. and 25c. packages.

of the English dogs is come at last. No more marching now; it will be bullet for bullet—and then the bayonet!"

Fire! The command runs along from battalion to battalion. Fire!

Andre and St. Benoit in the third line wept with wrath and despair. The English volleys are devilish, murderous, horrible, and delivered as calmly, silently, majestically, as they had marched. The red lines are girt about with a halo of impenetrable flame, pitiless, ceaseless, triumphant. The Swiss Guards are decimated, the Courtinois are piled in dying heaps, the French Guards shattered. Hotter and hotter it grows as the smoke becomes thicker. Step by step the red lines advance.

Andre straining forward can see the stony faces, the loading and reloading as at a battue, the officers walking serenely up and down, marking each volley, now jesting, now reprimanding, now encouraging, now smartly tapping the muskets with their canes to force them down and make the men fire low, and fire low they do. Can nothing be done? The Royal Brigade, the Soissonois are brought up. Forward now in God's name and for the honor of France! Useless, utterly useless. Volley upon volley shivers the advancing files; they tumble in bloody swathes; they stop, recoil, reel. Disorder is spreading, shouts and cries and the pile of dead grow bigger, and yard by yard to those infernal drums roll on the red lines. They are past the earthworks. On they come—a volley—on—on—steady, slow, irresistible. Ten minutes more and we are lost!

Fierce trumpets through the smoke, the thunder of cavalry charging. The Marechal has launched them, and not a moment too soon. The English halt—wait—fire. Horses and men crumble up—dissolve. No matter. Bring up the second line and now ride home, ride home. Shame on you that twelve battalions of infantry backed by artillery can defy the flower of our French army. The English line shivers into a bristling wall. Keep quiet there and reserve your fire—muttered whispers and curses, and then the flame leaps out. That is the way, sirs; stand up to them and for heaven's name let the drums keep beating, the drums that beat at Dettingen and are beating now at Fontenoy. Rank after rank totters, breaks, parts, scatters. A cheer rolls up, the cheers of the victors, for dying men and riderless horses are all that remain of our second line of cavalry.

The English have won! No, by God and the Virgin, the patron of France, not yet! We still remain, we the Maison du Roi and we the Chevau-legers de la Garde. The silver trumpets blare out their warning challenge. One solemn minute—clear your sword arms and charge! Charge!

Boot to boot, saddle to saddle, through the smoke we cut our way with set teeth and sobbing breath. We are no bourgoise, we; no canaille or roturiers drawn from the plough; we are nobles all, and this will be the cold steel of the white arm at close grips. The ground is thick with dead—our horses' nostrils gleam red—God! we are on them and the blast of the tornado smites us and we—we reel! As hail from a north-easter smites a standing crop so do their bullets smite us and we stagger like drunken men, stagger and blench and fall. Red are their coats, but red and hot as the flames of hell is their fire, and in five awful minutes we too are left sobbing in the saddle, beaten—beaten! The chivalry of France has gone down before that pitiless furnace.

Andre found himself swept to the rear in the hideous backwash of that miserable recoil, spattered with blood, choked with smoke. Gasping he galloped to the Marechal.

"The day is lost," he shouted, "lost!"

The Marechal nodded as he calmly sucked his leaden bullet.

"Go," he replied, "do you go and warn the King to retire. At least save His Majesty."

And then he turned to summon his last reserves for one final effort to retrieve the day while Andre delivered his message. But Louis would not retire. Impenetrable as ever, inspired by a gleam of kingly pride, he doggedly refused to obey, and Andre in despair left him to rally and lead the infantry and horse that still remained. Better now death than dishonor, for a prisoner he would not be a second time. Back to the fray and fall before defeat comes!

The Chevalier met him as he plunged once more into the smoke, the thunder of the captains and the shouting. "The tide has turned!" the young man cried, "the Austrians and the Dutch have retired. It is only the English now. This way, Vicomte, this way!"

The Marechal had grasped the fact. Dutch and Austrians had made a second effort on their right and centre and it had failed. The English were alone, and with consummate coolness he played his last card. Guns, horses, men, are feverishly brought up from Fontenoy, and while the Irish brigade, six battalions strong, men once British subjects but now fighting for France, Jacobites, Papists, loyal and disloyal alike, fugitives, and renegades, gentlemen, thieves, adventurers and footpads—men fighting not for honor or victory but for their necks—are hurled at the red lines, the broken infantry are rallied, the cavalry re-formed. The gayest libertine in France, the Duc de Richelieu, gathers the scattered companies. The King and the Dauphin are rallying the Maison du Roi.

See! the English are falling back. With sullen reluctance the order has been given—with sullen reluctance it is obeyed. Retire they must or die here to the last man. Step by step, yard by yard, reduced to half its numbers, the red column with drums still beating, just when victory was in its grasp slowly halts—fires—retires. As they had advanced, so do they retreat, those English dogs, shoulder to shoulder, files beautifully dressed, in all the cool majesty of the parade ground, firing those terrible volleys to the end.

Led by the King to the charge once again does the Maison du Roi spur furiously to break them; once again as the island rocks hurl back the invading waves do the English columns rend them asunder. Not all the cavalry and infantry of France can mar or shake that glorious red line. And we can do no more. Let them go. Into the smoke and down the blood-stained slopes they glide and vanish. It is enough—enough!

The battle is over. We have won—yes, we have won, for the camp and the entrenchments are once more ours and Tournay will fall. Fontenoy is and will remain a victory for France, but 6,000 English dead and wounded and 10,000 French piled on the crest and on these awful ridges bear witness to what a victory it has been. And we, French noblemen who have lived through the morning hours of May 11th may well take off our hats to the English and Hanoverian infantry who unsupported—nay, deserted by their allies—marched into a French camp across an open plain and all but wrested victory from twice their numbers. To-morrow the bells of Notre Dame and a hundred churches will ring for the success of Fontenoy, but to-night the British drums that beat on these slopes will beat in our ears and for ever through the centuries their deathless challenge to the homage of chivalry in the hearts of all who call themselves soldiers. No; we do not grudge them their triumph, for there are things finer than victory, and that honor is theirs.

Andre, marvellously untouched, found St. Benoit lying by his dead horse half under the wheel of a dismounted gun on the top of the slope. This was where the English Guards had turned to bay for the last time, when the final furious charge that had failed had been made by the Maison du Roi. St. Benoit had a bullet through one arm and a bayonet thrust in his thigh, but thank God he still lived, and Andre carried him to his coach with the help of the Chevalier, who with a tender care strange to his pert insouciance was doing what he could for the fallen.

"He will live!" said the Chevalier as they returned to the spot to seek for others, and plenty there were heaped amongst the Swiss Guards and the Gardes Francaises, nobles, his friends and comrades, in all the gay bravery of their blood-stained ruffles and haughty uniforms, and mostly dead. The strippers of the camp were already at work on their ghastly trade.

"What is it?" asked the Chevalier suddenly, for Andre had uttered a cry of pain. Only an English officer of the 1st Foot Guards, fresh-colored, smiling, handsome, lying at his feet amidst a score of common English rank and file. His sword was not drawn, but in his hand was a small cane. He had been re-dressing the line of his company as they had halted to receive and repulse that last charge.

"It is Captain Statham," Andre explained. "I knew him in England, and—" he checked himself to stoop, "Yes, he is dead. It is strange."

"Strange?" questioned the Chevalier.

But Andre had nothing more to say. The Chevalier looked very seriously at him and then at the dead man. A shiver went through him. "Shall we say a prayer for his soul?" he asked in a hurried, low voice.

Andre assented in no little surprise, and together they repeated a hasty prayer, and then Andre carried him away. He could not leave him—this English officer—to the awful mercies of the harpies who preyed on the gallant dead.

"I have had enough of this," were the Chevalier's words as they parted, and his gay face was sick. And Andre had had enough too.

And that night as he munched his supper there was but one thought in his mind. Perhaps an English Denise and an English mother were now on their knees awaiting the news from Fontenoy; but they would never know that last night the son and lover had gone to the cabin of the charcoal-burner and had by an accident seen the face of the masked woman who had striven to betray the French army. To-day Captain Statham, as so many others, had fallen in the performance of his duty. Was that fate or the chance of war? Who could say? With a shudder he recalled the grim words of the little vivandiere who had disappeared. But one thing was certain. Whatever secret Captain Statham had learned—if it was a secret—his lips would never reveal it now. And had he, Andre de Nerac, seen that woman's face he, too, perhaps, had been found lying where the dead were thickest. "No. 101!" And had he done with "No. 101"? Assuredly not, assuredly not.

CHAPTER XI.

"Mon Dieu! my dear Abbe," exclaimed the Comtesse des Forges, dropping her cards to let her languishing, heavy-lidded eyes linger on the smiling face of her latest protege, "you make my blood run cold."

"Brelan de rois" called the plump Duchesse de Pontchartrain, carefully noting the fact on her tablets before she allowed her suspicions to master her. "But are you quite sure?"

The dandy Abbe St. Victor with the air of a connoisseur compared the Venus on the cover of his snuff box with the delicately-tinted shoulders of her grace.

"As sure," he said slowly, "as Madame the Dauphine is dead, rest her poor German soul, and that Monsieur the Dauphin will marry again."

It was Sunday evening a good year after Fontenoy. The Court was just out of mourning, to its great joy, and the Salon de la Paix at Versailles blazed with lights and with the jewels and silks of a brilliant throng, a few of whom were dispersed in groups making love or talking scandal over their chocolate, while the greater part were playing cards, the ladies at the fashionable brelan, the men at the dice which led to duels and mortgaged estates.

"It will be the deuce for the peace negotiations," Philippe Comte de Mont Rouge remarked, scowling at the Abbe for no other reason than that he was condemned to sit at this table while Denise, the favorite of the Queen's maids of honor, was talking in an alcove behind his back to the Chevalier de St. Amant.

"Go you, my dear Abbe," said the Comtesse, "and bring Des Forges and St. Benoit here. Your news will excite them more than throwing three sixes running."

"And," added the Duchess in her pouting staccato, "put your head into the gallery yonder, dear friend, and see if my husband has finished his flirtation with that pretty wench of mine."

"And if he hasn't, Duchess?"

"Give them a plenary absolution and let them begin all over again," interposed the Comtesse.

"To be sure," the Duchess assented plaintively, "it will keep them both out of worse mischief. Really I cannot dismiss the girl. She washes my lace to perfection." And she resettled the delicate trimming on her corsage for the benefit of the Comte de Mont Rouge.

"Well, what is it?" St. Benoit demanded.

The Abbe took a fresh pinch of snuff. "The messenger," he said with no little excitement, "the messenger who was conveying secret instructions from the King to the army in Flanders was found last night in a ditch near Vincennes drugged, his arms and feet bound, and——"

"The despatches gone?"

"Naturally."

The Comte des Forges meditatively licked his signet ring. "I knew something d-dreadful had hap-happened," he stammered. "Why ever should I only be able to t-throw twos to-to-night?"

"What do you make of that?" asked Mont Rouge.

St. Benoit appeared to study his uniform of the Chevau-legers de la Garde in the mirror. His eye rested on Denise and her companion. "The second time in the last three months," he muttered. "What does the courier say?"

"Say," repeated the Comtesse des Forges, "say! Not a word, you may swear. The fool knew nothing till he woke to find a gag in his mouth and two peasants glaring at him as if he were the devil."

"Pontchartrain," remarked the Duchess, "is sure the man fell in with a siren at the cabaret where he had his supper. Pontchartrain knows most of the cabarets and all the sirens."

"Wait, wait," pursued the Abbe. "The courier was carrying not merely army despatches, but," his voice dropped, "a private cipher message from His Majesty to the agent of the Jacobites."

St. Benoit so forgot the etiquette of the Salon de la Paix as to whistle softly.

"B-by Jove!" stammered Des Forges.

"They say," whispered the Abbe to his enthralled audience, "that the message was an invitation to Prince Charles Edward to ignore the King's explicit promise to the English ambassador and to present himself at Versailles."

"Dear Prince!" exclaimed the Duchess. "If only he would come to Court I believe I could make Pontchartrain jealous and still have my lace washed by Francoise."

"I should kiss him, yes I should kiss him, the royal hero. You agree, Des Forges?" cried the Comtesse. "The English—pah! I would do anything to spite the English for their treachery to their lawful Prince."

"But your kisses, ma mie," replied her husband, "w-would only keep the P-prince from g-going again to seek his c-crown."

"Pray what does the Comte des Forges know of madame's kisses?" asked the Duchess innocently, and they all laughed, no one more heartily than the Comtesse herself.

"And this is serious," said St. Benoit, "even more serious than the kisses of Madame la Comtesse."

"And the King is really angry," the Comtesse said. "M. d'Argenson came away from his audience this morning looking as if he had stolen the despatches himself."

"And His Majesty remained on his knees at mass ten minutes after every one else had risen," said the Abbe; "he always does when he is thoroughly angry."

"I told you it would play the devil with the peace negotiations," Mont Rouge commented.

"It is curious," mused St. Benoit, "very curious that this infernal treason should begin again just when the Chevalier de St. Amant has returned to his duties."

"The Chevalier?" they all questioned eagerly.

"Do you remember the night before Fontenoy," St. Benoit continued, "when our friend Andre de Nerac saved the army from foul treachery? Well, I never could get the whole truth from him, but he allowed me to infer that the Chevalier was playing a very fishy part in the business."

"Impossible," protested the Duchess. "The Chevalier is on our side—the Queen's side—the right side."

"The Marquise de Beau Sejour, I suppose," sneered the Comtesse, "is guarantee for that."

"That is not worthy of you, dear lady," St. Benoit corrected gently, looking into her great blue eyes as he had looked twelve months ago. "Mademoiselle de Beau Sejour is Mademoiselle de Beau Sejour. It will take more than a parvenu Italian chevalier to make her forget she is of the same quality and sex as the Comtesse des Forges. But I would wager a diamond bracelet to a sou that either the Chevalier is at the bottom of this dirty business—or," he delicately sniffed at his lace handkerchief as one who feared infection, "or that woman."

"Poisson-Pompadour, a fishy grisette," sniggered Des Forges, playing on the name, "at the b-bottom of a f-fishy business—eh?"

"The Abbe can give us news again," remarked Mont Rouge sweetly. "He attended the grisette's toilet this morning."

"Impossible!" the Comtesse exclaimed with sincere anger.

"He blushes, our dear friend," pursued the remorseless Mont Rouge, "blushes a rose de Pompadour. Ha! ha!" The hit went home. Rose de Pompadour was the new color invented in honor of the King's favorite at the world-famed royal manufactory at Sevres.

"The Duc de Pontchartrain was there too," retorted the Abbe sulkily.

"That," pouted the Duchess, "is a worse insult to me than if——"

"Than what, ma mignonne?" blandly inquired his Grace, who had stolen in upon the group. "I would have you know, ladies, that in a white peignoir, with her hair about her bare shoulders, the Marquise de Pompadour is the prettiest woman save one at Versailles, or Paris for that matter."

"Every one," laughed the Abbe, "knows that Monsieur le Duc is a connoisseur of painting."

"And the name of the other divine grisette?" asked the Comtesse roguishly, for the Duke was studying her as he studied the coryphees of the opera or his race-horses.

The Duke kissed the plump fingers of his wife with the most charming grace imaginable. "The mirror will answer Madame la Duchesse," quoth he.

"But my peignoir is blue," she protested, "and even Francoise could tell you my shoulders on such occasions never are bare."

"The more's the pity. St. Benoit bowed to the diamonds on her breast.

"Amen!" droned the Abbe in the officiating priest's sing-song, and the Duchess dimpled with delight.

"The Abbe has not told you," said the Duke, "how he sat on the f-fishy grisette's bed. He is a bold man our spiritual friend. Listen. There were we all at madame's toilet this morning—charming shoulders she has I repeat—and kept standing on our feet were we, for she is royal now is the Marquise, and no one may have a chair."

"The insolence of the jade," cried the Comtesse. "That Versailles should endure it!"

"And presently strides in the King. No chair for him either. Parbleu! My legs were breaking and so apparently were the Abbe's. Presently I heard a crack, and there had our witty friend plumped himself down right on Madame's bed. 'With your permission, sire,' he said with a comic cock of his eye, 'but I am dead tired.' And the King, who had come in as sulky as a bear, burst into laughter. 'Look, Madame,' he said, 'look at this poor devil of an Abbe!'"

"And the Pompadour?"

"She shrugged her bare shoulders and laughed too, because the King was amused, but she put back her ears, very pretty ears, by the way, like a vicious horse. My faith! she will not forget 'this poor devil of an Abbe.'"

"My friend, I could embrace you," cried the Duchess.

"If you would only do it again," said the Comtesse, "I would embrace you, too."

"Do you remember De Nerac's prophecy," St. Benoit asked quietly, "that if that woman came to Versailles she would come to stay?"

"Ah! if only some one would poison her," murmured the Duchess.

"Or another take her place," cried the Comtesse.

"For the good of the country," interposed the Duke, "I am quite ready to sacrifice the Duchess, even though she——"

"This is no jesting matter," St. Benoit interrupted sharply. "The Queen and the ministers know that unless we can ruin this jade of the bourgeoisie France and we will be ruined. I wish to heaven Andre de Nerac were here instead of risking his life in Flanders to no purpose than the glory of the Pompadour."

"A miracle, a miracle!" cried the Duchess, pointing with her fan.

At the end of the salon a little knot of excited courtiers had gathered, and in their midst stood the Vicomte de Nerac.

For a minute or two he halted, gazing about him with a slightly dazed air. The brilliant lights, the jewels and bare shoulders of the ladies, the uniforms and stars of the men, the rattle of the dice and the clatter of a hundred idle tongues seemed to awe him, familiar though he was with the scene. It was pleasant in this heavily-perfumed air with the flash of the candelabra on his riding cloak, faded uniform, and dusty boots, and on his tanned face, to mark the singularly bracing and vivid contrast that he presented to the luxurious idlers of his world. His eye had fallen on Denise. His shoulders straightened, his lips tightened, unconsciously.

"Depend on it," St. Benoit whispered to the Duke, "Andre's appearance has something to do with this damnable treachery."

"Or," added the Duke quietly, "with the schemes of that fishy grisette. The post of the master of her household is vacant."

Andre was soon basking in the smiles of his lady friends, proud to welcome a hero who had saved an army of France. Ten minutes showed that he knew nothing of the mysterious affair at Vincennes, and he could only repeat that he had been summoned to Versailles by the express commands of his Sovereign. Why and for what he was ignorant.

The ladies in particular as they babbled watched him closely. Eighteen months of campaigning had not robbed his smile of its charm nor his dark eyes of their eloquent reserve. He was still the Andre de Nerac who had made more husbands jealous, more women rivals, than even the Duc de Richelieu. For Mademoiselle Claire, for Mademoiselle Eugenie, and the other maids of honor he had a bow and the finished compliment so dear to Versailles; he had even a friendly nod for the Chevalier de St. Amant. But to Denise's curtsey a cold and correct salute in silence was all he designed to reply. The rebuke made the eyes of the Comtesse des Forges very bright; indeed, it set the Salon de la Paix gossiping when he withdrew to remove the stains of his hard riding.

"This will ruin everything," St. Benoit muttered, for he had both fears and plans in his head. So that when Andre and Denise suddenly met in the half-lights of the empty gallery neither knew the meeting was due to a friendly schemer.

The quick flush in Denise's cheeks (she ravished the gay blades of Versailles by scorning powder and paint), the dropping of her grey eyes, sent a thrill into the soldier's heart, but he kept a resolute silence.

"Madame your mother," Denise began with an effort, "will be proud to welcome you back. Do you stay long at Versailles?" she added hurriedly, when he simply bowed.

"I do not know, Mademoiselle; I await His Majesty's commands."

"You are perhaps sorry to return?"

"I cannot tell—yet," he replied with slow emphasis.

Denise flashed an inquiring glance. "What you will find here," she said hurriedly, "cannot please a noble of France. A neglected and dishonored queen—an adventuress——"

"We are in the King's hands," Andre interrupted with a dry smile.

"Yes, Versailles, France, are in the King's hands," she repeated despairingly. "Ah!" she cried with a sudden flash, "we want all who would help to—to—" the words died away under the chill of his demeanour.

"To banish the Marquise de Pompadour?" he inquired after a pause.

"Yes. There will be no peace nor honor for France until the Queen, my mistress, is restored to her place and that woman ceases to traffic in the affairs of a great kingdom."

"I dare say you are right, Mademoiselle. Perhaps it is your business. It certainly is not mine."

"Not yours? Why not? Are you not one of us, a soldier, a noble?"

"Doubtless, but," he shrugged his shoulders, "I at least cannot forget that a worthless libertine——"

"I had hoped you had forgotten those words; you are cruel," she interrupted, "you who have shown——"

"Say no more," he exclaimed joyfully. "I have forgotten and I ask you to forgive. I was rude as well as cruel. Yes, I have come back as I swore I would to prove that I might be worthy of your regard, your love, Denise."

He gently touched her hand and raised it to his lips.

"Of my love," she said quietly, "you must not speak, if you please. But my regard you have already won in Flanders. And, Andre," she continued earnestly, "there is work for you to do here. You will help us—us who would—ah!"

She broke off sharply, for one of the ushers of the King's bed-chamber had swiftly come upon them.

"Monsieur le Vicomte," he said, "His Majesty desires you to wait upon him at once in the salon of Madame la Marquise de Pompadour."

"But—" Andre looked at his travel-stained cloak and boots.

"His Majesty desired Monsieur le Vicomte to attend just as he was."

"Adieu," Denise whispered, "and do not forget to-night that you are a noble and soldier of France."

Andre turned angrily to obey, for the message from those pleading grey eyes had stirred all the fierce pride of his class. Confound this bourgeoise woman who ordered nobles to dance attendance in her salon!

"I will not forget, Denise," he whispered back and his spurs rang defiance on the staircase which led to the second floor, where the favorite so loathed by the Court held sway.

CHAPTER XII.

"Monsieur le Vicomte de Nerac," pronounced the gentleman usher closing the door behind him.

The King was leaning against the mantelpiece talking to Madame de Pompadour smiling from an armchair up at him. The bored, impenetrable royal eyes traveled over Andre's figure as he advanced to kneel and kiss his Sovereign's hand. Madame then without rising held out hers, and Andre, conscious only of the King's presence, must swallow his pride and salute as she sat this upstart usurper of royal honors. But the blood of the De Neracs boiled within him.

Louis gazed with lazy approval round the apartment furnished with even greater taste than wealth, at the costly books and pictures, at the unfinished plaster cast which Madame had been modelling, at the plans of buildings littered on a glorious escritoire. A Maecenas in petticoats, whatever else she was, this adventuress, thought Andre as he waited in silence, and he recalled the memories of the salon she had held as Madame d'Etiolles for Voltaire, the President Henault, the Abbe de Bernis, and the other famous wits.

"Madame la Marquise," said the King abruptly, "will convey my wishes. Good night, Vicomte."

The curtains at the other end of the room had scarcely fallen on the departing King when the lady resumed her seat as if she desired the standing Andre clearly to recognise that the King's presence made no difference to the rights she claimed. It was, too, as if she insolently invited him to inspect her. And inspect her he did, tingling all the time with rage.

How she looked Nattier and La Tour, who painted her in the heyday of her womanhood and of her beauty, have left on immortal record. And anger could not prevent Andre's heart, so susceptible to feminine loveliness from a swift thrill of homage. That dainty head, the exquisite shape and pose of her neck, those wonderful eyes, now black, now blue, now gray, that bust called by a poet les parfaits plaisirs, the harmony of her heliotrope robe, lace-edged with cunning artlessness—every line, every detail, witnessed to a woman's magic insight into the handiwork of God. And here in this haughty Versailles, where taste, breeding, and birth were superior to mere beauty, this woman, born a bourgeoise, had by some diabolic witchery usurped the polished ease so justly regarded as the heritage and the monopoly of the chateau and of the noblesse.

She had risen. "Monsieur le Vicomte," Andre noted the musical modulation in her voice, "His Majesty has been pleased to confer on you the fit reward of your valour."

She was gravely offering him the soldier's and statesman's most coveted distinction, the Cordon Bleu. The blood leaped into Andre's head. For a moment the room swam blue as the ribbon. "Madame, I thank you," he stammered.

"It is the King's gift," she corrected calmly.

For a minute or two they surveyed each other. "What is it?" she demanded of the servant who had entered.

"The superintendent of police awaits the commands of Madame la Marquise."

"Let him enter," she said, resuming her seat and quietly ignoring Andre.

His anger grew hot again as he observed how she took for granted the official's humble obedience.

"Study that lampoon," she said, tossing him a fly-sheet. "You must discover the author and have him punished."

"But it is impossible, Madame," the superintendent replied after a pause. "I have no power to arrest, still less to punish. the ladies and gentlemen of Versailles."

"It comes from the palace, then?"

"It does not come from Paris," the official answered drily.

She placed the paper in a drawer. For a few seconds the look in her eyes was terrible. "You have the other information I required?" she asked.

"His Majesty last night was closeted with his private secretaries till half-past ten. At a quarter to eleven His Majesty walked in the north gallery with the Chevalier de St. Amant. At eleven they met the Marquise de Beau Sejour leaving her Majesty's apartments. The Chevalier spoke to her, the King did not. At ten minutes past eleven His Majesty went to bed."

Andre went cold as ice at the glib report. Denise was right. There would be no peace till this woman had been hunted from her place.

"Good. That will do," and she dismissed the official. Then she turned her chair.

"The post of master of my household is vacant," she said. "It is the King's pleasure that it be filled by the Vicomte de Nerac."

"I beg pardon, Madame?" Andre questioned haughtily.

She calmly repeated the sentence, looking him full in the face.

"It is impossible," he answered, with difficulty restraining his anger.

"Nothing that the King of France is pleased to command a subject can be impossible," she rejoined almost sweetly.

Andre clenched his hands and held his tongue. A gentleman must needs accept an insult even from a low-born woman with the dignity due to himself.

"It is the King's pleasure," she proceeded with a flash of sarcasm, "but it is not mine. I do not choose to accept the services of the Vicomte de Nerac."

Andre gave her a look. Had she been a man she might have lived twenty-four hours, certainly no more.

"Has Monsieur le Vicomte any further observations to offer? No? Then—" she made the pretence of a curtsey. He, Andre de Nerac, a Croix of St. Louis and a Cordon Bleu, was dismissed.

An icy bow; he was striding to the door.

"Monsieur le Vicomte leaves the Cordon Bleu on the table," she remarked, but Andre in his rage paid no heed.

"Mon Dieu!" a caressing laugh caused him to halt with a shiver. "Mon Dieu! so you have forgotten the little vivandiere at Fontenoy? Ah, well, it is no matter."

Andre drew a deep breath. The past swept into his eyes. Was he bewitched or——

"But I have not forgotten," came that silvery voice, "see the proof," she was holding up the Cordon Bleu.

"It was you—who," he sat down overcome.

"To be sure. Who else? I am a good actress, am I not? Ah, yes, the world knows I can act. Paint and powder, a red jacket, a short petticoat with boots half-way to the knees. Would they not stare in the Galerie des Glaces if they knew?" She tripped towards him, head cocked on one side, hands on her hips. "The Vicomte will not betray our secret for all his wrath. 'It is impossible, Madame, impossible,'" she was mimicking divinely his haughty brevity. "Ah! you will forgive the vivandiere though you cannot forgive the Marquise de Pompadour. Yes, you did me a service that night for which I have repaid you by an insult. I ask your pardon, for I am grateful."

In her pleading eyes floated a wonderful tenderness and penitence.

"And every minute," she pursued softly, "I felt sure you must recognize me. But you did not. My faith! soldiers are strange, so proud and fierce and stupid—eh? But you frightened me, upon my honor you did. I tremble still."

Andre stumbled to his feet.

"I am in your power," she whispered. "No one but you knows that I was at Fontenoy, not even the King. But all France knows that the Vicomte de Nerac saved the army, though they have not learned it was at the bidding of a vivandiere," she nodded, the corners of her mouth bewitching.

"It is amazing," he cried, bewildered, "amazing!"

She gently closed the door behind him. "Perhaps," she said, "But have you forgotten 'No. 101'?"

For eighteen months Andre had not heard a word of that traitor. His existence had been blotted from his memory, but now in a flash the scene in the wood stormed into his mind.

"Ah!" he muttered. "Ah!" One minute of the past and he was once more back in this dainty salon, though his anger and pride were melting fast before the radiant witchery of this strange woman who had conquered a king.

"The treachery of 'No. 101' has begun again," she was saying quietly. "And it will not stop this time, I have good reason to believe, unless—I—" she broke off—"unless——"

Across the memory of the charcoal-burner's cabin in the grisly wood rang Denise's warning. The Cordon Bleu gleamed at him from the table. And Captain Statham who had seen the traitor's face lay dead at his feet. Madame smiled softly as if she divined the meaning of those clenched fingers, the lips that formed a sentence and then were pressed in silence.

Madame briefly recited as the Abbe had done in the Salon de la Paix the story of the stolen despatches and the courier's fate in the ditch at Vincennes. "It is the second time in three months," she summed up. "There will be a third before long."

To be continued.

Tired Nervous Women Make Unhappy Homes

MRS. NELLIE MAKHAM

MRS. GEO. A. JAMES

A nervous irritable woman, often on the verge of hysterics, is a source of misery to everyone who comes under her influence, and unhappy and miserable herself.

Such women not only drive husbands from home but are wholly unfit to govern children.

The ills of women act like a fire brand upon the nerves, consequently seven-tenths of the nervous prostration, nervous despondency, the "blues", sleeplessness, and nervous irritability of women arise from some organic derangement.

Do you experience fits of depression with restlessness alternating with extreme irritability? Do you suffer from pains in the abdominal region, backache, bearing-down pains, nervous dyspepsia, sleeplessness, and almost continually cross and snappy? If so, your nerves are in a shattered condition and you are threatened with nervous prostration.

Proof is monumental that nothing in the world is better for nervous troubles of women than Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs. Thousands and thousands of women can testify to this fact.

Mrs. Nellie Makham, of 151 Morgan St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes:—

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I was a wreck from nervous prostration. I suffered so I did not care what became of me, and my family despaired of my recovery. Physicians failed to help me. I was urged to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I want to tell you that it has entirely cured me. I think it is the finest medicine on earth and I am recommending it to all my friends and acquaintances.

Mrs. Geo. A. James, a life long resident of Fredonia, N. Y., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I was in a terribly run down condition and had nervous prostration caused by female trouble, in fact I had not been well since my children were born. This condition worked on my nerves and I was irritable and miserable. I had tried many remedies without getting much help but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound brought me back to health and strength. It has also carried me safely through the Change of Life. I cannot too strongly recommend your medicine."

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to communicate promptly with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs and today holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases of any medicine the world has ever known, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the laboratory at Lynn, Mass., which testify to its wonderful value.

CONSTRUCTING FIREPROOF OUTBUILDINGS.

Serious efforts have recently been made, to reduce the frightful loss from lightning and fire on Canadian farms. And they have been wholly successful, not only in securing a thoroughly lightning and fireproof construction, but also in bringing the price down to, and even below, that of the old-time board and shingle barn.

The new plan is to use corrugated galvanized sheets for roofing and siding barns and all outbuildings. These sheets are very rigid, and make perfectly strong construction when used over very light framework. No sheeting boards are used at all—only light purlin strips being necessary.

Such buildings are now becoming very common, and users everywhere affirm that "Acorn Quality" Corrugated Galvanized Sheets, manufactured by the Metal Shingle & Siding Co., Limited, of Preston, Ont., is the most satisfactory material known for the purpose. They are so heavily galvanized that they easily outlast a generation and never need repairs. The firm above mentioned will gladly send to inquirers their interesting literature about "Acorn Quality" Corrugated Galvanized Sheets, and give names of users in all parts of Canada. 46

THE TIME OF HER LIFE

By CONSTANCE D'ARCY MACKAY

Copyright, 1906, by K. A. Whitehead

One morning, when Billy and I were lingering over our rolls and coffee, Betty came in with a tragic air and an open letter in her hand.

"Listen to this!" she exclaimed. "Eleanor Cuyler is coming to New York to visit her aunt, and she says she simply must see us because she's always wanted to visit the 'shores of Bohemia!'"

"The shores of what?" said Billy. "I'm sure there's nothing Bohemian about us."

"That's just it," wailed Betty, "but Miss Cuyler doesn't see it that way. She's daft about people who 'do things,' and she says she never met any, so she begs that she may come to dinner some night, quite informally, and be one of us. She thinks that because Kate writes and you're an artist and we all live in a little flat—I mean apartment—we are—well, we are queer and unconventional."

"Who is this Eleanor Cuyler?" said Billy, with a frown.

"She's a Philadelphia girl Kate and I met when we were in the mountains last summer. She was awfully nice to us in ever so many ways, and now it's our turn to do something for her. It's no use suggesting the matinee or a luncheon. Eleanor's rich as Croesus and tired of all that, and there's nothing else we can afford. Oh, I don't see what we're going to do!" And Betty puckered her brows in despair.

"Do," cried Billy. "Why, it's as plain as day! Satisfy her craving for the unconventional! If we're not Bohemians, we can at least put up a good imitation of the real thing. We can ask the Englishman, Harry Rockminster—he'll add a continental flavor. And there's Perry Dashwood; he can sing stein songs better than any one I ever knew. We'll get Cynthia to come and recite, and Worthington to bring his violin. They can pretend they're professionals. Cynthia will be an actress just starting on her career, and Worthington a struggling musician—'struggling' is the right touch, isn't it? And—let's see—this is Monday. Write and invite Miss Cuyler for Wednesday evening. Bohemians aren't supposed to give much notice when they ask people to their parties." And Billy looked over at me and laughed.

While Betty was jubilantly writing her note I went to explain things to Aunt Pattie. Aunt Pattie has mothered us ever since we were children, and nothing we do ever surprises her, so she fell in with our plan at once. "But I couldn't be a Bohemian if I tried," she declared. "I wouldn't know how to act, and I'd make you all miserable and myself too. You can easily excuse my absence."

"But you'll miss all the fun," I objected.

Aunt Pattie's eyes twinkled. "Oh, I mean to be there!" she cried. "Since we have no maid I'm going to serve the dinner myself."

In vain we all protested, coaxed, commanded. Aunt Pattie was firm in insisting that as Miss Cuyler had never seen her it could make no possible difference. Yet somehow it did to me, for I could imagine with what horror my Englishman might look on such proceedings. Even after I had written to him and explained the circumstances I was tormented by misgivings, for, although he didn't know it, his good opinion mattered more to me than anything else in the world!

All Wednesday Betty and I worked like majors. We had always rather prided ourselves on the artistic arrangement of our little parlor. Now, in order to make it look Bohemian, we had banked it with all the bizarre and startling things we could lay our hands on. Billy's delicate water color sketches were jostled by flamboyant posters, theatrical photographs adorned the mantel, and sundry pipes and ash trays littered the table. It certainly looked queer; but, as Betty and I confessed to ourselves, we didn't. Betty was demure in a gray gown, and I wore my black net. I was just fastening one of Harry Rockminster's roses in my hair when the bell rang.

"There she is!" cried Betty hysterically. "Now, don't act as if anything unusual were happening!"

Eleanor Cuyler was enthusiastic in her greeting, and she was still telling of her joy in seeing us when we crossed the threshold of the parlor. At sight of the room she smothered a little gasp, which showed that our work had not been in vain. Then Billy came forward, and the loose blouse and soft tie which he wore for the occasion made him look as if he had stepped straight out of the Latin quarter. But Miss Cuyler wasn't any more surprised at his appearance than he was at hers. Somehow neither Betty nor I had told him what a beauty Miss Cuyler was—a childish little beauty with a fluff of golden hair and deep blue eyes that opened very wide when anything astonished her.

Perry Dashwood and Harry Rockminster came early, but there wasn't a sign of Cynthia and Worthington.

"They're half an hour late already," said Betty to me in an aside. "What on earth can be keeping them? I'm afraid the dinner will be spoiled."

Something of our uneasiness reached Billy, and he turned abruptly to Betty. "I really think we'd better not wait for the others," he said. "They may be quite late. You never can tell what may happen on the shores of Bohemia."

But we were hardly seated before we heard the turn of Worthington's latchkey and the swish of Cynthia's skirt down the hall. She made a dramatic pause at the dining room door and looked perfectly dazzling in a crimson Spanish costume, glittering with spangles.

"I hope you won't mind my coming in costume," she said. "We were kept late at rehearsal, and there wasn't time to change. I met Worthington on the stairs," she continued nonchalantly. "He'll be in in a moment. He's a musician, Miss Cuyler, and you know what uncertain hours musicians are forced to keep, especially when they are young and struggling."

Cynthia moved toward her chair with sinuous grace. She said afterward that the Spanish costume had entered into her blood, and she wasn't responsible for anything she did. Neither was Worthington, for he wore a peculiar, shabby black coat and carried his violin under his arm. But his crowning glory was his hair, or perhaps I should say his wig, which was very long and straight.

"'The Music Master,' by Jove!" ejaculated Harry Rockminster.

Yet not once did a triumphant gleam illumine the eyes of Signor Worthington. To this day I've always wondered how he managed to keep that dreamy, abstracted expression. Of course I knew I could count on Cynthia and Worthington, but I never knew I could count on them to such an extent as that. Eleanor Cuyler was delighted. She looked at them and listened to them in open eyed wonder as if they were beings from another world. And all my fears of what Harry Rockminster would think were set at rest when he whispered, "I say, isn't this a stunning lark!"

And now if Aunt Pattie didn't act too much like a lady our Bohemian dinner would be a complete success, but one false note would ruin everything. I toyed with the grape fruit as long as possible. Then I rang the bell. As I did so I kept my eyes fixed on Billy. He sat opposite the kitchen door and would be the first to see Aunt Pattie. The kitchen door creaked, swung open, and the expression on Billy's face signaled me that something had happened.

"Aunty," he burst out and then checked himself.

From behind me came a soft voice with the pleasant slurred accent of the south. "I reckon yo's 'sprised to see me, Mars' Billy! Yo' didn't know I was to cook de dinnar, did yo'?"

I turned and beheld Aunt Pattie! And yet not Aunt Pattie! For the face that beamed from beneath a bandanna turban was as black as the ace of spades!

To Miss Cuyler this apparition was nothing more than a loquacious dusky servant, but the rest of us were in ecstasies of mirth. We have vowed ever since that we owed the whole success of the evening to Aunt Pattie, for not only was the dinner deliciously cooked and splendidly served, but it went with a whirl. Harry Rockminster was never more brilliant in his life and told stories of marvelous escapades in which he had taken part. Cynthia recited "Lasca" with true dramatic fervor. Between courses Worthington played snatches on his violin, and we all sang songs—songs for which Perry made up funny impromptu choruses. The men smoked, and through the blue haze shone the radiant face of Miss Cuyler.

When dinner was over she leaned back in her chair with a little sigh. "It's just as I fancied Bohemia would be," she declared. "Oh, what fun you all must have gathering round the table this way every evening. Of course it's just a common occurrence to you, but I shall never forget it. Never! And I can't thank you enough for this glimpse of it."

Billy said she thanked him fervently again when he saw her to her carriage. "I've had the time of my life," she reiterated, "the time of my life!"

"Well, she wasn't the only one," said Worthington. He had taken off his wig and was mopping his brow while the rest of us sat about the dining room table nibbling at the remains of dessert and teasing Aunt Pattie to have something more substantial than lobster salad and a cup of coffee.

"Miss Cuyler did seem to appreciate it," said Cynthia.

"Appreciate!" cried Billy. "I think it's we who ought to appreciate her coming! Why, just to look at her is a feast! She has exactly the kind of eyes I want for my 'Queen Titania.'"

"Why don't you ask her to pose for it, then?" suggested Cynthia slyly.

"I have asked," answered Billy quite simply, "and we are going to begin tomorrow."

"Whiff!" sniffed Betty. "I smell orange blossoms!" And under cover of the laughter Harry turned to me.

"Miss Cuyler's had the time of her life, Billy's had the time of his, and there's just one thing wanting to give me the time of mine." His lips were smiling, but there was no mistaking the look in his eyes.

"I'd hate to spoil your evening by saying 'No,'" I whispered back. And then, although I was so happy, I had an absurd desire to cry, and if Billy hadn't suddenly interrupted with a toast to the shores of Bohemia goodness knows what might have happened!

Trout's Narrow Escape.

A correspondent of the London Field relates that he shot a flying heron that had been fishing in the river Colne at Uxbridge, and as the bird fell there dropped out of its mouth a trout nearly one-half pound in weight. The fish was alive, though scored on the back. A keeper procured a live bait can, filled it with water and put the trout into it. After a minute or so the fish gained strength. In a few hours it seemed quite resuscitated and apparently none the worse for its narrow escape from death. It was accordingly returned to the river to recover itself fully.

AN INDIAN MYSTERY.

The White Woman Who Fought With the Tonto Apaches.

The following story was told by one of Arizona's early pioneers:

In 1864 Dr. Alsap and Lord Duppa, well known pioneers, were prospecting with a party in the Bradshaw mountains on the Hassayampa creek. One morning the party separated for the purpose of hunting. In going up a canyon, in which they were separated from their companions by high mountains, Duppa's detachment was attacked by a large band of Tonto Apaches. The whites gradually fought their way across the ridge with the hope of rejoining their companions. During the advance Duppa, who was stationed behind a rock, noticed that he was the particular mark of an Indian with a bow. Several arrows had fallen at his feet, and one struck him in the arm. Raising his rifle, he took aim, and just as he was touching the trigger the supposed Indian cried, "Don't shoot!" in good English, but it was too late, and the body fell over with life extinct. Soon after the two parties succeeded in forming a junction, and the Indians retreated, leaving their dead.

Out of curiosity the party returned to the place where Duppa killed the supposed Indian and found that it was a white woman, evidently about thirty years of age and dressed in all the paraphernalia of the Apaches. Investigation was made, but no trace of her former whereabouts could ever be obtained.

THE UNEXPLORED.

Many Regions of the Earth Still Remain a Mystery.

Many years will elapse before any other continent is as well mapped as Europe, and perhaps the era of perfected mapping all over the world may never come, because surveys are very expensive and the five other continents have far greater expanses than Europe of comparatively worthless lands that do not call for the most detailed and refined cartography. But a large amount of pioneer work still invites the explorer, for many of the unknown areas have much territorial extent.

In the Amazon basin, for example, three of these regions are each much larger than all of our New England states. One unknown area in northwest Alaska is nearly as large as New England, and the Sahara has two areas in black that are each twice as large and another three times as large as New England.

Asia still has several of these vast mysterious spaces, and the solid chunk of the unknown in New Guinea, the largest island in the world excepting Greenland, would swallow up New England and leave a black border all around it.—Cyrus C. Adams in Harper's.

"Leaves."

To him who is penetrated by true principles even the briefest precept is sufficient, and common precept, to remind him that he should be free from grief and fear. For example, says Homer:

Leaves—some the wind scatters on the ground—
So is the race of men.

Leaves also are thy children, and leaves, too, are they who cry out as if they were worthy of credit and bestow their praise or, on the contrary, curse or secretly blame and sneer, and leaves in like manner are those who shall receive and transmit a man's fame to aftertimes, for all such things as these "are produced in the season of spring," as the poet says. Then the wind casts them down. Then the forest produces other leaves in their places. But a brief existence is common to all things, and yet thou avoidest and pursuest all things as if they would be eternal. A little time, and thou shalt close thy eyes, and him who has attended thee to thy grave another soon will lament.

Curious Nesting Habits.

Many birds in their nesting habits have accommodated themselves to the advance of civilization. Thus the barn and cliff swallows, which once built under overhanging cliffs and in caves, now place their nests on the rafters and beneath the eaves of our barns. The chimney swift, which originally placed its nest on the inside of hollow trees, now uses our chimneys for that purpose. The purple martin, once nesting exclusively in holes in trees, will now in many sections of the country use nothing but the bird boxes which kind hearted men have erected.

Handicapped.

"Too bad about Keene. There's a fund of good humorous stuff in the antics of the would be society people in his new neighborhood."

"Well, he's just the fellow to take advantage of that for his funny sketches."

"Yes, but his wife is trying to get into society there."

He Couldn't Object.

Clerk—You can't get a room here for that man. He's drunk. Man (supporting a weary friend)—That's all right. What of that? Clerk—This is a temperance hotel. Man—Well, he's too drunk to know the difference.

Trouble Ahead.

"Is your husband up yet?" asked the early caller of the sour faced woman at the door. "I expect he is," was the reply. "I'd like to see him for a few minutes." "So would I. He hasn't come home yet."

The truth of it is those who best deserve praise have generally the most exquisite relish of it.—Steele.

EN MASQUE

By William Henry Eader

Copyright, 1906, by Ruby Douglas

It was the first night of "The Maverick's" week at the Denver Opera House, and, despite the white coat of snow that was being sifted over the city, the theater was filling rapidly.

Among the later arrivals was a young woman of the upper world, exquisitely gowned, breathing cultivation, yet with the frank air and lively eye of a nice boy, now bold, now shy, but always vivid. Her seat was in one of the lower boxes, and beside her was a vacant place, apparently for her delayed escort.

The young woman had come alone and had sat alone till the orchestra was nearly through its overture. Then the vacant seat found an occupant.

He came striding down the aisle, a splendid specimen of man. Hundreds of amused, interested eyes took in his magnificent, picturesque bulk, breathed deeper at the outdoor atmosphere of big spaces he radiated and warmed to the untamed, fearless spirit of the vanishing west that looked out of his face of bleached walnut.

The click of the high heeled, dusty riding boots into which corduroy trousers fitted snugly, the worn felt hat held negligently in a great leather cuffed hand, the handkerchief knotted loosely around the tanned throat, proclaimed more loudly than words that he was a denizen of the cow country.

The blond giant from the desert followed the usher to the vacant seat beside the daughter of civilization. The girl hastily gathered the skirt of her gown out of danger and devoted herself to studying the cast. Presently she fished a silver cased pencil from somewhere and wrote a line on the edge of the programme. The direct, impulsive side of her was just then in dominance.

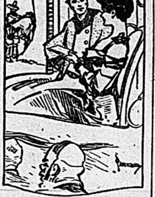
"Sir, this seat is taken," he read after she had with apparent carelessness maneuvered the paper into his line of vision.

"You're right; it is, ma'am," his pencil answered on his programme.

"I mean by a friend of mine."

"Thank you, ma'am. That's real kind and friendly."

A hot wave of color swept over her boyish face. She slanted a covert glance at him to discover whether it was innocence or audacity with which she had to contend. He was cheerfully continuing the correspondence and did not notice the start of surprise in her eye.



THE MAN BESIDE HER OFFERED FRIENDLY CONVERSE.

The rise of the curtain relieved the situation, and the girl abandoned herself to the play with an excited interest, due to the fact that her lover, Robert Messiter, had written it, with herself as the heroine.

A wide mesa was disclosed, bounded by a range of blue, snow streaked mountains. In the foreground were a couple of stunted cottonwoods, a bunch or two of cactus and a matting of dull range grass.

Presently "Sorreltop" Flanders wandered into view, dusty and hatless, spluttering range epithets at himself for his folly in allowing the ponies to have escaped. He finds time to explain to the audience that he and Miss Rhoda Esterly are lost on the desert before that dashing young woman comes limping across the stage.

That "The Maverick" is a love drama, full of the humorous extravagance and exuberance of the west, is at once apparent. The cow puncher and the colonel, the Indian and the Mexican, are all very much in evidence.

Both the daughter of civilization and the son of the desert gave a divided but extremely alert attention to the progress of the play. That her own love story, dramatized by her lover, was being enacted faithfully before her eyes was surprise enough to claim her interest.

But more than once when a remembered phrase slipped here and again from one of the actors her eyes swept round to the man beside her. Once their glances met, and she felt her cheeks burn.

When the curtain rang down the girl drew a long breath.

The man beside her offered friendly converse.

"That's the range, all right. He's certainly been on the hurricane deck of a broncho, the fellow that wrote that. Looks to me as if the scene was the Rubble mesa close to the Arapahoe buttes. Ever been there, ma'am?"

The girl met his bold eyes. "Yes, I've been there."

"Here, too," he assured her. "This here story's founded on life, ma'am. I know the fellow that wrote it. Me'n him used to be thicker than peas in a pod. Yes, ma'am, I shore have ridden over that mesa a heap with Bob Messiter. He was an educated fellow—Harvard, I think—come west for the bugs. Well, he's strong as a mule now, ma'am. I reckon you don't know him."

This seemed to demand an answer, and the young woman gave it promptly.

"I've met him."

"You don't say!" Then a light appeared to penetrate. His hand came down with a resounding slap on his knee. "By thunder, ma'am, you're the lady—the very one that old Bob Messiter got lost with and got hisself engaged to subsequent. I knew I'd seen you somewheres. Don't you all remember Jack Robins of the K. T. ranch? I'm him, ma'am."

The young woman regretted without enthusiasm that she could not remember Mr. Robins just as the curtain rang up for the second act.

It was at the next intermission that the gentleman from Cattleland delivered a monologue to his new find in twentieth century maidens.

"Yes, sir. Me and Messiter was pards two or three years back. We rode the range together and bunked together and sat at the tail end of the same chuck wagon. How I come to know him was some comical. Bob he had just come out of Harvard and was water hearted. Consequence is he went around rubbing soothin' salve on the calves after we had branded them. Oncet he got his salve bottle out and was getting ready to do the doctor act when Sorreltop Jones—the one I reckon on whose name Messiter chose as his hero of this here play—heard something buzz about a foot from Bob's hand. The bullet out of Sorreltop's six shooter arrived a short fraction of a wink before that rattler's poison."

The man stooped and found the dusty hat under his seat. "I reckon, ma'am, I got to be going. You see, one of them actor fellows is sick, and I got to stand around in his place this next act."

"Then I suppose that explains, Bob Messiter, why you are all rigged out like this," said the girl coolly.

He laughed. "That explains it, Elsie. But I didn't know you would recognize me after my taking all the trouble to mislead you. I fancy I'm not such a good actor as I have been thinking."

"My dear boy," she mocked. "Bob Messiter was to sit in this seat if his train arrived in time. Naturally I was looking for him. It did not take me long to discover that you wear a wig. Besides, I've seen too many of his letters not to recognize his writing when I see it. You'll have to do better than that before you can deceive me."

"I see I shall. Well, I'll have to take it out on the audience. All my friends are here. Watch me fool them."

"Perhaps you can," she laughed, blushing. "They're not engaged to you."

Alexander Selkirk.

"Robinson Crusoe" was published in April, 1719. A few years before, about 1712, Woodes Rogers, in his "Voyage Round the World," had given an account of his calling at the island of Juan Fernandez in 1709 and bringing away a man clothed in goats' skins, "who looked wilder than the first owners of them." His name was Alexander Selkirk, and he had been on the island four years and four months, having been left there—"on account of a difference"—by Captain Stradling of the Cinque Ports. Selkirk was born at Largo, in Fife, in 1676. All the time he was on Juan Fernandez he was in perfect solitude until discovered by Captain Rogers. Selkirk died in 1723 on board a king's ship, the Weymouth, of which he was mate, leaving his effects by will to sundry "loving female friends." His chest, his gun and his drinking cup, the last made of a cocoanut shell, are—or were till lately—the property of his descendants at Largo. Selkirk has been generally accredited as the original of Robinson Crusoe. Defoe, besides reading the account of him, may even have seen him personally.

The British Song Thrush.

The song thrush is almost the best known and most widely distributed of all British birds, and if we take into account its persistence in singing as well as the beauty of its song it perhaps deserves the first place among British songsters. The only time when it does not sing, in fact, is for a few weeks after about the middle of July. In September it may be heard beginning again in a weak and undecided fashion, the performers being usually the young birds of the year, and in mild, open weather in November it is often in brilliant song, continuing more or less frequently, except in hard frost, until the time, late in January or so, when it considers that spring and the singing season have come in good earnest. Though somewhat studied in manner and marked by repetitions in its phrases, the song of no bird is more full of spirit and vigor, and in the darkening days of November it is particularly beautiful to hear it proclaiming, as it were, the sure return of spring with almost as much force and fire as it exhibits in its true spring song.—London Express.

Criticism.

Criticisms never hurt anybody. If false, they cannot hurt you unless you are wanting in manly character, and if true they show a man his weak points and forewarn him against failure.

INSUFFICIENCY OF THE OCULAR MUSCLES.

In many cases the problem of eye-strain, like that of heart-strain, is an individual muscular problem, and the determination of the exact point where the physiological merges into the pathological (the healthy into the unhealthy) depends not only on a proper estimate of optical defects, and individual capacity for compensation, but also a careful consideration of a number of variable factors, such as age, general health and conditions under which the eyes are habitually used. But while the heart muscle has its regular intervals of complete rest, the eye muscles, in many varieties of error and in many occupations, are kept continuously on the stretch for hours at a time without relaxation of any kind. Consequently the ocular compensation often breaks down, entailing not only failure of sight, but in many cases very serious results to other organs. Do not wait for this condition. This Immigrant Was Given a Very Raw Deal

Peterboro, April 9. — Thirty-one days without a cent of remuneration, although he had been promised $18 per month, his board, a free house for himself and family, and fuel, is the latest story of the shabby treatment of an English immigrant in this country. The man in question is living in Peterboro at present, and has a position with a local wholesale firm. He has asked County Magistrate Edmison to obtain justice for him, but as the scene of the events which led up to the trouble is in South Monaghan, it is doubtful if anything can be done by the magistrate, here, as the case comes under the jurisdiction of the Northumberland county authorities.

It appears that the fellow who says he was done out of his wages has a wife and four children. They are recent arrivals from England. Wm. King, a South Monaghan farmer, had made application to one of the immigration agencies for farm help, and on reaching Toronto, the recently arrived Englishman made a bargain to go and work for him. He says he was to receive $18 per month, his board, a free house and necessary fuel. He brought his wife and four children to the farm in question and worked for the farmer for 31 days. At the end of that time King, he says refused to pay him the wages promised, in fact would not give him a cent, so he left and took his wife and family and came to Peterboro where he got a job.

The fellow seems to be honest and industrious, and anxious to get along. If he was done out of his wages, it is to be hoped that he will be able to obtain redress for the wrong that has been done him.

B. of Q. C. U. Notes.

Many clerical-looking gentlemen are to be seen on the streets of our city at present, the said divines being here for the purpose of attending the annual meeting of the Bay of Quinte Clerical Union, which convened in this city to-day. Most of the delegates came in yesterday, and yesterday afternoon there was a meeting of the Rural-Deanal Chapter in Christ church, at which annual reports were presented by the clergy of the different parishes.

Rev. Rural Dean Beamish occupied the chair with his customary urbanity, and the reports presented showed that matters are proceeding well in this diocese.

Last evening the members of the Union met in St. Thomas' church vestry, and listened to an erudite paper read by Rev. E. Costigan, of Deseronto, on "The Invocation of Saints," giving the origin of the practice in question. The paper was discussed by the members, and will be further discussed to-day.

After the meeting the clergy of the Deanery were entertained by Mrs. Beamish, whose graceful courtesy was deeply appreciated.

This morning the Union met in Christ church.

There will be a public service in Christ church this evening, at which Rev. W. S. Armitage, rector of Picton, will preach.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"WHEN THE HARVEST DAYS ARE OVER."

Few plays come as highly recommended as "When the Harvest Days Are Over," which will be presented at the Carman next Friday, under the direction of Mr. Neil Twomey. The story is said to be a very probable one and interesting from start to finish. The comedy is rich and possesses a good deal of originality. Felix Haney, who is starring in this play, is too well known to require any extra words of praise. As Hez Huckins he is said to be doing the best work of what has been a highly successful career, and his singing of Hez Huckins, the village cut-up, demands nightly seven and eight encores. Mr. Twomey has had the entire scenic production built and painted by recognized artists, and has selected a cast which is in keeping with his star.

Was A Resident Of This City 48 Years

DONALD GRAHAM, WELL KNOWN AND POPULAR, DIED LAST NIGHT.

A popular and well-known merchant of this city passed away last evening in the person of Mr. Donald Graham, who, since 1859, has been active in the commercial life of Belleville, where he carried on business as a buyer of grain and hides. Mr. Graham was 78 years of age, and was born in Islay, Scotland. He came to Belleville in 1859, and has resided here ever since. He was married to a Miss Boulter, who predeceased him. The late Mr. Graham leaves one daughter, Annie Evelyn, of this city; two brothers, John and James, and one sister, Mrs. McLean, of Beaverton, Ont. Deceased was a staunch Presbyterian, and a member of John St. church. He was respected and esteemed by all who knew him.

One of the Good Old Stock Passes Away.

MRS L. H. HENDERSON DIED LAST EVENING AT THE GRAND OLD AGE OF 89 YEARS.

One of the good old stock passed away yesterday, when Mrs. Welthy Ann Fowler, widow of the late Lieut.-Col. L. H. Henderson, departed this life.

The deceased lady, who had reached the great age of 89 years, was a descendant of one of the oldest families in this district, and, with her husband, was a leading figure in Belleville's social set in the "good old days." She was deeply esteemed for many acts of kindness and benevolence. Col. Henderson, who was for many years City Solicitor, predeceased his wife some 13 years ago.

The late Mrs. Henderson died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. R. L. Sewell North Front St. She was a devoted member of St. Thomas' church, and had been a communicant for many years.

Farewell Services of McMaster Band.

A very large congregation assembled at the Baptist Church last evening, it being the last service of the series conducted for the past two weeks by the McMaster Band.

After a bright song service, Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, of St. Andrew's Church, read the Scripture lesson and the male quartette sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

Pastor Emerson, on behalf of the church and congregation, spoke a few words of appreciation of the work accomplished by the Band. He voiced the sentiments of all the friends present when he expressed regret that this was the last service of the series. He was persuaded that no one had been in attendance at the services for the past two weeks without having received a large measure of blessing and inspiration. The gospel message had been earnestly and faithfully declared, and many had found the Saviour. He wished the Band godspeed in their efforts to extend the kingdom of God on earth. A number of requests for prayer were read by Mr. Cameron, and Mr. Warner especially prayed for the petitions thus presented.

Mr. Edwards then presented his farewell message. He said that all through this mission he had preached Christ as a Saviour: he wished now to present Him as the great Judge of Mankind. He founded his remarks upon the verse, "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ." Men, he said, in health can get along without Christ in this life, but when they are called to meet Him in judgment their sins rise up to condemn them. God is love, but He is also a God of justice, and there is no escape for the unrepentant sinner.

The quartette then sang "Blue Galilee," after which Mr. Cameron expressed his hearty thanks to those who had contributed in any way to make the mission a success. He then spoke for a few moments from the text, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." He referred to the great responsibility of choice which was laid upon each individual. Men attach great importance to the choice they make in the business world, but forget the all-important matter of choosing Christ as their guide in life. This great question confronts young and old alike, and he especially appealed to the young men present to give the best of their manhood to the service of the Master.

In the after service a goodly number manifested their acceptance of Christ as Saviour.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

That Culvert on the Bay Bridge Road.

Several complaints have been made lately in regard to a culvert on the road to the Bay bridge, which has recently been filled up. People said the said culvert drained the marsh to the north of Zwick's island, and that with the culvert filled up, the water which lays in the marsh in the spring would become stagnant and a menace to health.

The Intelligencer this morning saw Ald. Panter, chairman of Public Works, in reference to the matter, who said that the culvert had fallen into decay, and must either be repaired or filled up. By the terms of its agreement with Dr. Sprague, owner of the Bay bridge, the city is supposed to keep a certain portion of the road in repair. The culvert in question is under that certain portion of road. Dr. Sprague hinted to the city that it was "up to them" to repair the culvert.

"What shall we do to it?" said Mr. Hulme.

"Fill it up if you like," said Dr. Sprague.

And there you are.

This morning Ald. Panter telephoned Dr. Sprague, telling him there were complaints about the culvert's being filled up, inasmuch as it was believed it would be bad in a sanitary way.

The Doctor did not believe the culvert had anything to do with draining the marsh. Some years ago a Mr. Henson, C. E., had told him he could not see why the culvert had been made there. The water, he said, flowed through it at the rate of one mile in 12 hours. Hence it was of little service.

Well, to make a long story short, the culvert has been filled up. The city did the work, but the responsibility, Ald. Panter says, rests with Dr. Sprague.

A Pleasing Address.

WAS GIVEN LAST NIGHT BY COL. PONTON TO THE BROTHERHOOD OF HOLLOWAY ST. CHURCH.

Last evening a most enjoyable and profitable open meeting was held in the Sunday school parlor of Holloway St. church. The programme was opened by the male quartette singing "The Maple Leaf." The pastor led in prayer and introduced Miss Ponton who sang very acceptably a solo entitled "Canada." Mr. C. McMeenin sang "His Majesty the King," accompanied by Rex Leitch, pianist. The chairman heartily welcomed and introduced Col. Ponton, and all present found the speaker of the evening in one of his best moods for entertaining, and very much enjoyed his humor and pathos while recalling impressions made while travelling here and there in the Home Land.

The audience found great pleasure in listening to Col. Ponton's fine word pictures, as his exceptional gifts of description were made manifest.

SCORES BONUS SYSTEM

Lavergne Condemns Plan of Paying For Immigrants.

Dangers of Foreign Settlement—Not Enough Agriculturists Are Coming—"Worse Than Sikhs"—Country Sick of Secret Contracts Says Bourassa—Time to Abolish the Bonus—Would Admit Exiled Priests.

Ottawa, April 10.—In anticipation of Mr. Foster's promised deliverance upon the insurance commission's report, the galleries of the House were crowded at both afternoon and evening sittings yesterday. Mr. Foster's effort was, however, sidetracked by a discussion upon immigration, brought on by a resolution moved by Armand Lavergne, condemning the bonus system. A certain piquancy was imparted by the fact that the resolution was framed of a couple of sentences from speeches delivered in the House by Mr. Oliver three or four years ago, when he condemned the quality of immigration being brought into the Northwest under the bonus system, and, as Mr. Lavergne's resolution was moved as an amendment to the motion to go into supply, Mr. Oliver, as Minister of the Interior, was bound to oppose it.

The debate was closed by Dr. Sproule, and the Lavergne amendment declared lost on division.

Mr. Foster will be heard this afternoon, when the vote for the insurance commission comes up for discussion.

The steamship companies, Mr. Lavergne said, did not care whom they brought, so long as they got the bonus; whereas, immigration should be encouraged from the British Isles and from France and Belgium.

Mr. Lavergne argued that, in ten years, at the present rate, Canada will hold a foreign population of 5,000,000 out of a total of 11,000,000.

Asked by Col. Sam Hughes if he would favor the immigration of priests exiled by order of the French Government, Mr. Lavergne replied that, at any rate, they would be better than Galicians or Cockneys, who were worse than Sikhs.

Look to Britain.

The Minister of Interior declared that the Government did not encourage any but agricultural immigrants. Under present conditions, a dollar spent in Great Britain would bring more results than a dollar spent in France or Germany.

"Without comparing one immigrant with another," said Mr. Oliver, "surely in this British country it is fair to say that, all things being equal, we look to the British immigrant as the most desirable immigrant." He accused Mr. Lavergne of having made a speech which was calculated to set section against section, race against race, creed against creed.

Mr. Bourassa replied that the Minister had endeavored to evade the issue raised by Mr. Lavergne. He had not denied effectively that the Government still paid bonuses, nor that there was a contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company.

The Minister described it as a "tacit" contract.

"Sir," declared Mr. Bourassa, "the people of Canada are sick of tacit contracts and secret contracts."

The Peril of the West.

Mr. Bourassa denounced the policy by which the Government permitted railway companies to discriminate against people from Ontario and Quebec, desiring to settle in the Northwest, and in favor of the imported Galician or the Doukhobor. In 30 years the Canadian Parliament would be controlled by a majority from the west, four-fifths of whom were foreign born. He saw grave danger to the stability of the Canadian union in the influx of Americans into the Northwest.

Mr. Lemieux urged that Canada should open the gates to all desirable classes of immigrants. He gave a most strenuous denial to the report which he said was being disseminated by a section of Quebec, namely, that the Government did not encourage immigration from old France. But the fact was the French do not emigrate, never did to any extent.

Time to Abolish Bonuses.

R. L. Borden observed that it was not so much a matter of paying bonuses as the manner in which the bonuses were paid that mattered. It might be possible to get as good emigrants with as without bonuses, and for that reason he would not support the motion. The abolition of bonuses would retard immigration from the British Isles, while his own opinion was that the bonus system should be confined to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Fisher denied the accusation of Mr. Lavergne that Commissioner Hutcheson at the Liege exhibition had ordered Quebec literature to be relegated to the cellar. He said the policy of the department was to distribute at exhibitions only Dominion literature, and this dealt with all provinces equally.

The Government's policy was to condone land speculation and to encourage settlement only in those parts of the country where their political friends held lands for speculative purposes.

PENSION BILL PASSES.

Senator Ferguson Fails In Effort to Regulate G. T. R. Fund.

Ottawa, April 10.—In the Senate yesterday Sir Mackenzie Bowell resumed the debate on Senator Ferguson's motion to amend the Grand Trunk pension bill by providing that the company cannot ask employes to waive rights to damages for injury or death in the company's service. Sir Mackenzie said the Grand Trunk was going to furnish all the money and should be given the right to make regulations.

Senator G. W. Ross stated that apparently the Grand Trunk wanted to be able to do something generous for its employes. It hardly seemed necessary to charge them with a sinister purpose.

Senator Lougheed said the employes of the Grand Trunk had apparently not asked for the amendment.

Senator Sullivan thought there was no harm in making assurance doubly sure. The bill proposed to give the company power to make rules, regulations and bylaws, and this power might easily be used by some future management of the company to the disadvantage of the employes.

Senator McMullen saw no reason to doubt the good intention of the Grand Trunk. Senator Bernier offered an amendment to the amendment declaring that nothing in the bill should take away any right the employes had at the present time. Senator Ferguson offered to withdraw his amendment if the Government would accept this.

Senator Cloran said he had consulted the Minister of Justice about the bill, and thought the protective clause should be put in.

Senator Bernier's amendment was rejected by 27 to 18, and Senator Ferguson's amendment was declared lost on division. The bill was given its third reading and passed.

Bills Passed.

The following bills were passed: Respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Co.; for the relief of Arthur Leo McPherson; to regulate the exportation of electric power and certain liquids and gases; and respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Co.

St. John, N. B., April 10.—A bill was introduced in the Legislature for public control of telephones.

AGRARIANS DEFY CZAR.

Land Appropriation Sole Salvation of Peasantry.

St. Petersburg, April 10.—The whole session in the Lower House of Parliament was given up to agrarian debates, in spite of the threats of the official Russia that the advocacy of compulsory appropriation of lands might result in the dismissal of the Douma.

Every speaker, except the Conservatives, urged this as the sole salvation of the peasantry.

The relations between the Lower House of Parliament and the Administration are daily becoming more acute on account of Premier Stolypin's repeated rebukes of the Lower House for overstepping its competence.

Yesterday the Premier addressed three new letters to President Golovin, calling the Lower House to account for further alleged illegal acts and demanding that steps be taken to prevent their repetition.

Girl Drowns Herself.

Port Hope, April 10.—A young girl named Jameson, of about 20 years of age, employed as a domestic for the last couple of years, sought a watery grave about 8.30 last night, just as the schooner Oliver Mowat cleared for Oswego.

She went down to say good-bye to a young man on the vessel, who had been keeping company with her for some time. Some men frustrated her first attempt to throw herself into the water, but later on she succeeded in her purpose. McMahon Brothers, after two hours' dragging, secured the body.

Archbishop Mauled.

Brandon, Man., April 10.—A ludicrous incident occurred here, when Archbishop Serafin, the eccentric ecclesiastic of Winnipeg, who claims to be the head of the Greek Church in Canada, and religious dictator of the Ruthenians, attempted to hold service in the Galician Catholic Church here.

They refused to permit him to even enter the sacred building, and when he attempted to force his way in he was picked up bodily and carried to the street and thrown in the mud.

HOW THEY SQUIRMED

GREAT TIMES WHEN CHILDREN HAD TO TAKE OLD-FASHIONED COD LIVER OIL AND EMULSIONS

You had to bribe them, hold their noses, in fact go through a regular circus to get them to take it.

That was years ago, before the two eminent French chemists, Morgues and Gautier, discovered how to separate the medicinal elements of the cod's liver from the useless, nauseating oil, and produced Vinol.

Vinol is not a patent medicine but a real cod liver preparation containing in a highly concentrated form all of the body-building, strength creating elements of cod liver oil actually taken from fresh cods' livers, with all the useless oil eliminated and tonic iron added. It tastes fine and children love it. Wherever old-fashioned cod liver oil or emulsions will do good, Vinol will do far more good.

Our local druggist, J. S. McKeown, says: "It is because we know so well of what Vinol is made that we ask every mother who has a weak, delicate or ailing child, and in fact every run-down, debilitated, aged or weak person in Belleville, and every person suffering from stubborn colds, hanging-on coughs or bronchitis to try Vinol on our offer to return their money if it fails."—J. S. McKeown, druggist.

Toronto Live Stock.

Toronto, April 9.—Receipts of live stock at the City Market since Friday, as reported by the railways, were 59 car loads, composed of 923 cattle, 693 hogs, 217 sheep and 217 calves.

Exporters.

A few lots of good quality exporters sold from $5 to $5.40, but not more than half a dozen cattle brought the latter price, the bulk selling from $5.12½ to $5.25, but there would not be more than two or three loads all told. Bulls sold from $3.75 to $4.25 per cwt.

Butchers.

Prime picked lots of butchers' sold at $5.10 to $5.25; good sold at $4.75 to $5; medium, $4.50 to $4.70; common butchers' and good cows, at $4 to $4.35; common to medium cows, $3.50 to $4; canners, $1.50 to $2.25.

Feeders and Stockers.

Harry Murby reports not many feeders and stockers on sale. The demand for good quality is growing, as there are many dealers, as well as farmers, making enquiries for both classes. Mr. Murby got about two loads and quotes prices unchanged.

Milch Cows.

There were few offered and generally of common to medium quality. Prices ranged from $30 to $48 each.

Veal Calves.

Prices were inclined to be easier all round, ranging from $3 to $6.50 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

The run was light, with prices firm for all of good quality. Export sheep sold at $5 to $5.50 per cwt.; rams, $4 to $4.50; yearling lambs of good quality, $7.50 to $7.85; common lambs, $5.50 to $6.50; spring lambs, at $4 to $7.50 each.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris quotes selects at $6.65; lights and fats at $6.40 per cwt.

Reads Own Death Notice.

Evansville, April 10.—Thrown into a state of nervous prostration by reading an account published in a newspaper of her supposed death, Mrs. Louisa Duley, aged 49 years, expired Monday night. Through an error the death of a woman of the same name was reported as having occurred in Mrs. Duley's home. She read the story and began to cry, "I am dead, I am dead! I saw it in the paper," dying in hysterics.

St. Lawrence Is Receding.

Montreal, April 10.—Contrary to all precedents, the water in the River St. Lawrence is receding at a time when it is customary for it to go up with a rush and threaten floods.

This is attributed in some measure to the continued cold weather.

Convicted of Murder.

Rochester, N. Y., April 10.—The jury in the case of Fred Schultz returned a verdict of murder in the second degree late yesterday, for killing Edward Pullman, the village watchman at Soduse, on March 22 of last year, during a robbery of the bank.

The Peace Conference.

The Hague, April 10.—Two o'clock in the afternoon, June 15, has been fixed for the opening of the second peace conference here.

Admits Bigamy.

Stratford, April 11.—Leslie Harris, a young Grand Trunk fireman, appeared yesterday on a charge of bigamy, and pleaded guilty. It is alleged he had a wife and son in Portage la Prairie when he married Jessie Harwood of West Zorra last February.

C.P.R. Trackmen Get Advance.

Winnipeg, April 11.—All the trackmen between the lakes and Vancouver on the Canadian Pacific Railway yesterday received an advance of 8 per cent. in their wages, representing a general increase of half a million dollars annually.

Overland Train Wrecked.

Pendleton, Ore., April 11.—The west bound Oregon and Navigation Overland passenger train was wrecked near Cayuse yesterday.

Two tramps were killed, the fireman is missing, and fifteen passengers were hurt.

Violated Alien Labor Law.

Kingston, April 11.—W. R. Acton, proprietor of the Gananoque Harness Works, has been summoned before the police magistrate on a charge of violating the alien labor law by importing a man from the United States.

Drank Carbolic Acid.

Hamilton, April 11.—Sadie Frohman, 145 South John street, a girl 19 years of age, tried to end her life by drinking carbolic acid. St. Joseph's Hospital doctors hold out little hope of recovery.

Southern Officer Killed.

Mobile, Ala., April 11.—It is learned that Gen. Lee Christmas of Memphis, Tenn., an officer in the Honduran army, was cut to pieces by Nicaraguan soldiers.

LATE SPEAKER BURIED.

Funeral of Hon. Mr. St. John Attended by Many Thousands.

Toronto, April 11.—Hundreds of citizens who had been pleased to regard Hon. J. W. St. John as a personal friend, and thousands who knew of him and respected him, yesterday paid their last sad tribute to him.

Ten thousand persons, it was estimated, passed the casket as it lay in state in the Speaker's apartments at the Parliament Buildings yesterday morning. The apartments were draped in black, the portrait of the late Speaker hanging on the south wall. The floral tributes were banked around the casket.

The chief mourners at the funeral were Mr. St. John's brothers, James and William Glover; his brothers-in-law, Henry and John Glendinning, and their wives, Mr. St. John's sisters; Dr. Glendinning, his nephew; W. J. Paulin, nephew, and Mr St. John's son and daughters. Mrs St. John did not feel strong enough to attend.

The Government was fully represented by Premier Whitney and the other Cabinet Ministers, and by the greater number of the members of the House. Premier Whitney and Hon. G. P. Graham marched side by side, as honorary pall-bearers.

Lieut.-Goverenor Mortimer Clark, Major Macdonald, A. D. C., and Major Fraser, secretary, also attended.

The final ceremonies of the Masonic ritual were conducted at the cemetery chapel, and were very impressive, the Doric Quartette taking the recitative and vocal parts

After the ceremonies were over, the casket and the flowers were removed to the vault, from whence it will be taken for interment later.

The Judge Against Thaw

Prisoner's Only Hope Now Is In Disagreement Of Jury.

Justice Fitzgerald Says Law Presumes Thaw Sane--Irresistible Impulse No Excuse--Attorney Jerome Wipes Away Sentiment Introduced by Delmas--Makes Scathing Attack on Theory Of Defence.

New York, April 11.—After having been retired for nearly seven hours yesterday, it was announced at midnight that the jury, with whom the fate of Harry K. Thaw now rests, would be locked up for the night.

The life of Harry Thaw yesterday will go down as the most trying he has ever experienced. From the opening of court until the jury retired the fates dealt unmercifully with him. He left the courtroom dejected and with apparently little hope left for an acquittal.

Thaw Discouraged.

In District Attorney Jerome's final argument and throughout the judge's charge Thaw had to listen to a scathing attack upon his wild life, and to a narrative of hard facts which stripped his deeds of the halo of chivalric glory which his own attorneys placed over them.

The judge's charge, lasting about an hour, was a careful and concise outline of the law, and informed the jury of its right of rendering any one of the following four verdicts: Murder in the first degree; murder in the second degree; manslaughter in the first degree, or not guilty on the ground of insanity. The statute governing the plea of insanity was defined clearly, much stress being laid on the fact that an irresistible impulse to kill has no place in the law.

The judge also informed the jury that an illusion, unless the illusion, if true, might result in the injury of the man suffering it, could not be accepted as an excuse.

"Proof of partial or incipient insanity is not sufficient as an excuse. The settled law of the state is that so long as the power to appreciate the nature and quality of the act is present, no man must commit crime if he would escape the consequences," he said.

"If he cocks, aims and discharges a revolver, as it is alleged here, did he know when he cocked and fired the weapon that the act was wrong and would probably destroy a life, and did he know the act was forbidden by law? That is the question which the law must have answered.

Presumes Thaw Sane.

"The legal presumption is that the defendant was sane when he committed the act. It was not incumbent upon the prosecution to introduce preliminary testimony to show that he was sane. Whoever denies sanity must prove that insanity is present. The law assumes that all men are sane, as it assumes all men are innocent.

"The hypothetical questions, which were answered by the experts, assumed certain facts, and the answer was only the opinion of the experts on these assumed facts. You are not obliged, nor are you permitted, to accept opinions as you would facts. In considering the testimony of medical experts, you are to consider their experience and knowledge, and you should consider the quality of the medical testimony, and not its quantity.

Guided By Evidence.

"The so-called irresistible impulse has no place in the law, and is not an excuse, nor is every person of disordered mind excused. As the burden of proof of insanity is on the defendant, he is also entitled to every reasonable doubt on the subject. If the defendant knew the nature or the quality of his act, or knew that the act was wrong, then he committed a crime. All men differ mentally and physically, and this makes it impossible, as I said before, for the court to lay down a fixed rule as showing deliberation and premeditation.

"You must be guided, gentlemen, entirely on the evidence. Clamor, prejudice or sympathy must not prevail. You must be guided by your reason and your judgment."

The district attorney's summing up evoked many comments of praise from those who read it. It was a comprehensive, logical and forceful review of all the evidence adduced, devoid of flowery phraseology. His arguments were consistent with the testimony.

Jerome's Attack.

"It was the desire of this girl to be a great actress that caused her to play between these two men until she brought one of them to his grave," he said.

"Men of this jury, there is in this case every element of the simply vulgar, everyday tenderloin homicide.

"If the defendant were any person but the rich Harry Thaw of Pittsburg; if he were the son of a padrone in Elizabeth street; if Stanford White were not a leading architect, but a Chinaman in Mott street; if this girl were a chorus girl in the London Theatre on the Bowery, how long would the 'brainstorm' or the paranoia theory be listened to?"

The real question here is, said Jerome, whether New York City is to become a mining camp.

"If this sort of thing can go on—if the only thing between a citizen and his enemy is a brainstorm, then every man had better carry a gun.

"Mr. Delmas appealed to the Scriptures. Let me, too, direct your attention to them, to what the Lord said: 'Vengeance is mine, and I will repay.'

"Let me also remind you of the great fundamental laws founded down the ages—the commandment of God—'Thou shalt not kill.'"

The jury is said to be almost hopelessly divided and none of those connected with the case would venture the hope last night of anything better than a disagreement as the climax of the long drawn out and expensive trial.

WILL DEFY THE ACT.

C. P. R. Will Move Their Trucks on Sunday as Before.

Montreal, April 11.—The C. P. R. have withdrawn their instructions to their employes in Winnipeg and the West regarding Sunday work.

The men will, accordingly, work on Sundays and relieve the blocks and delays which are occurring to the stock trains.

This is against the provisions of the Lord's Day Act, and the Lord's Day Alliance will probably be moved to take action against the company. Probably this is what the railway companies are aiming at, as if an action results they can then apply for an investigation to inquire into the working of the new act as it applies to the railroads.

If the companies can show that the interests of shippers are menaced by the act, and that unnecessary suffering is caused to the cattle in these efforts to keep the Lord's Day holy, it may result in an amendment permitting the transportation of cattle on that day, with as much humanity and despatch as on a Wodin's day or Thor's day.

RUSH TO MINING CAMPS.

Three Thousand Men Invade Larder Lake District—10,000 Expected.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., April 11.—During the past few days, according to a report brought here by a miner, three thousand men invaded the Larder Lake district, where gold ores rivalling the Cobalt silver ore, are claimed to have been found. More are coming every day, and teamsters are getting $60 a load for hauling supplies. The only building in the place has 12 bunks, and it is a hard problem to handle the rush.

One miner claims he was offered $400,000 for his claim by an American syndicate.

Stories of vast wealth in the hills started the biggest rush ever known in Canada. It is expected that 10,000 people will arrive during the next few weeks, hundreds coming from the United States.

ENGINE FLUES BURST.

G. T. R. Fireman Met Peculiar Death Near Ingersoll—Brakeman Injured.

Ingersoll, Ont., April 11.—An accident which resulted in the instant death of A. W. Smith of Sarnia, fireman of a G. T. R. freight train, west bound, occurred at Patton's Siding, three miles west of here, at 7.15 o'clock yesterday morning, caused by the flues of the engine blowing out. The engineer made his escape by following the running board of the engine and jumping, while the front brakeman, whose name could not be learned, had his hands and face rather seriously injured. Smith either jumped or was blown from the engine. When picked up by sectionmen he was dead, and his cap burning. His head was crushed by coming in contact with a rail.

The engine was disabled by the accident and the train had to be hauled to London.

May Take Ocean Voyage.

London, April 11.—Mrs. (Hon.) C. S. Hyman has returned from Coronado Beach, California, where she spent the winter with Mr. Hyman.

The Minister of Public Works felt well enough a month ago to undertake the journey homeward by easy stages. At Los Angeles, where he intended staying a few days en route for Canada, he was attacked by his old enemy, insomnia, and suffered such a setback that it was deemed wise to return to Coronado Beach. Mr. Hyman is still there and his Montreal, in April, so far, has had a snowfall of 20 inches. Snowshoeing is by no means a lost art in that city.

That Canada has quite a problem to solve in the foreigners who have arrived in recent years can be judged by the following illuminating incident, told in a despatch from Montreal:

Three Italians were arrested by Constable Hogan on St. Charles Borromee and Dorchester streets yesterday. Two of them were cutting at one another with stilettos, and the other was so wrathy at the idea of an officer of the law wanting them to stop that he drew a revolver on the constable.

"I notice," said a citizen, "that the School Board is coming in for quite a few rubs because of the increased rate of taxation this year. But why? The School Board simply asked for money to provide things which had been recommended by their School Inspector, and he, by the way, as I understand it, had the statute on his side when he made the recommendations. Why, then, the criticism of the Board of Education?"

• • •

The position of the gentleman quoted above might be stronger were it not that others are inclined to think the School Board has been a little too economical in the past, and have allowed things to drift along, instead of spending a moderate amount in improvements each year, thus guarding against a large expenditure in any one year. It seems to be a new application of an old principle: "A stitch in time," etc.

Lots of people sick, and they blame the climate. Nonsense! The climate is all right—if you have lungs and tubes of leather.

"Yes," said a member of the Council, "the tax rate is pretty high, but not so high as it should be. Look at that $3000 for the Grier St. school. The idea of issuing debentures for such a sum as that! It should have been put in the estimates and cleared off at once. As it is now the city will be paying interest for ten years."

"The Public Works appropriation looks high," says Ald. Panter, "but it must not be forgotten that the new crusher has to be paid for out of the $9,400. After that is paid for the appropriation will only be about $1000 larger than last year, and Front St. to be looked after, too!"

• • •

The following interesting side-light is thrown by a contemporary on the case of Lord Aylmer: "It begins to look as if Lord Aylmer's enforced retirement from the office of Inspector-General has for its main object the promotion of several other gentlemen within the next few months to a position in which they may draw a retiring allowance of $4,200 a year. If this system were applied in all the other branches of the public service the gaiety of life in Ottawa would be appreciably enhanced."

• • •

The lack of small houses is beginning to be seriously felt in this city. Capitalists might find worse investments for their money than building a class of houses that would rent from $5 to $7 per month. Such dwellings are badly needed just now, and will be worse needed in the future.

The Premier of Ontario is evidently a believer in the methods of the "good old days," as witness the following extract from Legislative proceedings:

Allan Studholme enquired whether there was not already a law to prevent children going to school without shoes and stockings.

"I remember," replied Mr. Whitney, reminiscently, "when children went to school without either shoes or stockings, and I think the results will compare favorably with those trained under the hot house methods of the present day."

THE NAKED TRUTH.

(Hamilton Herald.)

Mr. Delmas, in his address to the jury, compared Harry Thaw with the mediaeval knights of chivalry. "Why should we admire the chivalry of the knights of the middle ages?" he asked, "who went about redressing the wrongs of maidens in distress, and withhold sympathy from this brave man?" The "brave man" is the libertine who bought Evelyn Nesbit with cash, kept her as his mistress for over a year, married her because he had to, and, through ordinary everyday jealousy, shot an unarmed man dead without warning and without giving him a chance to defend himself.

He has been surrounded with a strong company of well-known artists and a beautiful scenic production.

Rat Hunt On Streets of the Ancient Capital

Quebec, April 10. — An unusual scene of excitement was witnessed in Lower Town this afternoon. Owing to the high easterly winds that have prevailed for the last three days the water rose to an abnormal height in the River St. Lawrence, and especially opposite the city, because the ice at Cap Rouge would not allow the waters to pass up the river.

The result was that the water flowed over the wharves and made Dalhousie street a regular lake, flooded all the cellars of Lower Town and caused the water rats to swarm pell mell through the streets, chased by hundreds of men and boys, who went wild in their endeavor to kill them. The flood caused a great inconvenience to passengers crossing to Levis from Quebec on the ferry boat, who were unable to reach them without the aid of boats, and being subject to a charge of twenty-five cents. Merchants in Lower Town in anticipation of to-morrow's high tide are removing their goods from the ground floor to a more secure place of storage.

Eye Strain

CAUSES

Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

FAKE HAIR PREPARATIONS.

Do Hair No Good, But Often Cause It to Fall Out.

Many hair preparations are "fake" because they are merely scalp irritants. They often cause a dryness, making the hair brittle and, finally, lifeless. Dandruff is the cause of all trouble with hair. It is a germ disease. The germ makes cuticle scales as it destroys the hair's vitality, causing it to fall out. To cure dandruff, the germ must be killed. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Newbro's Herpicide is the only hair preparation that kills the dandruff germ, thereby leaving the hair to grow luxuriantly. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. Two sizes, 50c and $1.00. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Gold And Prices.

English, German and American statistics indicate that for ten years past commodity prices have been advancing. Mr. Sauerbeck's tables, as quoted by the New York Sun, show the rise during the decade in the English index-numbers to have been: 1896, 61; 1897, 62; 1898, 64; 1899, 68; 1900, 75; 1901, 70; 1902, 69; 1903, 69; 1904, 70; 1905, 72. The Boer war caused the temporary reaction after 1900. The index number for 1906 will reflect a further gain over 1905. The statistics compiled by the United States Bureau of Labor show that the course of American prices has been much the same. The index-number rose from 90.4 in 1896 to 115.9 in 1905.

This world-wide advance in commodity prices is attributed largely to the phenomenal increase in the world's gold output. From $95,392,000 in 1833 the annual production of the yellow metal has risen $404,649,000, and the increase is still in full swing. The situation will be made clearer by the following table showing the total output of gold for selected periods since 1830:

1831-40	$ 134,928,000
1841-50	363,928,000
1851-60	1,332,981,000
1881-90	1,060,056,000
1891-00	2,101,241,000
1901-06	2,016,000,000

The increase in the gold output after the Australian and California gold discoveries was accompanied by a rise of prices equal to 25 per cent. between 1850, and it is argued that the present much greater influx of the yellow metal is exerting a similar influence. This line of reasoning is backed up the fact that the records for nearly four centuries back show that revolutionary changes in the production of the money metals have never failed to be followed by revolutionary changes in prices. This is not to say that other factors are not at work all the time. And the moment there is no prospect of any slackening in the gold output, and the deduction is that commodity prices will go on rising. This is not cheering to the salaried man, or to the individual whose income is a fixed quantity.

Laurier Regime Nearing Its End.

SENTIMENT IS STRONGLY AGAINST IT IN EVERY PROVINCE.

A Montreal despatch says:

Commercial travellers in the city from eastern and western Canada are almost unanimous in expressing belief that the Laurier Government is riding to a fall, and that speedily.

The sentiment is the same in every part of the country. Even Quebec has wearied of the Government, and will not longer be found affording Sir Wilfrid Laurier the support the province has given him since 1896.

It is felt that the Premier has lost his grip in Parliament. He has failed to gather and to keep about him the men the country demands in a government.

"The west has already shown its temper," said a commercial man whose territory is from Winnipeg to the coast. "Manitoba and British Columbia were simply voting against Laurier when they returned the Roblin and McBride governments. Neither of these governments were of themselves strong. But with Laurier in the discussion their success was made certain.

"Look at the result in Manitoba. The provincial Liberals were confident of winning, and based their hopes for a landslide upon the evident dissatisfaction with several acts and omissions of the provincial government. But Laurier began to figure in the contest and that settled it. The confident Liberals were routed. If the new provinces were to speak to-day they would join hands with the provinces on either side of them."

Ontario commercial men say the province is more strongly than ever opposed to Laurier and the provinces down by the sea will have a startling story to tell. Fielding cannot deliver a solid Nova Scotia a second time and Premier Pugsley in the Dominion Cabinet will not help matters.

EUREKA!

Yes, I Have Found it at Last.

Found what? Why that Chamberlain's Salve cures eczema and all manner of itching of the skin. I have been afflicted for many years with skin disease. I had to get up three or four times every night and wash with cold water to allay the terrible itching, but since using this salve in December, 1905, the itching has stopped and has not troubled me — ELDER JOHN T. What A Farmer's Wife Owes To Bileans.

Mrs. John Whitfield, Swan Lake (Man.), writes; "I can hardly describe how bad I felt before I took Bileans. I could not eat but what it caused pain. There was a sensation of tightness in my side and my liver was entirely out of order. I could not sleep at nights, suffered also from kidney trouble, and was, altogether, in a very serious condition. I had been ailing in this way for years and it is gratifying to find that Bileans were equal to my case."

Children's Aid Society.

The need and importance of a Children's Aid Society in Belleville, to help and befriend neglected and homeless children, has been realized for a long time past by many of our citizens, and Mr. J. J. Kelso, superintendent of the work for the Province, writes that he thinks some effort ought to be made at organization. With this end in view, he is arranging for one of his assistants, Mr. S. Thomson, to spend a few days in Belleville in the near future, discussing the subject with leading citizens and finding out those who will take hold of the Society and make it an assured success. Mr. Kelso will be pleased to hear from anyone who is interested in this important subject.

Eyes.

(From the London Mail.)

Professor Stirling, in his lecture on eyes at the Royal Institution yesterday, gave some instruction in the art of winking. "It requires a veritable education to wink," he remarked, "although blinking is very simple."

He told the audience many strange things about their eyes. The eyelashes, for instance, contain from 100 to 150 hairs on the upper and 80 to 90 on the lower lid; these hairs are replaced about every 100 days. "Run your finger outward along your eyebrows," he advised, "and you will experience a most pleasant sensation; run in the opposite direction and you will have a revelation of the exquisite sensitiveness of your eye."

Tears are of three kinds, he continued:

1—Natural tears, the little flood which Nature secretes in the eye to wash away all the dust particles:

2—Psychic tears, which flow when minds are for the moment unbalanced: and

3—Alcoholic tears.

Tears do not always overflow, because there is just a little oily secretion along the edges of our eyelids which keeps the fluid back.

"The Japanese have a peculiar overlapping fold, which obscures the real edge of the eyelid. That is why their eyes look slanting. And babies"—all the mothers in the room bent forward—"have just the same fold on their eyes, if you look for it."

Because He Was a Man.

It was so hot in the night nursery! Mother and father were out to dinner and nurse gone down to her supper.

The gas was turned down almost to a spark, and gloomy shadows haunted the room.

"I'm so tirsty," wailed the baby, kicking back the sheet and peering over her cot rails at the drowsy six-year-old brother.

"Suck your tongue hard and wet'll come into your mouth."

Baby sucked hard.

"It's all dry. Oh, I'm so tirsty! Get me a drink.

Geoff pretended to sleep. How could he face the terrors of that long dark nursery?

"Please, Deffery?"

Dead silence.

Baby gave a little sob and swallowed two salt tears. Then Geoff pulled himself together and remembered he was a man. But, oh, the misery of stepping out of bed not knowing whether there was a bear underneath it! His face was hot, and he ran trembling toward the washstand.

Baby rattled her cot rails in eager anticipation; the sound made Geoff think that something was after him. He could not run with a glass of water, and went stumbling through the darkness shivering with fright.

"Ah-h," said the baby, drinking greedily; "Fank you, dear."

But the hero who had faced the shadows was already tightly curled up in bed and breathing hard. The perils of the journey had exhausted him, but the sense of duty done came as he murmured, "I had to do it, cos she's only a girl."—New York Globe.

Asks Back Salary.

Kingston, Ont., April 10.—St. Paul's Church vestry has had a warm surprise since its engagement of a vicar, by receiving a bill from Archdeacon Carey, rector, for $3,300 for back salary extending over the past 30 years. It has been the archdeacon's custom to take whatever remained, after liabilities were met, as the church was quite well endowed for ministerial support. The cause of the action is said to be due to the proposed purpose of the vestry to seek to revert certain benefactions from the rector to other uses and the bill is an outcome of the trouble.

Mr. Hamilton's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Mr. Lindsay H Hamilton took place this afternoon from the family residence, Merchants bank, Pinnacle street. Fully choral services were held at St. Thomas' church, and the impressive burial services were conducted by the Rev. Rural Dean Beamish. Many beautiful floral tributes were placed upon the casket by relatives and friends. The bearers were Messrs. A. Gillen, R. E. Lazier, K. Taylor, R. E. Orr, W. Thomson and Ald. Butler.

After 70 Years

On Tuesday last, in the Ontario Legislature, $400 was given to Misses Elizabeth and Mary Ann O'Carroll, of this city. And thereby hangs an interesting tale. Their father, who was a storekeeper at Belleville, supplied the Imperial troops in the rebellion of 1837, thereby incuring the enmity of "rebel" sympathizers. He suffered loss to his stock in a riot, and the grant is to make compensation to his daughters after 70 years. Thus it comes about that it was left to the Whitney Government to do some justice—after 70 years, including 32 years of Grit government—to a couple of unfortunate ladies.

Filling Up the Park.

A large quantity of scrapings from the streets and earth from foundations which are being made is at present being deposited upon Victoria park, and a number of men are engaged in levelling it off. When completed, and the space is covered with grass, it will be a great improvement to that beautiful spot.

TIMELY TOPICS.

WHEN THE BAND IS MARCHING BY.

In a whisper, whisper, whisper, comes the murmur of the band,
In a driftin' bit of shadow of a tune
I understand,
An' as faint an' soft an' soothin' as the murmur of each part Stirs an echo of the music on the harpstrings of my heart,
For it's growin' clearer, clearer, an'
the notes are quick an' clean
An' the band is marchin' nearer to
"The Wearin' of the Green."

Now it's throbbin', throbbin', throbbin', from the middle of the street
An' it's sobbin', sobbin', sobbin', with an accent low and sweet,
An' the drum is thrummin', thrummin',
to the timin' of the tune
An' the melody is humin' in a half-forgotten
croon—
An' my heart leaps up an' crosses all the seas that lie between
While the band is marchin' onward to
"The Wearin' of the Green."

Sure, I see the little pathway that a barefoot lad I trod,
An' I smell the old-time incense of the old-time blessed sod,
An' the winds that blow from Erin bring the fair old days to me
With a thousan' fading pictures of the days that used to be,
An' I see the banks of shamrock an'
the brook that played between
While, the band goes marchin' past me to "The Wearin' of the Green."

Now it's dimmin', dimmin', dimmin', till the music dies away
An' my eyes are wet an' brimmin' with the tears that come this day,
For I left it all behind me, but this day it always seems
That the old songs come an' find me with their host of heart-held dreams—
So again I live the old days in each unforgotten scene
Though the band has marched to silence with "The Wearin' of the Green."

After seven weeks of psychological research, conducted upon practical lines, Judge McKenzie Cleland, of the Maxwell street court, Chicago has come to the conclusion that good food is an important factor in the reform of delinquent husbands. Instead of sentencing the husband, the wife will be sentenced in the future to feed proper food to her spouse. The Judge's experiments have shown that good food will force the most neglectful husband to forget his evil ways and to return to the straight and narrow path. Instead of fines and sentences to the workhouse, Judge Cleland will hereafter say to the wife: "Two weeks on ham and eggs, varied by hot biscuits, mashed potatoes and steak." In last week's review of paroled husbands there were fifty who had been placed upon their honor, and good food.

The Senate of the State of Utah has passed a bill making the playing of bridge, for prizes a crime. The measure went through the State almost unanimously. To play bridge is made a felony punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary for from two to five years. According to rumor the lower half of the State Legislature would also pass the measure, and there seems to be no doubt that it would receive the assent of the Governor. At first sight this seems to be a very great perversion of legislative powers, for there is a vast difference between playing for prizes and playing for stakes. But it is quite possible that in Utah there may be special reasons for such a measure. To play bridge for prizes in a home in which there are several wives to one husband might lead to much quarrelling, and, perhaps, break up the home.

It seems to be the general belief in railways circles that there is much more than appears on the surface at the bottom of the deal whereby Hill has secured the services of Mr. F. H. McGuigan, of the Grand Trunk, for his system of railways at a salary of $10,000 a year than the mere desire to obtain the benefit of Mr. McGuigan's great experience and abilities. It is stated that one of the reasons which influenced Mr. Hill to make so great a bid for the Grand Trunk manager's services was the fact of his intimate knowledge of Canadian railway affairs and especially his ability as a railway builder. It therefore is no secret that Mr. McGuigan will be heard from in the near future in connection with Mr. Hill's ambitious projects near and even over the Canadian border to Hudson's Bay.

Overheard In a Georgia Kitchen.

Not long ago an old colored cook in an Atlanta family was visited by one of her friends, who had but recently come from "down in de country," where both had been raised. The visitor was received with genuine darky cordiality and given a comfortable corner of "de white folks' kitchen." The Atlanta cook asked all kinds of questions as to what had been "gwine on" down in her old home, and among other queries was:

"What's cum er Mandy what use ter stay at Miss Willie's?"

"Law! Ain't you h'yeerd?"

"No!"

"She in jail."

"Hush!"

"Yaas, she is."

"What fer?"

"I d'no 'jes' what fer, but de man come an' 'res' her, an' de jedge fine her five an' cost, an' put her in de jail house. Miss Willie say hit wuz er shame ter 'res' a good cook like Mandy, an' she sen' her husban' down ter pay de fine, but Mandy say, 'Nem mine; she jes' stay whar she wuz till de time wuz out, 'cause she need de rest.' London, April 10.—Liverpool and London cables are firmer at 11½c to 12½c per lb., dressed weight; refrigerator beef is quoted at 8½c to 8¾c per lb.

Montreal Live Stock.

Montreal, April 10.—(Special.)—Receipts were 300 cattle, 50 milch cows, 50 sheep and lambs, 200 calves, 1500 hogs. In spite of heavier supplies of hogs and easier advices from the west, the undertone to the market was steady and prices show no change. The demand from local dealers was good and an active trade was done at $7.25 to $7.50 per cwt., weighed off cars.

There were no prime beeves on the market and all kinds of fat stock were held at higher prices, quality considered. Pretty good cattle sold at 4c to 5c and the common stock at 3c to 4c per lb. The milch cows were nearly all lean in flesh; the prices ranged from $25 to $45 each. Calves sold at from $1.50 to $7.50 each. Most of the calves were brought to the market on farmers' sleighs, a thing never seen here previously so late in the season. Sheep sold at 5c to 6c per lb.; spring lambs, at $3 to $5.50 each.

Hogs—Receipts, 2100 head; active and 15c to 30c higher; heavy and mixed, $7.10 to $7.15; yorkers and pigs, $7.20 to $7.25, a few $7.30; roughs, $6 to $6.15; stags, $4.75 to $5.25.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 4200 head; sheep, active and steady; lambs, slow and 5c higher; lambs, $5 to $9.15.

Chicago Live Stock.

Chicago, April 10.—Cattle—Receipts, about 16,000; strong to 10c higher; common to choice steers, $4.10 to $4.70; cows, $3 to $4.85; heifers, $3 to $5.25; bulls, $2.50 to $4.50; calves, $2.75 to $7; stockers and feeders, $3.25 to $5.10.

Hogs—Receipts, about 21,000; 5c to 10c higher; shipping and selected, $6.70 to $6.80; mixed and heavy packing, $6.65 to $6.75; light, $6.70 to $6.77½; pigs and roughs, $3.50 to $6.55; bulk of sales, $6.67½ to $6.75.

Sheep—Receipts, about 15,000; strong to 20c higher; sheep, $4 to $6.75; yearlings, $5.25 to $6.70; lambs, $1.50 to $8.50.

TWENTY MILLIONS DYING.

Russians Are Suffering All the Horrors of Starvation.

London, April 11.—Dr. Kannard, commissioner of the Society of Friends, who was sent to investigate the Russian famine, writing from Samara, April 3, says:

"There are 20,000,000 people distributed in the southeastern provinces of Russia, who cannot live to see another harvest without aid."

In Samara, he adds, thousands are dying, and 750,000 are starving. Of the latter, only 372,700 are getting relief, one meal in 24 hours. As a meal is only two pounds of bread and a bowl of soup, this, according to the commissioner, means dying by degrees. Even this meagre dole, in countless instances, is divided among many mouths. There are only sufficient funds on hand to last until May 1, whereas money would be needed until the end of July, when the harvest will bring relief.

The commissioner especially appeals for canned milk. He says there are 300,000 children in Samara Province who have no milk and are forced to eat coarse bread made of acorns, powdered wood and cucumbers, resulting in thousands of deaths and much disease.

In conclusion, the commissioner appeals to the Anglo-Saxons for $2,500,000 to save "twenty millions of human beings, who are dying lingering deaths from starvation."

Shoots Into Crowd of Jews.

BY WYMOND CAREY.

Copyright (1905) by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

"You really think so?"

"I am sure of it," she replied. "The negotiations for peace have commenced, but the war still goes on. This black, infernal treachery is here in Versailles, in our midst, for the prize to a traitor at this critical time is worth a king's ransom. It is maddening, maddening—believe me, the man or woman who lays bare the mystery will do the King and France a service never to be forgotten. And His Majesty can be grateful."

Andre's ambitious heart throbbed responsive to the skillful touch.

"I mean to discover the traitor. I foiled him at Fontenoy. I will foil him again, but," she paused, "a woman cannot do it alone. When the King wrote to me before I came to Versailles, 'Discret et Fidele' was his motto. I want to-day a friend who will be 'discret et fidele,' a man without fear, loyal, ingenious, and brave."

Andre raised his head sharply. The thoughts were coming fast; he began to see dimly, to hope, to dream.

"I confess," she pursued, "that I thought the Vicomte de Nerac might be that man, my man. But it is impossible, impossible."

"Why, Madame?"

"Why?" She laughed softly. "Because the Marquise de Pompadour is a bourgeoise, a heartless, selfish, intriguing wanton, and she can find many who will serve her, who will write ballades to her eyes and sonnets to her bosom, and then behind her back will scribble the foul libels that the soldiers sang at Fontenoy. But the Court, the Queen, the Dauphin, the bishops and priests, the libertines and the devots, the ministers and the great ladies are leagued in hate against me. It is true, is it not?"

And Andre could not answer.

"So long as I have the King on my side I am safe. But this palace is a labyrinth of intrigue. If the King grows weary I shall be fortunate to leave Versailles a free woman. And by my ruin those of my service will be ruined too. The task I mean to perform is doubly dangerous—there is the Court and there is 'No. 101.' Yes, it is no task for the Vicomte de Nerac."

The gentle voice cut like a whip. Andre began to pace up and down.

"You are young, my friend." She was looking at him as she had looked when she slipped the pillow beneath his head at Fontenoy. "You are brave, a soldier with great ambitions and a great future, for you have the heart and courage of your race. You are of the noblesse, your world is not of this salon, but of the Salon de la Paix. Your friends, your blood, have declared war upon me; for a traitor to their cause they will have no mercy. True the King has commanded your services in my household, but Antoinette d'Etiolles, who is grateful for what you did at Fontenoy, refuses to accept because she would not ruin, I cannot say a friend, but a noble hero of France."

Remorse, ambition, the witchery of her beauty, his love for Denise, strove for mastery within him.

"Adieu," she whispered, "you must go your way, I mine. We shall meet, perhaps. How long I shall be here God knows. But trust me, I will see that your refusal to accept the King's pleasure shall do you no harm. You will succeed, you must, for fortune, birth, and manhood are on your side Adieu!"

"But, Madame—" he cried impulsively.

"No, Vicomte, no. It is impossible. A man may sacrifice himself, but never—never must he sacrifice his love."

Her eyes rested on him with sympathetic significance. She had divided his secret. Andre felt the blood scarlet as his uniform in his cheeks. Denise—yes, Denise blocked the way to the future this enchantress had dreamed for him, nay, that he had dreamed for himself.

"Perhaps you are right," he said slowly, raising her hand to his lips. "But Andre de Nerac is not ungrateful."

"Perhaps," she smiled. "Take your Cordon Bleu. It is none the less deserved because it was asked for by a vivandiere. Will Monsier le Vicomte permit? Yes?" she had pinned it to his breast. Her face was very close to his; the flattery in those wonderful eyes caressed his inmost soul. "See," she whispered.

"This way—it is safer for you."

She lifted the curtain over an alcove revealing a narrow staircase down to a dark passage. "At the bottom you will find to the left a door locked; here is the key. By that private door you can return to the public galleries. The dark passage leads to the King's and the Queen's private apartments. The King, or indeed any one who has the key, can come this way unknown to the spies of the ministers or of the Court. Remember, there are only two keys; the King has one, this is the other. Keep it; you may want it."

"Want it?" he repeated, confused.

"The Vicomte," she corrected gently, "henceforth cannot without harming himself visit publicly a bourgeoise grisette. But he will remember that in Antoinette de Pompadour he has, if he will but believe it, a true and grateful friend. If he is in trouble or in difficulty the key will show him the way and no one will be wiser. If not, it is no matter."

"But, Madame, why should I be in trouble?"

She laughed mysteriously. "Anything, as the Vicomte well knows, can happen at Versailles. Adieu!"

And yet she lingered. "The Cordon Bleu was from the King," she said; "accept this, pray, from me; it is the handkerchief, the famous handkerchief of the Hotel de Ville, and it comes from my heart." She had tossed it to him with an airy kiss blown from her jewelled fingers.

What a charming picture she made, framed in the darkness there with her heliotrope robe drawn back to avoid the dripping of the candle held above her dainty head. Un morceau de roi, parbleu!

"Remember 'No. 101.' Adieu." The soft echo stole into the chill passage. The Marquise had dropped the curtain and Andre was alone with his thoughts.

CHAPTER XIII.

Andre sat down on the stairs in the dark. It is perhaps not surprising that his first thoughts were of "No. 101." Across his path had fallen for the second time the shadow of that baleful, blood-stained mystery. So far all who had tried to run the traitor to earth had failed; but when war and peace, the King's policy and the destinies of France, hung in the balance success in the task meant a great reward. That masked woman in the wood had baffled him. Vanity, a passionate curiosity, the spell of the mystery, patriotism, once more united to kindle his longing to succeed where all had failed. But to attempt it alone or without money or information was out of the question. To invite the co-operation of his friends in this Versailles of intrigue and counter-intrigue, of jealousy and selfishness, spelled certain failure. With Madame de Pompadour's help alone it might be done, but that was impossible, doubly impossible. Madame was right. A De Nerac, a Croix de St. Louis, and a Cordon Bleu could not enter the service of a bourgeoise favorite, here to-day and gone to-morrow, could not defy his class, the Queen and the Court, could not outrage his own dignity. Denise would spurn him for ever. Sacrifice his love? no, a thousand times no! Still less could he return now a suppliant for the Pompadour's favors; she who had refused his aid; he who had scorned her offer. Yet—yes, yet with what delicacy and sympathy she atoned for her apparent insolence. No woman, not Denise herself, could have shown her gratitude with more grace and conviction. An adventuress she was maybe, but a true woman for all that, and a scharming as beautiful. Name of a dog! The faint perfume of that handkerchief which had made history, subtly recalled the intoxicating flattery of her eyes, the tender gratitude of her voice. The King—Andre laughed softly—the King was no fool when he was conquered by Antoinette d'Etiolles. And he had her key; well, he would see about that key.

His mind travelled to the thought of Denise. He had sworn to win her; he loved her, his beautiful Marquise de Beau Sejour, for was she not what the wife of a De Nerac should be—fair, noble, and pure? The scandalous tongues of the Court rendered her the homage of silence. She was the type to him of what France, the France for which he fought, could be. Did not there burn in her soul the inspiring flame of patriotism, duty, and high endeavour which she, as he, owed to her lineage and to God?

Well, well, to-morrow would bring counsel. He rose to grope his way to the locked door. Mon Dieu! What was this?

The door was opening stealthily. Some one was coming in. The King? Of course. Andre softly flew up the stairs and crouched in the folds of the curtain. If the King was coming to the Pompadour he was lost, but caught as he was in this dark corridor it was his only chance of concealment.

A light from a hand lamp flickered into the darkness. Ah! that was not the King's step; nor did the King hum gay songs under his breath. Ho! ho! an adventure! Madame's key was worth the owning after all.

As he lived, the Chevalier de St. Amant, a rose between his lips, hat cocked jauntily, his slim, boyish figure instinct with an abandoned grace. Pooh! he was the King's private secretary and the royal key had been given him by his master for his own purposes. This was very interesting and mightily droll.

Andre drew a deep breath. The door at the top of the stairs at the other end of the passage had quietly opened. Some one with a lamp was standing awaiting the Chevalier. A woman! Yes, the light fell with a gleam on the folds of her dress, on the jewel on her breast. The gay young dog to use his royal master's key in this way. What adorable audacity!

The woman held up the lamp with a familiar gesture. Denise! By God it was Denise!

One choking moment and then Andre turned stonecold. Denise, his Denise! Mechanically he wiped the perspiration from his brow as he stared spellbound. Denise!

The Chevalier doffed his hat, kissed her hand, took the lamp from her, and once more Andre was alone in the darkness, gnawed by impotent and implacable rage, jealousy black and hot as hell.

But what did it mean—in heaven's name what did it mean? And the Chevalier? Ah, if it had not been his Denise!

Only by the sternest self-control did he prevent himself from dashing after them. Pure madness, for that door was certainly locked. It seemed an eternity—in reality it was about half-an-hour—and then the Chevalier reappeared alone and still jauntily humming his song stealthily let himself out ignorant, poor boy, that only a noble's refusal to stab in cold blood like a common footpad had saved him from staining the floor of this dark corridor with his life's blood.

Here was a fresh mystery. This cursed Versailles with its infamies and plots, its libertines and intrigues, its cabals, cliques and conspiracies! "No. 101," Yvonne, the crystal-gazer, Madame de Pompadour, war, treachery, and the Chevalier—in what cruel toils was his life set; but this last was the rudest shock of all. Andre could have cried aloud in sheer perplexity at the riddles that beset him on every side.

He took out the key. The touch of the cool steel on his feverish fingers sent a thrill through him. Ah! Madame had given him this key; she had ushered him out this way. He had wondered why. Because she was grateful? No. It was clear now—clear as daylight. She knew the secrets of this hateful corridor and she desired him to see for himself. Could it be possible? Yes, yes; it must be. A swift decision stormed into his mind.

Cautiously he let himself out. The public gallery was empty, but as he strode towards the stables he was startled to meet Denise hurrying to the Queen's apartments.

"Ah," he said, inspecting her closely, "tell me, if you please, where I can find the Chevalier de St. Amant?"

Denise gazed at his bronzed, inscrutable face with astonishment—or was it fear?

"I was informed," Andre said carelessly, "that he had been seen in your company going towards the King's apartments—a mistake, no doubt. The Chevalier is probably with His Majesty. It is a pity, for——"

"But the King," Denise interrupted hastily, "is not in his private apartments; neither is the Chevalier there."

Andre calmly studied her. "Ah, Mademoiselle," he laughed, "I see you are well informed. I must seek the Chevalier elsewhere." He turned away.

"And will you not tell me of what passed—" Denise had begun.

"I regret infinitely that I have pressing business, Mademoiselle. To-morrow, if you will be so kind," and he smilingly bid her good-night.

Five minutes later he was galloping through the woods to "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold." Something useful for his new resolve might possibly be learned there, and every clue would help now.

The inn that looked like a farmhouse buried in the woods wore as deserted an air as it had worn eighteen months ago, and in answer to his imperious knock there appeared the chambermaid with the shifty eyes, who stared in fear and surprise at this officer in his faded uniform and muddy boots who demanded entrance in the dark hours of the night.

"My mistress, the wise woman, is not here, sir," she replied pettishly, half closing the door in Andre's face.

"When will she be here?"

"Never again, Monsieur. She has left."

Andre promptly pushed his way into the passage and closed the door. The girl uttered a suppressed shriek. "Are you of the police, sir?" she whimpered. "I know nothing, nothing; I swear it."

"I am not of the police," he said quietly. "I am a friend of your mistress. See that gold piece; you shall have it if you will tell me all you know."

The girl looked slowly round. "I do not know where she is, my mistress," she said. "Three days ago there came an English gentleman——"

"English?" he interrupted sharply.

"But yes. Madame said he was English. He saw her—he went away. Yesterday Madame left; she will come no more. She is gone, perhaps, to England. I do not know, I swear."

Andre reflected. Yes, it was more than possible that "the princess" had returned to England.

"Do you know," he demanded next, "why she left?"

"Because," her voice dropped, "she feared the vengeance of the Marquise de Pompadour."

Andre vividly recollected the scene when he had come to consult the crystal-gazer. The girl was not lying.

"And you know nothing more?"

"Nothing, Monsieur."

She took the gold piece greedily. Andre had his foot in the stirrup when a thought struck him.

"Tell me," he asked persuasively, "why you thought I was of the police?"

The girl beckoned him within and closed the door.

"Monsieur the superintendent of police has twice been here this week to inquire about my mistress," she answered softly. "This very morning he was here. He would know everything would monsieur the superintendent. But he does not pay and he learned nothing, nothing, I swear." She laughed knowingly.

Andre mounted and rode away. Fate was against him. Well, it could not be helped now. And the news of that English gentleman and the inquiries of the police were disquieting. What were English gentlemen doing at "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold" when England was at war with France? No wonder the police, the Marquise's friend in particular, were prowling about so suspicious an inn. No wonder the crystal-gazer had taken to flight.

"Who is that?" cried a boyish voice. A galloping horse had suddenly pulled up beside Andre's. "You, Vicomte, you! The very man that is wanted."

Andre had at the sudden challenge whipped out his sword to defend himself. He now peered through the gloom.

"Chevalier, you!" he exclaimed in intense suspicion and annoyance.

"Yes, I, Chevalier de St. Amant. I am in luck. There's the devil's own business here."

"What is it?" Andre demanded angrily. To be detected in this wood by the Chevalier, of all men, was maddening.

"Treachery," said the Chevalier briefly.

"Treachery?"

St. Amant was excited. "I was on my way to Paris by the King's orders to overtake a courier. I took the short cut through this wood; you know it doubtless. I hear a groan, I dismount, and there is the courier in the ditch, tied hand and foot, gagged too, poor devil, and his despatches gone."

"Gone?" A shiver ran down Andre's back.

"Clean as a whistle. The idiot had taken the short cut, too. As far as I can make out he was attacked from behind, stunned, and robbed. Will you help to bring the poor wretch back to Versailles, for I must go on to Paris?"

Andre sat appalled. "Of course," he replied presently.

"This is the Vincennes affair over again," the Chevalier remarked when they had unbound the courier and set him on Andre's horse. "It is devilish, this treachery, devilish and amazing."

De Nerac nodded. He was in no mood to discuss anything with anybody just now, least of all with the Chevalier de St. Amant.

The young man had mounted. "I am very sorry," he said, "that I cannot offer to accompany you, but the King's orders were urgent and I am already late. Good-night, Vicomte."

Andre bowed stiffly.

"If I might suggest," the Chevalier added in the friendliest way, "it would be well to say nothing of this damnable business until the King has been informed in the morning."

"I thank you," Andre replied coldly. "I had already intended to wait until His Majesty had heard the story from your lips."

"Good. I shall be back at dawn." The Chevalier spurred away.

As De Nerac rode slowly back the Marquise's words rang in his ears—"This is the second time in three months. There will be a third before long." The third had already come, and as usual like a thief in the night. Confound "No. 101"! Confound the Chevalier de St. Amant!

He was in no mood to go to bed. He would walk in one of the galleries until he had eased himself of all the black thoughts and fears, until he could see a path through the thickets into which fate had plunged him.

A party of his friends was still playing at dice, and as Andre passed through the room they stared at his muddy riding boots in amused surprise.

"You have news?" cried the Comte de Mont Rouge.

"Yes," Andre retorted curtly, "bad news which you will learn later."

"What the devil has he been doing?" he heard St. Benoit exclaim as Andre sharply left the room.

"I will tell you," Mont Rouge laughed. "He has already begun to do the dirty work of that grisette."

"What do you mean?" St. Benoit demanded.

"She is going to make him master of her household."

"De Nerac? Master of the Pompadour's household? Impossible!" A dozen voices protested, and the dice boxes ceased to rattle.

"Wait and you will see," Mont Rouge's cynical tones replied.

"Where and how did you learn this?" St. Benoit asked, aghast.

"The Comtesse des Forges told me," Mont Rouge answered. "She is in the confidence of St. Amant, who as we all know is the King's most confidential secretary."

"I don't believe it."

"Oh, well!" Andre, who had caught his friend's denial, halted involuntarily behind the door, picturing to himself Mont Rouge's shrug of the shoulders. Well, it was only one more item in a long account, an account that would be settled some day.

"If it is true," said the Abbe St. Victor, "that De Nerac has sold himself, he will be ruined when she is ruined. It is a pity, but he will deserve it."

Ruined? Andre laughed the laugh of a reckless gambler staking his last piece. Ruined? They would see.

CHAPTER XIV.

The curtain over the alcove was very cautiously lifted. Madame de Pompadour looked up from her papers. "Good afternoon, Vicomte," she smiled. "I was expecting you; you observe I am alone."

"Expecting me, Madame?" Andre demanded, astonished.

"To be sure, expecting you to report your account of this baffling affair in the woods with which all Versailles rings and to return my key."

"I know nothing but what everybody knows of the matter, nor am I here to return your key, but to keep it." Madame studied him with calm satisfaction. "Yes, Marquise, I am here because I have decided to enter your service."

The lady leaned back in her chair and laughed. "But it is impossible, my dear Vicomte," she replied lightly. "His Majesty has already appointed a master of my household." She rose and looked into his face, stern with a determination born of a prolonged inward struggle. "You are disappointed. I thank you for the compliment. No matter, we will arrange it another way, you and I."

"Will Madame kindly explain?"

"You have reflected on our chat yesterday?" she asked. "Yes? You have counted the cost?" Andre bowed in silence. "Good. I do not ask your reasons; they are your affair, and the Vicomte does not act with his eyes shut. But I am rejoiced, my friend. I could sing with pleasure. To the entente cordiale and to our success." She held out her hand, and in the sunshine of her gaze he raised it to his lips.

"Now listen. I have thought it all out. To the world of Versailles we are for the future deadly enemies, you and I. You have offended me. I have insulted you. What could be more natural? Already the idle tongues chatter in the galleries that the Vicomte de Nerac has refused to accept the King's pleasure and that Madame is in tears of rage. That is my inspiration, you understand. But you will still keep my key and be in my service without any of the disgrace—eh? Mon Dieu it will be droll."

Andre smiled in admiration of her finesse. A genius this marquise.

"But perhaps I shall not be in Versailles," he said after a pause.

"Leave it to me," she retorted gaily. "I have already provided for that. It is my little secret—a vivandiere's secret."

She began slowly to roll up the plans on her table.

Andre's eye caught one of the sheets. "Ah, you recognize it?" she asked.

"To be sure. It is the Chateau de Beau Sejour."

"Yes; and what the King can give the King can take away," she replied with her mysterious smile. "Mademoiselle Denise—patience, my friend, and hear me out—is very beautiful and very noble. It is better for women who can afford it to be content with love, their beauty, and their noblesse, and to leave politics alone. Politics, intrigue are a very dangerous game, particularly for young ladies. Mademoiselle would find some very instructive lessons as to that in the history of her chateau. It might well be that the King might desire a second time to confer Beau Sejour on a servant who had rendered precious service to his Sovereign. And," she added, throwing up her head, "I hope Mademoiselle will learn that I will not be thwarted in my plans by a girl even though she has forty marshals of France in her pedigree."

Andre listened in silence, but the color in his bronzed cheeks revealed the strong emotion within.

"And now to business." Madame had almost unsexed herself. The woman's charm and grace melted into a masculine, alert, and bracing keenness. She beckoned to Andre to draw his chair up to the table. "'No. 101,' that is our affair. After last night it is more imperative than ever the mystery should be laid bare. And it is clear that the treachery starts from Versailles. You agree?"

"Yes, Madame."

"Good. The clues unfortunately are very slight. But not far from the palace is an inn called 'The Cock with the Spurs of Gold'—you know it?" she questioned sharply.

"I was there eighteen months ago," he replied, recovering himself.

"No doubt on the same foolish errand as all of us. But the crystal-gazer has vanished and cannot be traced. It is no matter. We have to do with another woman, a country wench called Yvonne of the Spotless Ankles——"

"Yvonne?" He controlled himself with difficulty.

"A curious name for a peasant wench, is it not? Well, I am convinced that this Yvonne in some way yet to be fathomed is connected with this infernal treachery. The police can discover nothing but to her credit; the police, of course, are fools. Vicomte, it is your task to master Yvonne's secret."

Andre's fingers tapped on the table.

"You are a man, a soldier, a lover," Madame continued in her cool voice. "You understand women. She is a peasant, you are a noble. A woman who loves will tell everything. You take me?"

"Perfectly." He rose and began abruptly to pace up and down as he always did when his thoughts overmastered him. Madame consulted her tablets.

"And then there is the Chevalier de St. Amant," she resumed, and Andre came to a dead halt. "He and I do not love one another. The King has his secrets from his ministers, from his valet, from me, secrets of policy, and of his private life. The Chevalier is the King's creature, his confidant, and he is ambitious. He fears my influence, he is an adventurer, a parvenu. When he has destroyed me the hand of Mademoiselle Denise will wipe out his antecedents, will by a stroke of the King's pen make him ruler of France and one of its greatest nobles. But," she rose, "he shall not, he shall not."

"No," said Andre in a low voice, "by God he shall not!"

Madame smiled. "It is your task and mine," she added, "to defeat, to crush, the Chevalier de St. Amant."

"Yes," said Andre simply.

"We are engaged on a perilous task. There is a plot, more than one, on foot to drive me from Versailles. And they are all in it, the Queen and her ladies, monseigneurs the archbishops and bishops, the Dauphin and the princesses of the blood, the ministers, the nobles, the army, even the King's valet. In the council, the galleries, the royal study, even the King's bedroom, day and night they are scheming and intriguing. It will be a duel to the death—one woman against the Queen, the Church, the ministers, and the noblesse, but he who will decide is the King."

She flung her arms up with a superbly dramatic gesture. Standing there in the triumphant consciousness of her beauty she would have moved the most merciless of her critics to admiration. And the man who would decide was Louis XV.

"He is strange, the King," she mused as if she had forgotten Andre, "how strange but few can guess—at one moment the slave of his passion, at another burning with a king's ambition, at a third indolent and dull, at a fourth consumed by remorse, tortured by fear of God and the pains of hell. The ennui of a royal life, this is his bane. The woman who can amuse him, keep him from himself, he will never desert. And I will be that woman. My beauty will fade, but give me first five years—five years as I am today—and it will be death alone that will separate the King and me."

"And you will rule France, Marquise?"

She wheeled with a flash of fire. "Yes," she said, "I will rule France through the King."

There was silence. Madame leaned against the carved mantelpiece; her eyes passed over the salon with its wealth and its refinement out into the measureless spaces of the future, to the rosy peaks known only to the dreams of ambition.

"Paris," she murmured, "calls me happy, fortunate. Listen," and she recited:

"Pompadour, vous embellissez
La cour, Parnasse et Cythere.

"M. de Voltaire is a poet. The homage of the poets, the philosophers, the artists, the wits, the homage of the world to her beauty, the love of a king—what can a woman desire more? I have them to-day, but shall I keep them? Mon Dieu! do they reflect, these mere men and women, what it costs to keep them? My life is a martyrdom. A false step, a stupid word, to be gay when I should be silent, to be dull when I should be gay—these may hurl me from my place. And the intrigues! The intrigues! Vicomte, I declare to you that at night I lie awake reckoning with tears what the day has accomplished, wrestling with what to-morrow may bring. Heartless, frivolous, and false are my foes. Is it surprising that I too should be heartless, frivolous, false? But I would not change my lot. No! Better far one year with the cup of pleasure at one's lips; better far one glorious year in Versailles of passion and power, than an eternity of that life I knew as Madame d'Etiolles. Yes; if in twelve months I must pay the price at the Bastille I would drink now to the full the joys of an uncrowned queen of France."

She sat down overpowered by the visions of her own spirit.

And Andre listened with a unique thrill of awe, torn by conflicting emotions. Of his own free will he had asked for her help because his ambitions thrust the sacrifice on him. Away from her presence he recalled with a shiver a word, a gesture, a look, that spoke of a cold selfishness, even of an insolent vulgarity, so strangely blended with such grace, charm and sympathy

Cupid's Bargain

By LESLIE HOLMES.

Copyright, 1907, by C. H. Sutcliffe.

"But, my dear"— interposed Aunt Ella, reaching for her handkerchief.

Beth Graham resumed her interrupted monologue.

"I never saw an advertisement which balanced so tidily with one's qualifications—'Wanted, services of a capable young woman for few hours daily. Must be well educated, have pleasant manners, a gift for conversation and make a good appearance. No experience necessary, but large acquaintance desirable. Apply to the Interborough Realty Co., —— Street.' Now, I have the education. Behold my diploma from Mme. Collingwood's select school. Thanks to my bringing up by the best aunt in the world, I have the reputation of being well mannered. I am considered chatty without being a bore. My new tailored suit gives me the good appearance demanded. Certainly I have no experience, but a lot of acquaintances."

Mrs. Graham mopped her eyes diligently.

"I cannot bear to think of you, a Graham of Graham Center, going into business. Now, there are my cameos—cameos are in style again. Beth"—

The girl laid a slender white hand over her aunt's trembling lips and spoke with sternness not entirely affected.

"Aunty, dear, never again speak in that way of our precious family heirlooms. So long as they are in the safe deposit vault I shall feel that the Graham honor is saved. I intend to answer that advertisement."

An hour later the secretary of the Interborough Realty company looked with relief into the fresh, high bred face of the last of the Graham Center Grahams, who, thanks to the collapse of the —— bank, was looking for a position in which experience was not demanded. The secretary of the company, like all men of his class, questioned the girl so cleverly that she had told the story of her inexperience and needs long before he unfolded the requirements of the position. Then he leaned back in his chair and remarked:

"I think you'll do, Miss Graham. We have plotted ninety acres on the Chester turnpike, and we're going to boom the site as the Hollingworth Terrace. We've got the Transit Construction company interested in the deal, and they will build houses on the installment plan. We have some wide awake chaps on the ground, but we are planning a series of excursions, and we think a bright woman with the gift of saying the right thing at the right minute could put through many a sale, particularly with men. Now, such work is generally done on a commission basis, but you're rather up against it, and we'll pay you fifteen a week and expenses and give you a month to make good."

He touched an electric button and said to the answering boy:

"Send in Mr. Langhorne. He's the working head of the Transit Construction company and a promising young man. You'll probably have considerable dealing with him. Langhorne, this is Miss Graham. She's going to help us out at Hollingworth Terrace."

And thus, with a sweeping gesture, did the secretary of the Interborough Realty company settle Beth Graham's entrance into the business world.

Fifteen dollars a week! Why, they would have to let even Emma, the cook, go. She would probably wear out many shoes, too, tramping over Hollingworth Terrace. And then a mellow masculine voice broke in upon her reflections, and she found a very good looking young man, with Irish blue eyes that smiled right into hers, standing at attention, some pamphlets in his hand.

"Perhaps you would like to look over some of our literature before you join us on the first excursion tomorrow?"

"Tomorrow?" echoed Beth. It seemed so dreadfully near, this earning of daily bread for herself and Aunt Ellen.

But she smiled and accepted the books. Half an hour later it seemed to her as if Hollingworth Terrace must be a sort of paradise for small salaried people and that she, in selling homes to them, would be a veritable angel of mercy.

The next day she felt differently. The first excursion was not exactly a success. The air was heavy with mist, and Hollingworth Terrace seemed a wilderness of surveyors, steam rollers, sewer pipes and tired teams, dragging great loads of building materials through unfinished streets.

In one of the half finished houses a colored man served hot coffee and sandwiches to the few excursionists who had braved the elements, but no deals were consummated. After the bus had taken the few visitors back to the station Beth, seated on a plasterer's horses, studied critically the tiny reception hall, while Langhorne, perched on a window seat, studied the girl and wondered why some women looked smart and trig even in a cravenette coat and a soft felt hat.

"These early spring days are so uncertain," she was saying. "I wish there was a fireplace in that corner. You could just as well build one, for the chimney runs up there from the parlor. Then we'd have a snapping, sparkling fire that would make the whole house seem charming. I believe we'd make a sale, rain or shine."

"But the fireplaces would add to the cost of the houses," said Langhorne doubtfully.

"And make prospective customers overlook some other defects in your houses. I noticed you have no back stairs. Now, every suburban housewife likes separate stairs for her one servant. She is much more punctilious in such matters than the city housekeeper."

"Eh—what?" exclaimed Langhorne curiously.

"Yes, and you should have utilized that wasted space for a closet for rubber coats, umbrellas, overshoes, etc. A woman will fall for a couple of convenient closets when stained glass windows and artistic tiling are lost upon her."

Langhorne was all attention now.

"I didn't suppose that a city girl would notice things so closely."

"I began life in a village," said Beth quietly. "Besides, if I am to help you sell these places I must believe in them, and I cannot believe in them unless they are right."

Before the next excursion day rolled around Beth had examined every house under way, and her suggestions for small alterations that would appeal to the feminine mind were received with respect. Furthermore, all plans for new houses were brought to her before the work was commenced.

Hollingworth Terrace became the center around which everything moved, and Aunt Ellen studied plans and offered suggestions to young Langhorne, who had taken to bringing drawings to the cozy Graham flat. So far simple cottages costing $3,000 or less had been erected. Now they were planning more ambitious residences and plotting the most valuable site of their holdings, a broad knoll that overlooked the river and surrounding country.

Here in the heart of a cluster of pines was to be a house of old English design, with high gables, sloping roof and quaint interior finish. Beth watched those plans grow with jealous care. She selected the timbers for finishing the ceiling of the reception hall, living room and dining room. The fireplaces she and Langhorne designed from pictures of English country houses.

The excursions were heavily patronized now. Sales were made while Beth's back was turned. Hollingworth Terrace was booming beyond the fondest hopes of its founders. Beth often came in from her calls on prospective customers to ask anxiously, "Has The Lodge been taken?"

They had named the house of their own planning The Lodge, nothing more, and somehow she felt that she should hate the man who bought it.

One night when Langhorne dropped in to call he did not look her in the eye. He talked about any and every subject but Hollingworth Terrace, and Beth knew that The Lodge had been sold.

"You might as well fess up," she said, with pretended gayety.

He nodded his head.

"Yes. We withdrew The Lodge from the market at 4 this afternoon"—

"Who bought it, and, oh, do you think they will dare to put Turkish rugs in that old English living room?"

"Oh, no. I assure you he'll have nothing but hand woven rugs, just as you suggested"—

"Well, that is some comfort," the girl murmured. "If he has taste I can forgive him. What sort of a man is he, married or single?"

"Single, but he bought it hoping that a certain girl would share it with him."

"Was she with him? Is she a nice girl? Do you think she will appreciate it?" demanded Beth breathlessly. "You know I simply love that fireplace in the hall!"

Langhorne rose abruptly and paced the floor. Suddenly he paused before her chair, his lips firm, his blue eyes ablaze with a light she had never seen there before.

"Do you think—could you make up your mind—to sit beside that fireplace—always—with me?"

She looked up at him, her breath coming in short, nervous gasps, her eyes wide and startled.

"Oh, I know it's no end of cheeky in me, but when that bloated barrel of a Hopkins (you remember you disliked him so) offered me $3,500 today for The Lodge I told him it was sold. I simply had to buy it myself and take chances on you. You're the certain girl."

"Oh, Teddy! Teddy Langhorne!" said Beth, with a glad little cry. "We'll have hickory logs to burn in the fireplaces—and yes, yes, I love you! Of course it isn't all the house, silly, but it does count some. You know, we built it together."

• • • • • • • •

"But to refuse $3,500 for it! Oh, Teddy! That was downright reckless!" she murmured later.

"Oh, I don't know," replied Langhorne, regaining possession of her hand. "Personally, I think I got a pretty good bargain."

Moors and Morocco.

Moor and Morocco are words unknown to the people of that troubled land. These people know themselves as Arabs and descendants of those valiant upholders of the prophet's green standard who swept like a flood across north Africa at the time of the hegira. The Morocco of the present day they found possessed by a sturdy race who claimed descent from the people who were cast out of Canaan by Joshua, the son of Nun. Their country, so far as its plains were concerned, was taken from them by the Arabs, and their fighting strength was made to serve the Arab cause in the conquest of Spain. They themselves gradually took to the mountains, to the great Atlas. Here they have remained ever since, speaking their own language, maintaining their own customs and racial attributes and obstinately refusing to be absorbed by the Arab dwellers on the plains. These people are the Berbers. Their tongue is called Shilhah. Literature they have none, in the ordinary sense of the word, but they have a rich store of oral tradition, myth, legend and folklore.

The Inevitable Man

By IZOLA FORRESTER

Copyright, 1906, by Ruby Douglas

"Wait," laughed Jolly Allan, prophetically wagging his forefinger at the two figures in the hammock. "Just you girls wait until the inevitable man shows up and see where your friendship will be. Pouf! Bing! Up in smoke."

"There have been 'men'—" began Irene loftily.

"I said the inevitable man," protested Jolly—"the man, the right and only one. I know there have been; wasn't I one of them last year? But, honest, it will do me a world of good to see the right one come along and have both of you girls fall in love with him—your tastes are so similar, you know." He dodged the cushion that whizzed from the hammock in his direction dexterously. "And then see the tumble in girl loyalty. You won't speak to each other, and every time the other one goes by with the inevitable man the one that's frozen out will say, 'Cat.'"

"Jolly, there is a limit, you know, even to your imagination." Dorothy Arnold rose from the hammock and stood a moment, her arms upraised as she fastened in some refractory hairpins. They were pretty arms, plump, tanned and bare to the elbows. So was their owner pretty—the very prettiest girl at Northern Lights except one, and that one her closest friend, Irene Nethersby.

It was nearly a month since the two girls had come to the inn at Northern Lights to spend their summer vacation. The "Lights" was not a fashionable resort, strictly speaking; its guests and their doings were not chronicled in the Sunday papers, but to those who knew and loved it it had beauties far beyond Newport or Atlantic City. Perched high on the pine crested bluff overlooking the sea was the inn. Winding woodland paths led to it from the shore, and back in the hills were trout brooks and deep glens. Long before the inn and its satellite cottages had been there the lighthouse had held its own upon the rocks of the bluff, and it was the light from its lamps which had given the north point of Shelter Island its name, Northern Lights.

It was an odd summer crowd that filled the inn—students resting, students studying, people in search of peace above all—and yet about these steady guests, who came year in and year out, there played perpetually the transient, merry summer butterflies, who came and went with the weekly steamer.

Jolly Allan was a permanent fixture. As son of the owner of Northern Lights at large he occupied a privileged position. But even with Dorothy's dark eyes gazing at him in haughty disapproval he did not retract one word.

"Just wait," he said. "Last year he didn't come, but he will this time."

Arm in arm the two girls walked leisurely down one of the cliff paths that led to the boat landing. Both were tall, both slender and golden haired as sisters, but Dorothy's eyes were dark and grave, and Irene's were blue as the bluebells that grew in the rock crannies at her feet. They were cousins and college mates as well. Every year only drew them nearer together and made their friendship more sure, and with all their little love affairs there had never been a shadow of rivalry.

Halfway down the bluff the path made a turn, and a rustic bench had been built there. Kneeling on it, the girls leaned their elbows on the back and watched the White Queen steam smoothly to the dock and disembark her usual quota of city deserters.

It was sunset, and the sea lay silent and rippleless, stained crimson and purple from the sun's rays. Most of the passengers were taking the main road up to the inn. Only one figure came toward them, a figure in gray flannel, and as he came he whistled. The girls watched him idly, disinterestedly, without moving from their position. Men were common at the "Lights," even men in gray flannels who whistled. But as he came up the path and faced them at the turn they realized that this man was different. It wasn't anything special about him—he was merely a strapping, healthy youngster, clear eyed, clean shaven, with lips ready to whistle or smile and brown hair that waved above his tanned forehead—but it was the quick, frankly astonished look in his eyes that disarmed them as he glanced from one face to the other, a look that spoke volumes, but volumes with a double dedication.

"Is this the right way to the inn?" he asked.

Dorothy did not answer. After that first look in the stranger's eyes she had looked out at the crimson sea. Irene flushed slowly and pointed up the path.

"It is up there where the gray towers are," she said, and he lifted his gray traveling cap and went on, but he did not whistle.

For a few minutes neither girl spoke. Then Irene sighed, half to herself, and slipped her arm around her cousin's waist.

"Dolly, wouldn't it be odd if he were the one? You know what Jolly said—the inevitable man."

And Dorothy, pushed back her hair with a quick, half impatient gesture as she turned from the sea.

"It is late," she said. "Yes, it would be odd if he were the one."

As Jolly said a week later, he was it all right. And gradually Jolly's smile deepened, and he went about with his hands in his white duck pockets, wearing a mystical look of wisdom beyond mortal ken, for his prophecy was coming true.

Dudley Graham was the stranger's name. Jolly exulted in it. It couldn't have been better. And when, after a couple of days, Dudley showed himself possessed of an unlimited "wad" to boot and a disposition to scatter it Jolly's admiration changed to respect, and he hoped Dudley's choice would fall on Dorothy, because for himself he always had preferred blue eyes.

But Dudley apparently had no choice. The cousins were the prettiest girls at the "Lights." Therefore he made love to both of them with absolute impartiality. And he was an artist at lovemaking—no ordinary piazza mooning or woodland strolls, but at daybreak, when all the world lay in a bridal veil of pearl and diamond, he would take the girls out for a sail or send them up great clusters of forest flowers to say good morning for him.

"Which one?" asked Jolly, and every one at the "Lights" echoed the question. Perhaps no one thought it oftener than the girls themselves. Gradually they drew apart. There was no open quarrel, nothing to gossip over, but all the old sweet comradeship was broken, and except when Dudley was with them they walked and lived alone.

To Dorothy it was a wonderful thing, this strange new love, something not to be breathed of, and yet her eyes never met Graham's that she did not feel vaguely sorry for Irene. And Irene, winsome, gay hearted, was oddly quiet and restrained these days, and, hearing Graham's voice in her ears as they two bent over the dipping sail, she felt her heart ache for poor Dorothy.

And then, as Jolly called it ever after, there came the day of decision. It was a gray day, threatening, squally, bringing with it a premature tang of September chill. Graham was going out in his yacht, the Lorelie. As he came down the steps of the piazza Dorothy joined him, tall and slender, in her rain coat and hatless.

Graham hesitated and glanced to where Irene stood.

"Afraid?" he asked laughingly, and she took the challenge, not because of his words, but because of Dorothy and her silence.

"There's a storm coming," called Jolly. "I'll get the life savers ready to go out after you."

It was only a jest, and half an hour later Jolly, in his big hearted, rough way, would have given all he owned to call it back, for out on the gray sea the little white winged yacht swirled and dipped as the storm swept down on it, and when the darkness had lifted there was a cry from those watching from the inn, and down at the little white life saving station below the lighthouse they were pushing out the lifeboat.

Keel up the Lorelie drifted, but before the lifeboat reached it they found a figure swimming for shore, a hearty, strong, athletic youngster, one Dudley Graham, who had kept his presence of mind and resolved to save said Dudley Graham's precious life at all hazards.

"Go ahead," called Tom Hardy, the captain of the crew to him. "Go ahead; you're doing finely. Keep it up. We wouldn't stop you for the world."

And they left him swimming for shore and made straight for the overturned yacht, where two girls held each other above the peril of the sea.

"Take Irene first," said Dorothy.

"Dolly first," gasped Irene as Tom lifted her into the boat.

The next morning Jolly sat on the piazza smiling buoyantly to two figures in the hammock.

"He went on the early boat," he said blithely. "Congratulations. But was not he a really lovely specimen? For fair weather, I mean. Wasn't he"—

"Jolly," interposed Dorothy, "even the inevitable can be postponed, can't it? We—Irene and I—have decided that our inevitable man must be twins."

A Floral Freak.

There is a singular floral freak called the "occasional" flower for the reason that it has no particular time to bloom. It is said that when closed the occasional flower is in color and form something like a ripe poppy head, but with the stem attached. Submerged in a bowl of water for a few minutes and then taken out and placed by its stem in an empty bottle, the outer petals begin in several minutes to open out. This process is slow, but distinctly noticeable. The petals continue to rise and to expand until they gradually recede. When this action is completed it resembles in appearance the sunflower. The occasional flower remains thus open for a few hours, during which time, the state of humidity lessening by degrees, the fiber begins to shrink and the petals close up gradually in the same way that they opened until the flower resumes its former position. It is said that, properly nourished, with regard to temperature and air, and carefully handled, the occasional flower never decays or degenerates in its radiance and splendor.

Elements of Pathos.

"Don't you think there is pathos in the death of summer, the falling of the leaf, the flight of the birds, the"—

"Pathos? Sure thing. Why, I just looked over my last winter's underclothes, and there isn't a single garment fit to wear."—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Surfeited Cynic.

"Remember," said the melodramatic man, "there are things in this life that money cannot buy."

"Yes," answered the impecunious person wearily, "but I had enough of them long ago. What I want now is a change."—Washington Star.

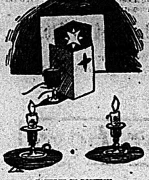
FOR YOUNG FOLKS

COLORED STARS.

How to Perform a Pretty Experiment With Cardboard and Candles.

Here is a pretty experiment that any ingenious boy can make. Get a piece of cardboard, say, 8 by 12 inches in size and bend it gently in the middle. In one of the wings thus formed cut a four pointed star, with two of the points vertical and two horizontal. Now bend this wing back upon the other and make a tracing of the star on the latter with a pencil.

Your object is to get the exact center of the star tracing, and this you may do by making a dot at the intersection of the diagonals. Now make another drawing of a star on the uncut wing, but its points must be at an angle of forty-five degrees with the first. Cut this new star out carefully and place the cardboard, as shown in the illustration, on a table bearing two lighted candles of the same height and opposite to a screen of white paper fixed to the wall.



CANDLES IN POSITION.

Regulate the angle formed by the two wings so that the luminous images cast by the stars may fall, one directly on the other, in the center of the screen. You will thus have a bright star with eight points. Now, if you cover one of the two openings with a piece of colored glass, say green, you will have a tricolored star, with the points alternately red and green and the center white.

The piece of colored glass may be replaced by a wineglass containing any colored liquid, and the points of the star will then show alternately the color of the liquid and its complimentary hue. Some very pretty effects may thus be produced.

SAP OF THE SUGAR MAPLE.

How the Sweet Liquid Is Stored In the Tree—Warmth Makes It Flow.

There is much difference of opinion as to where the sap in a sugar tree comes from. It does not come from the ground by the roots, but is in the tree and has been all winter in the form of starch deposited in the cells of the soft wood under the bark. When the weather becomes warm enough in the spring to set in action the vital processes of the tree, this starch is changed into sugar and the cells become so full of the sweet sap as to exert a great pressure on them. The warmth of the spring sun starts this vital action, and the sap circulates through the cells on the way to the buds, which soon swell out and burst into leaf. When the tree is tapped by the sugar maker, the pressure of the sap on the cells forces it out of the opening made. There is no special current up from the roots or down to them; the tree is simply filled with sap all through the soft wood and mostly at that part of it immediately under the bark. Here new wood is formed of the matter held in solution in the sap.

The sap will flow while the ground is still frozen, for it is warmth in the air that causes the flow and not the action of the roots in the soil. Therefore it is quite useless, as some people do, to spread any little or other nonconducting matter under the tree for the purpose of keeping the ground frozen to delay the budding. If this effect be desired, the whole tree must be covered in and kept in a dormant condition by a low temperature all over.—Chicago News.

Victoria's Crown.

The lightest of European crowns is the state crown of Great Britain, which was made for Queen Victoria. Although it weighs only two pounds and seven ounces, its value is $1,500,000. One enormous sapphire came from the signet of Edward the Confessor.

A Princess of Six.

For a night, for a day,
In a land far away,
Ruled a sweet little princess of six.
What she did in those hours
In her faraway bowers
Who can say unless maybe 'twas tricks!

There is one thing she did
That can never be hid—
She mixed mustard with sugar and spice
When her subjects so gay
Came to dine on that day.
They made faces that weren't very nice.

Then she went out to walk
With a doll that could talk,
And the doll talked so loud and so long
That the sweet little maid
Said, "I'm very much 'fraid
There is something inside you that's wrong."

Then she pulled pussy's tail,
And poor puss gave a wail
And scratched her a scratchety scratch.
If you don't believe me
You can go there and see
Through the little red door with the latch
—Washington Star.

LOVE ADDED A GROUP.

How Pitcairn Island Became a British Possession.

There recently died in a London workhouse infirmary, poor and forgotten, a man whose one-time attachment to a young and high-spirited girl had the result of adding a whole group of islands to the British Empire.

John Strachan, the individual in question, was one of the pioneer Australian gold-miners, and having "made his pile" he went to Melbourne—as was the well-nigh universal practice amongst the "diggers" in those days—in order to spend it. There he fell in love with Lily Ambrose, the pretty daughter of a well-to-do innkeeper. He would have married her forthwith, but her parents objected, whereupon he and she set sail for the Southern Seas in a forty-foot cutter, and eventually settled on what is now known as Marion Island.

Constituted "Effective Occupation."

Here they lived many years and begot sons and daughters, and this was held to constitute "effective occupation," when, some time afterwards, the question of the ownership of the Crozet and adjacent groups (to one of which Marion Island belongs) was raised in a semi-acute form between the Governments of France and Britain.

Pitcairn Island became an appanage of the British Crown after a somewhat similar fashion. One John Adams, a mutinous sailor belonging to the Bounty man-of-war, ran away from Tahiti with the wife of a local chief, and others of his messmates followed his example. Together they sailed into the unknown, until they sighted "an island mountain that rose like a great sugar-loaf out of the sea," and thereon they settled, burning their ship after having looted her of all available stores. The mutineers remained unknown in England until 1814, when the island was accidentally rediscovered. The Union Jack was then hoisted, but it was not until 1839 that Pitcairn was formally annexed.

KING EDWARD A BARGAIN.

British Monarchy Maintained by Revenue From Nation's Land.

Prof. Masterman, of Birmingham, has pointed out that we get our monarch at considerably under cost price.

About a hundred years ago, the Crown lands, which then formed the chief source of revenue, were taken over by the nation, and they now bring in rather more than it costs the country to maintain the monarchy.

As to the curious maxim in English law that "the King can do no wrong," Prof. Masterman explains that this means that the law courts can take no cognizance of what the King does, but politically every action of the King must be sanctioned by some person who can do wrong, and who can be punished for doing wrong. The King has to act through certain definite channels, and the whole of English constitutional history lies round the contest to limit those channels.

The position of the English King of to-day differs from that of the past in the substitution of influence for authority.

Devil Bird of Ceylon.

Most people who have visited the Island of Ceylon and penetrated into the jungle fastnesses, have heard the cry of the devil bird. This awe-inspiring sound resembles nothing so much as the screams of a human being undergoing the most terrible torture. Naturalists have identified it with the brown wood owl found in Hindustan.

But the devil bird, or ulama, as the Cingalese call it, is an elusive creature, and no one has had the good fortune to kill or catch a specimen. The Cingalese—naturally a superstitious race—regard the cry of this bird with the utmost horror; they believe that its scream heard at night presages the most dire misfortune, and they are in the habit of offering sacrifices to avert the approaching disaster.

Mr. Milford, of the Ceylon civil service, studied the mysterious bird with great interest. "Its ordinary note," he writes, "is a magnificent, clear shout, like that of a human being, which can be heard at a great distance, and has a fine effect in the silence of the closing night. But the sounds which have earned for it its bad name, and which I have heard but once to perfection, are indescribable, the most appalling that can be imagined, and scarcely to be heard without shuddering. I can only compare it to a boy in torture, whose screams are being stopped by being strangled."

Find of Rare Diamonds.

Extraordinary fine diamonds have been discovered in a new mine in the Orange River Colony, South Africa, within the last few weeks. Experts are astonished and delighted at the quality and purity of the stones. The mine in question is called the Robert Victor Mine, and is situated at Boshoff, a few miles across the border from Kimberley. It is only a comparatively small property, less in extent than any of the known mines comprising the DeBeers group. But the stones are not only of quite superfine quality, equally the best Brazilian diamonds, and far better than anything hitherto found in South Africa, but they are also very plentiful. The DeBeers average is roughly a quarter of a carat per load. The average of the Premier, in the Transvaal, near Pretoria, is about a third of a carat per load, but the Robert Victor is said to work out at nearly three-quarters of a carat per load—an extraordinary and hitherto unattained result.

Australia and Canada.

"When one compares what Australia is doing with the remarkable record of Canada, the Australian accomplishment seems puny enough. Canada accommodated 100,000 new-comers last year, and is now offering work to men, 10,000 at a time, for railway construction and similar purposes. Where Australia must insist on conditions, Canada invites the healthy white practically without reservation."

HUMOR

THEY MEANT WELL.

But He Was Not at All Offended at What Was Told Him.

"Say, old man, I don't want to butt in or poke my nose into other people's affairs or anything like that, but there's something I feel it my duty to tell you. I hope you'll not be offended at what I say, for I assure you that I speak as a friend. You are a very busy man, and you find it necessary to be out of town a good deal, so, of course, you can't be blamed for not seeing some things that other people have noticed, and, as I said before, I hope you won't think I am unduly meddlesome or"—

"For heaven's sake, what is it? Speak out."

"Well, the truth is that—now, I want you to fully understand that I am urged only by the purest motives to say this—the truth is that something has been going on for several weeks past that has worried your friends a good deal and that they think you ought to know. I can understand why you haven't noticed it yourself, and if I were in your place and any one came to me and said what I am about to say to you I'd be likely to get excited and perhaps cause trouble, but I hope you'll be calm and remember that it is only the feeling of friendship I have for you that urges me to"—

"Say, if you don't speak out I'll—I'll"—

"Now, don't get excited. That's just what I've been trying to keep you from doing. To come out plainly, old man, your wife has been seen in company with young Woodson a good deal lately. He's been taking her to matinees, to lunches and to"—

"Oh, ha, ha, ha! Is that all? He's half crazy about our daughter and thinks it is necessary to get solid with her mother in order to become a member of the family."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Candidate's Device.

A candidate for a provincial town council could neither compose a speech nor deliver one if composed for him, but he was a shrewd fellow and got rid of his difficulties, the local newspaper states, in an ingenious way. He bought a ready made speech for 2s. 6d. and then hired a gang of men to interrupt his meeting. As soon as the reading of the speech began the hired "taxpayers" became unruly. The speaker did not persist in the attempt to deliver the speech. He handed the manuscript to a friendly reporter, and the speech of Mr. —— at such and such a meeting was duly placed before the electorate.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Bright Side.

"Oh, this poverty!" wept the beautiful wife when her shifty eyed husband came home. "The gas and electric companies have shut off their service because you have not paid their bills."

"Well, we can use candles," consoled the husband.

"And the telephone company has disconnected our instrument because we owe it two months' rental."

"So much the better. If any one tries to ring us up to spend the evening with us, they will think we are not at home."—Judge.

View Masculine.

"My sympathy," remarked Mrs. Shopperton, who had been reading a heavy magazine article, "is with the downtrodden masses."

"Mine isn't," growled her husband.

"Why not?" queried the alleged better half of the matrimonial outfit.

"Because," he answered, "they ought to know better than to all try to reach the bargain counter at once."—Bohemian Magazine.

An Impressive Service at Christ Church Last Night.

IN CONNECTION WITH THE BAY OF QUINTE CLERICAL UNION—RECTOR OF PICTON PREACHED.

The proceedings of the Bay of Quinte Clerical Union, at present in session in this city, have been most satisfactory, both as regards attendance, interest manifested and results. Clergymen who have attended tell us the present session will compare very favorably with any of the previous meetings of the Union.

Yesterday afternoon's business consisted in hearing and discussing a paper read by Rev. Canon Roberts, Mus. D., on "The New Canadian Hymnal," which has been compiled by a committee, and advance copies of which have been sent out. The gist of Canon Roberts' remarks was that the work of the committee was worthy of high praise, and the new hymnal contained many admirable features, but many corrections were needed before the work was in a state of perfection.

Rev. Canon Bogert presided.

PUBLIC SERVICE AT CHRIST CHURCH LAST NIGHT.

A public service took place at Christ Church last night, under the auspices of the Bay of Quinte Clerical Union, there being a good congregation present. The rich robes of the visiting clergy, all of whom were in the processional, tended to make the scene an imposing one. The choir was in fine form and goodly numbers. They repeated the anthem of Easter Sunday night, "Come, let us join our cheerful songs," the solo being beautifully taken by Miss Lucy Holton. Rev. Mr. Blagrave read the first portion of the prayers, and Rev. Canon Roberts the latter part. The first lesson was read by Rev. Rural Dean Armstrong, of Trenton, and the second by Rev. E. Costigan, of Deseronto.

Rev. W. S. Armitage, rector of Picton, preached a thoughtful and scholarly sermon from the text:

> "Awake to righteousness and sin not, for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame."

The 15th chapter of I. Corinthians, the preacher said, was the most important chapter in the Bible, outside the story of the crucifixion. Millions and millions of sad men and women had been gladdened by the glorious story told by Paul in that chapter, which told of the Resurrection. The lessons of Easter were then dwelt on by the preacher, who then took up the sentence, "Some have not the knowledge of God." The knowledge of God, he said, was the greatest boon ever vouchsafed to mankind. Wherever it was found there was light, liberty and happiness, wherever it was absent there was spiritual darkness and death. Many parts of the world are to-day without it, and modern society is, to a certain extent, without it. One of the chief things the world had to contend with to-day was agnosticism, which was becoming stronger, and which, he believed, was the chief cause for the decreased church attendance. And yet the Agnostic, while he denied himself the greatest consolation known, was upheld by the very system he sought to destroy. The church must rise in her might and meet conditions as they were. And this must be done by spreading the knowledge of God through personal example. And that personal example, he regretted to say, sadly needed freshening up. If St. Paul came back to the world to-day, after a lapse of 1900 years, he would utter the same scathing rebuke that he administered to the men of Corinth: "Some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame." And this in spite of the enlightenment and advantages of to-day. What was needed was another Pentecost, a baptism of the spirit, and the preacher concluded by praying that it might come speedily.

RURI-DECANAL CHAPTER.

The Ruri-Decanal Chapter of Hastings held its closing sessions in Christ Church yesterday morning. The apportionment of assessments for general missions took up considerable time, after which some matters of diocesan importance were discussed.

A hearty vote of thanks was passed to Mrs. Beamish and other ladies, who had entertained the members of the Chapter.

The members of the Chapter were pleased to have with them the Rev. Mr. Wilson, who was invited to a seat on the floor of the House.

Still No Verdict In Thaw Murder Trial.

AFTER 18 HOURS JURY WERE UNABLE TO REACH AN AGREEMENT.

New York, April 11.—(Special)—After deliberating for more than 18 hours without being able to reach an agreement, the Thaw jury reported before Justice Fitzgerald at 11 a.m. to-day, and asked permission to examine many of the exhibits introduced during the trial, and also asked to have read to them the testimony of several of the eye-witnesses to the tragedy.

Among the exhibits were the letters which Harry Thaw wrote to Attorney Longfellow, and the codicil which Thaw executed on April 4, 1905.

The jury also asked for the diagram of Madison Square roof garden, as it was the night Thaw killed White.

Mr. Thos. Morrison, of Bancroft was in the city to-day.

Miss Frank Wilson, of this office, is confined to the house by illness.

Miss Maud Fleming has returned to the city after visiting friends in Lindsay for a week.

Mr. Geo. Holmes returned to Toronto to-day after having spent several days in the city.

Mr. Richard Ponton has returned to Upper Canada College, Toronto, after spending the Easter holidays here.

Mrs. J. J. Courtney, of Gananoque, and Mrs. A. Stoliker and daughter, Miss Mildred, of Friday Harbor, Wash., are visiting at Mrs. M. Murphy's, Bettes street.

Old Resident Buried

The remains of the late Mr. Donald Graham were interred in the cemetery here this afternoon, and many citizens were in attendance at the obsequies. Services were held at the house, conducted by the Rev. A. H. Drumm, pastor of John St. Presbyterian church. The bearers were: Messrs. C. M. Stork, J. P. Thomas, W. Webster, G. F. Thompson, J. Taylor and W. S. Cook.

Fifteen Lives Were Lost In This Wreck

FATALITIES IN THE CHAPLEAU WRECK WERE MOSTLY AMONG ENGLISH IMMIGRANTS — NEARLY ALL WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Montreal, April 11.—According to an official statement issued by the C.P.R., fifteen lives were lost in the disaster to the C.P.R. west-bound express yesterday near Chapleau, nine adults and six children.

Most of the dead were from England, and are believed to have been occupants of the tourist car.

The train, it is stated, was running at the usual rate of speed, when about 25 miles west of Chapleau it was partly derailed by a broken rail.

Five cars ran down an embankment and caught fire, it is said, from the cooking range, and the dead were all either killed outright or cremated.

Women and children were the principal victims, only three men being mentioned in the list of victims.

Hockey Player on Trial For Homicide

FAMOUS CORNWALL CASE NOW BEING VENTILATED — WHAT WITNESSES SAY.

Cornwall, April 10.—The trial of Charles E. Masson, charged with manslaughter in connection with the killing of "Bud" McCourt in a Federal League hockey match here on March 6, occupied the Spring Assizes all day to-day and promised to take up most of to-morrow. The Crown subpoenaed twelve witnesses, ten of whom were heard, and of the fifteen listed by the defence only four were heard when the court adjourned. Masson was surrendered by his bondsmen to the Sheriff at the opening of the court and was placed in the box, where he entered a plea of "not guilty."

The Crown witnesses were George Airey, a former player; John Hunter, the Cornwall goalkeeper; Zion Renions and Aeneas McMillan, members of the Cornwal team; Lee McCourt, a brother of deceased player, all of whom gave positive evidence that Masson had struck McCourt on the head. Most of them also stated that at the time Masson struck him McCourt was in a mixup with Chamberlain, a member of the Ottawa team, and the defence is making as much as possible of the fact that McCourt was a much larger and stronger man than Chamberlain. Other Crown witnesses were Dr. Alguire, who dressed the wounds of Throop and McCourt, performed an operation on the latter, and also conducted the post-mortem. In the latter he was assisted by Dr. R. M. Nichol, who corroborated his report. Dr. Alguire repeated his testimony given in the preliminary examination and admitted that, judging from the external appearance, Throop's wound came from a heavier blow than McCourt's.

E. A. Pilon, the judge of play; Dr. W. D. Knight and David Small, the Cornwall umpire, also gave evidence much to the same effect as at the Coroner's inquest and the Police Court proceedings. Mr. Quinn, the referee, being ill, was unable to be present.

At 5 p.m. D. H. Preston, K. C., Napanee, the Crown prosecutor, rested his case. The first witness for the defence was P. McLaughlin, the Victoria time-keeper in the fatal game. He saw the Chamberlain-McCourt fracas at the south end of the rink, and testified that afterwards the Cornwall man pursued the Ottawan with uplifted stick and when near the timekeeper's station struck him on the head or shoulder. At this stage McLaughlin was shoved back from the fence by the crowd, and when he next got a look McMillan was lifting Masson from the ice. Alf. Young of the Victorias saw the scuffle at the south end of the rink, saw McCourt strike Throop in mid ice, and was knocked out himself. Jack Williams of the Ottawa Victorias could not throw any new light on the subject. D. H. Meikle, of Wales, saw the fight at the end of the ~~rink~~ and was positive that Chamberlain struck McCourt on the head. McCourt had afterwards pursued Chamberlain to the centre of the ice, where the fatal mix-up took place.

The court adjourned till 9.30 to-morrow, Masson giving bonds for his reappearance.

INSUFFICIENCY OF THE OCULAR MUSCLES.
In many cases the problem of eye-strain, like that of heart-strain, is an individual muscular problem, and the determination of the exact point where the physiological merges into the pathological (the healthy into the unhealthy) depends not only on a proper estimate of optical defects, and individual capacity for compensation, but also a careful consideration of a number of variable factors, such as age, general health and conditions under which the eyes are habitually used. But while the heart muscle has its regular intervals of complete rest, the eye muscles, in many varieties of error and in many occupations, are kept continuously on the stretch for hours at a time without relaxation of any kind. Consequently the ocular compensation often breaks down, entailing not only failure of sight, but in many cases very serious results to other organs. Do not wait for this condition. Consultation free.

MR. FOSTER EXPLAINS

Attacks Insurance Commission in the House of Commons.

Charges That Report Is Unfair and Biased by Party Feeling — Had Made No Illegal Investments—Minister of Justice Makes Reply—Defends Commissioners—Mr. Borden's Criticism—Cost of Enquiry.

Ottawa, April 11.—The long-looked-for debate on the report of the Insurance Commission was begun yesterday afternoon, and up to midnight had been marked by three of the most engrossing speeches heard for many a day.

Mr. Foster led off with an address of two and one-quarter hours' duration. The Minister of Justice spoke for nearly three hours from a brief so carefully prepared that he rarely referred to notes, and traversed the entire scope of the report, dealing, of course, with the places which Mr. Foster had not touched upon at all. Indeed, the similarity between the tone of his speech and the texture of the report was a subject of significant comment by the leader of the Opposition, who replied, and who succeeded for one thing in completely demolishing the halo of impartiality with which the Minister of Justice skilfully decorated the commission.

Cost of Commission.

The House was moved into committee of supply by the Minister of Finance, who asked attention to an item of $75,000 for expenses of the Royal Commission on Insurance. The total cost of the commission would be $105,000. The three commissioners each received $30 a day and expenses and the secretary $15. As for the legal expenses Mr. Shepley was to receive $100 per day and expenses, with such general fee as might be commensurate. Mr. Tilley, the junior counsel, was to receive $50 a day and expenses. So far Mr. Shepley had received $8,000 and Mr. Tilley $4,000. The chief actuary got $50 a day and his two assistants $20 a day each and expenses. For stenographic work $8,955 had been paid.

Mr. Foster's Protest.

Mr. Foster arose amidst Opposition cheers and began by regretting the necessity of bringing before the House matters which were entirely personal. Mr. Foster did not think that the commission was appointed to do aught than investigate insurance in Canada, but it was not long before some people had thought it afforded machinery by which a political opponent might be broken and a party advantage gained. Not only had the commission overstepped the bounds of its jurisdiction, but he, as well as others who appeared before it, were denied the common right of being informed of the accusations and denied the protection of counsel to cross-examine and bring out rebuttal evidence.

One charge was that Mr. Foster had diverted and squandered the trust money of the I. O. F. by investment. The total surplus of the Foresters, about five and a quarter millions, were handled and invested before he came on the scene and less than five millions had to be invested after. The report of the commission would show what had become of part of the surplus, but not all of it, because it seemed that this commission was very careful not to look after the investment of large portions of that surplus, invested before Mr. Foster came into the Union Trust.

Mr. Foster challenged any other trust company to show better results than the Union during his term of management, and every investment had been made in securities allowed by law.

Will Fight to the Last.

In conclusion, Mr. Foster said: "Have I not the right to say to this House that it is an outrage that such a report should be put in the permanent records of this country. Have I not the right to ask this House, in common honesty to me, that it order this report back to the commission for amendment—for erasures are necessary for statements in full where partial and concealed statements are given, for a plain statement one way or the other, instead of an insinuation. What right has this House to ask that the public money of this country shall be voted to brand me as a common grafter for eternity? I will fight it until I die. I shall protest against it as long as there is breath in my body, and I shall consider it a most damnable wrong against myself and the rights of common humanity that such a course of procedure should be carried out."

Mr. Aylesworth's Reply.

Hon. Mr. Aylesworth replied that he resented Mr. Foster's imputation that the commission was more or less animated by a desire in its investigation of the I. O. F. to secure political advantage over that honorable gentleman. The commissioners were men of standing in the country.

Dealing with the I. O. F., Mr. Aylesworth said it was necessary to go more fully into it than other mutual societies, because it was the most important of all. As to the Union Trust, the money invested by it consisted of $499 of Foresters' money for every dollar put in by the syndicate, and it was money contributed by people who could ill afford to lose it, and it was therefore incumbent on the commission to enquire into the affairs of the trust company.

Mr. Aylesworth was severe in his condemnation of the three directors—Foster, MacGillivray and Wilson—for having borrowed money as directors from the Union Trust to buy lands. They were in a majority at the meeting, at which the 337 1-2 shares, originally intended for the Union Trust, was diverted to the benefit of themselves.

Mr. Aylesworth said he had endeavored to deal fairly with the facts, set down naught in malice.

A Prepared Attack.

Borden declared that, after listening to Mr. Aylesworth's speech, the House did not know otherwise, might think he had drafted the report himself. Here was the Minister of Justice, with a carefully prepared brief, wherewith not so much to defend the commission as to attack Mr. Foster. That brief contained a reference to a matter, the last mentioned by him, to which Mr. Foster had not alluded, showing the carefully prepared nature of his attack, and yet he had the audacity to claim sincerity and moderation for his speech.

Mr. Borden scored the Minister for having contrasted the investments of the Union Trust with the embezzlements of the general manager of the Ontario Bank, pointing out to him that Mr. Foster had challenged any man to point to one investment not made according to law.

W. H. Bennett devoted considerable energy and eloquence to Judge MacTavish, dealing especially with his honor's record on the West Elgin commission. He concluded by declaring that Mr. Foster, by his manly and straightforward speech, had enshrined himself in the hearts of the Opposition and contrasted Mr. Foster's humble financial position with that of Liberal Ministers who had gone out of the Cabinet with a million.

The House rose at midnight and Mr. E. Guss Porter will probably resume the debate to-day.

CANADA'S MODEL MILITIA.

Against Feeling to Introduce Permanent Corps, Says Col. Herbert.

London, April 11.—(C. A. P.)—In the House of Commons yesterday, Col. Herbert, defending Haldane's national army scheme, said:

"We are going back, not to feudalism, but to the principles which once underlay the whole military system of this country, which still underlies the military system of the colonies. It has been said it is impossible to unite under one system all the volunteers unless we had compulsion.

"The difficulty has been got over in Canada, where each class of the community performed a training in the way best suited to their ordinary vocations.

"Many of his own predecessors in Canada urged dependence on the English principle of a permanent staff. He received the impression that it is against the feeling of the people to introduce this permanent element. He took the view that every unit should maintain itself in every particular.

"It is the only way that the esprit de corps shall be obtained. They therefore are not trying a new experiment in this bill."

NEWFOUNDLAND'S POSITION.

Sir Robert Bond's Views on Secession and Confederation.

Montreal, April 11—Sir Robert Bond, Premier of Newfoundland, left yesterday for New York, en route to the conference of Premiers in London.

"It is reported that you mean to secede unless you can carry your point, Sir Robert; is that true?" was asked.

"Secede! From what?" was the reply.

"From the Empire."

Sir Robert laughed. "You seem to want to make history rather rapidly."

Confederation with Canada was suggested.

"I have to learn," replied Sir Robert, "that Canada's rights have always been respected, as I have heard of an Alaska boundary dispute, for instance. What about the territory that was given up?"

ROYAL MEETING ENDED.

King Edward and Queen Alexandra Leave Spain.

Cartagena, April 11.—The royal meeting terminated yesterday. The British squadron escorting the royal yacht Victoria and Albert, with King Edward and Queen Alexandra on board, departed early yesterday morning, and King Alfonso and the Dowager Queen Christina later left Cartagena for Madrid.

The Kings conferred absolutely alone for over an hour previous to separating, and it is assumed they went over the question for the discussion of which the meeting was arranged.

Detroit.

Detroit took its name from the river, which was called by the French De Troit, the narrows. The settlement was originally called Fort Pontchartrain. The Indians called the locality Wawaetunong, the place of the winding river.

Mecca's Black Stone.

The Black Stone, at Mecca, is undoubtedly the oldest idol in the world. It was once white, but has been worn black by the kisses of the faithful.

On the Bias.

"What do people mean when they talk about tacking?" asked Bobby, who had listened to a detailed account of his sister's first experience in a sailboat, but in much confusion of mind.

"Oh, you'll know when you're a little bit older," said his sister, but the small round face wore an expression of injury, and she had to explain further.

"Why, it's just turning halfway round," she said, with slight hesitation, "and then—and then you sail on the bias."

Old Age and Work.

Old people make a great mistake when they give up work. Many men who have made a competency in business and feel entitled to retire from active work find themselves declining in health and becoming prematurely old for want of occupation. In most aged persons the vital functions continue in active exercise under normal conditions, but if the regularity and moderation of business life are departed from trouble will surely follow.—London Lancet.

PORT CREDIT MYSTERY

Cause of Elliott's Death Is Still Undetermined.

Jury Return An Open Verdict—No Trace of Bullet Found—Doctor Was Undecided—Might Have Been Either Murder Or Accident—Gallagher Clears Himself From Suspicion.

Port Credit, April 11.—How Edward Elliott met his death on the railway, one mile east of Port Credit, early Good Friday morning, seems likely to be recorded among the unsolved mysteries.

After hearing the evidence of Doctor Sutton, the principal witness, at the reopening of the inquest yesterday, and Harry Gallagher, the cook of the section gang, in which the dead man belonged, the jury returned an open verdict, the testimony not being sufficient to enable them to give a decision as to how deceased was killed.

Cause of Death.

Dr. Arthur Sutton stated that a clean-cut wound, running up from the base of the skull, four inches long, had caused death. He also found a punctured wound, one and a half inches deep, which might have been caused by a sharp round instrument. This hole ran to the root of the tongue. He found no trace of a bullet.

As to the wound on the head, the edges were clean-cut, with no traces of oil or gravel. The doctor could not say whether deceased was murdered or killed by a train.

Harry Gallagher cleared any doubt as to his whereabouts on the night of the 29th.

It was at first supposed that Elliott and Gallagher left the section camp at Clarkson together, but the latter left early in the morning on Thursday, while Elliott was still at work.

Elliott Was Sober.

Elliott went to Port Credit and to the Wilbur House. The bartender and the proprietor stated that six drinks had been served to him, but no flash of whiskey. To clear up any doubt, the crown attorney called John Hayes, the hostler of the hotel, who sometimes tends bar, to see if he had sold Elliott anything that day, but Hayes was not in the bar that day.

The evidence of the three showed that Elliott left comparatively sober, about 8 o'clock, and that he said he was going back to the camp.

A constable volunteered information that a person in the village had seen three men hanging around Lorne Park depot, a little west of where Elliott was found, on the night in question.

FALLING WALL HURTS FOUR.

Serious Accident at Canada Foundry—Man's Back Broken.

Toronto, April 11.—By the collapse of a wall at the Canada Foundry yesterday morning, Harry Carter, a bricklayer of Tiverton avenue, had his back broken; Alfred Carter, bricklayer of 24 Franklin street, was severely cut; J. Brown, a steamfitter, had his head cut and T. Sanderson, a painter, was lightly injured.

Three of the men were taken to St. Michael's Hospital, where their injuries were attended to. All but Harry Carter were able to go home, who, although in a critical condition, was resting easier last night.

Holtby Bros., contractors, could not give any reason for the collapse of the wall beyond the idea that the wind was high and that the dozen or so men working on the scaffold had been leaning against the structure.

CENTRAL PRISON SITE.

Government Has Closed Deal For 200 Acres Near Halfway House.

Toronto, April 11.—The new Central Prison will be on the Kingston road. It was learned yesterday that the Ontario Government had purchased 200 acres of land in the vicinity of the Half-Way House as a site for the institution.

The policy of the Government, as announced some time ago was to establish a Central prison outside the city limits, where the farm system could be introduced, and manufacturing dispensed with.

The Government, it is reported, purchased 100 acres some weeks ago and have just closed the deal for another 100 acres.

Strathcona's Guarantee.

FIRE IN DRYING KILN.

$4,000 Damage Done at Toronto Piano Factory.

Toronto, April 12.—Two hundred and fifty men were put out of work yesterday morning by a fire, which did about $4,000 damage at the Gerhard Heintzman Piano Works on Sherbourne street. The cause of the fire is unknown. Insurance fully covers the loss.

The alarm was turned in at 5.20, and the fire then had great headway in the drying kiln, which is in a building to the rear of the factory proper. The smoke was very dense, and the firemen had a hard task for three hours. Valuable woods were destroyed.

Make Ministers Tremble.

Paris, April 12.—The national council of the Socialist party has issued a spirited address to the workmen of France protesting against the attitude of the Government in the matter of unions among employes of the state.

It tells them that they clearly must organize, and thus make the Ministers and deputies "tremble before the indignation of all toilers."

Douma Member Suspended.

St. Petersburg, April 12.—M. Purishkevich, monarchist, was suspended at yesterday's sitting of the Lower House of Parliament for insulting President Golovin.

The incident arose from M. Purishkevich suddenly calling on the members to hiss as a mark of respect for the persons murdered by revolutionists.

$650,000 Fire.

Oklahoma City, Okla., April 12.—A cotton compress owned by the Trader's Compress and Warehouse Co., was burned here yesterday with an estimated loss of about $650,000, covered by insurance.

Two Peace Banquets.

New York, April 12.—Two large public banquets, instead of the dinner originally planned, it was announced yesterday, will conclude the national arbitration and peace congress, which is to meet in Carnegie Hall next Sunday.

Besides the president, Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada; Ambassador Bryce, President Elliott of Harvard, Samuel Connors, Edward Everett Hale, Lyman Abbott and others will address the auditors.

Gives $150,000 to McGill.

Montreal, April 12.—Through the will of the late Mrs. Peter Redpath, which was probated Wednesday at Somerset House, England, McGill University benefits to the extent of $150,000, which is to be applied to the maintenance of the library and the Peter Redpath Museum.

Another important bequest is that of $40,000 to the Montreal General Hospital.

Jury Disagreed.

Syracuse, N.Y., April 12.—The jury in the United States court in the case of the Government against the New York Central Railroad, charged with giving rebates to the General Electric Co. at Schnectady, reported yesterday afternoon that it could not agree and was discharged.

To Auburn For Life.

Rochester, April 12.—Fred Schultz, convicted of murder, in second degree, for the killing of Edward Pullman of Sodus, yesterday morning, was sentenced to Auburn Prison for the rest of his life.

Found Dead on Road.

Port Hope, April 12.—Sylvester Dawley, aged 65, a farmer of Hamilton Township, was found dead on the side of the road at 6 o'clock.

Jurors Still Locked Up.

Men Who Are to Decide Thaw's Fate Acting Slowly.

Have Already Been Out Thirty-Six Hours—Jurymen Ask Many Questions—Sifting the Evidence—Appear to Be Shutting Out the Unwritten Law From Their Minds--Many Rumors, None Authentic

New York, April 12.—Thirty hours of deliberation have brought the jury in the Thaw case to no conclusion, and at 11 o'clock they were locked up for the night.

Twice yesterday the twelve men who took their places in the jury box more than two months and a half ago, filed into the court-room and asked the assistance of the court in an endeavor to bring about an agreement.

They appeared wan and haggard after wrangling through all of Wednesday night in the stuffy little conference room at the criminal courts building, with only hard chairs and one long table provided for their comfort.

Went Over the Evidence.

The jurors wanted to hear again the evidence of numerous eye-witnesses to the tragedy; they wanted to hear again what Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton was allowed to testify as to Thaw's condition the night of the tragedy; they wanted to hear again what Evelyn Nesbit Thaw said as to her husband's conduct that evening; they wanted to hear again the conversations Thaw had with James Clinch Smith just before he committed the homicide; they wanted to hear against several portions of Justice Fitzgerald's charge, and finally they wanted permission to take all the writings of Thaw which were introduced into the trial as indicative of the defendant's state of mind when he heard the story of Evelyn Nesbit's alleged wrongs at the hands of White.

Judge Utters Warning.

All of these requests were gladly granted by the court, but when Foreman Doming B. Smith asked that certain portions of the summing up address by Delphin M. Delmas be read, Justice Fitzgerald called a halt. He admonished the jurors that they were to be guided only by the evidence, and were not privileged to hear again the closing speeches of the lawyers.

There were all sorts of rumors and guesses yesterday as to how the jury stood. None of the reports had any degrees of authenticity.

It seemed evident that the jury's deliberations were hinging upon the question of sanity or insanity of the defendant as shown by the defence.

From the manner in which the jurors wished to go over the evidence in all its details, it was surmised that a verdict, if reached at all, would be predicated entirely upon the evidence and not upon the unwritten law.

THE HOCKEY FATALITY.

Cornwall Jury Acquit Masson on a Charge of Manslaughter.

Cornwall, April 12.—Chas. T. Masson of Ottawa, charged with manslaughter for the killing of Bud McCourt in a hockey match here on March 6, was acquitted yesterday, the jury bringing in a verdict of "not guilty."

The evidence for the defence included some ten witnesses, most of whom testified that Chamberlain struck McCourt at the south end of the rink previous to the mix-up, which was generally believed to have resulted in McCourt's death.

The jury was out only 15 minutes.

The general feeling in Cornwall last night is rather one of regret than elation. There was no venom in the prosecution, but the people think that something should be done to purge lacrosse and hockey of the man-killing element.

WOMAN GETS TWO YEARS.

Mrs. Bates Sentenced for Attempting to Kill Her Children.

Woodstock, April 12.—At the Assize Court yesterday, Mrs. William Bates, an elderly woman employed as a laundress about the city, received her trial on the charge of assaulting, with intent to kill, her two children, Hattie, aged 25 years, and her son, under 20.

The evidence went to show that the woman rose in the night while the two children were sleeping and attacked them with a hatchet.

No defence was offered, and the woman was sentenced to two years in Kingston Penitentiary.

Lord Cromer Resigns.

London, April 12.—Foreign Secretary Grey announced in the House of Commons yesterday that Lord Cromer, the British agent and Consul-General in Egypt, has resigned his post for reasons of ill-health, and Sir Eldon Gorst had been appointed to succeed him.

In making the announcement of Lord Cromer's resignation the Foreign Secretary eulogized Lord Cromer's services, and said his policy would be continued.

MR. FOWLER CONTINUES.

Insurance Commission Again Severely Attacked in House of Commons.

Ottawa, April 12.—Mr. Fowler resumed his speech on the Insurance Commission in the House yesterday and denounced the attempt of the commission to besmirch the honored and respected leader of the Opposition. Then he proceeded to tell his story. He and his friends had bought lands in the open market, and nobody had been able to show anything wrong with the purchase. When he was summoned before the commission he could not imagine what he had to do with insurance.

He went before the commission and saw on the bench two men who seemed to have passed the border-land between manhood and dotage, and between them a younger man, the professional hired commissioner ready to sign anything prepared for him.

Mr. Fowler alluded to the charge that he and his friends had withheld some lands from the tract sold to the Great Northwest Land Co., and proved its falsity. Yet the insurance report made it appear that there had been deception. The report represented him as being the agent of the Union Trust Company in the Kamloops purchase and therefore not entitled to profit. He was not the agent, but the vendor. The report said that the expense of examining and reporting upon the property was paid by the Union Trust. That was false. He himself had paid every cent of it. The Kamloops property, with the Okanagan exchange thrown in, could not be had to-day for a million dollars. But the company sold out in a hurry, scared by this royal commission.

The deal had given a large profit to the I. O. F., but Mr. Aylesworth had said, what if they had lost, and forthwith the Minister proceeded to make most unworthy comparisons.

Hot Shot.

Mr. Fowler went on to say that he believed Mr. Shepley wrote the whole report himself, acting under instructions, and the commissioner merely signed it. If the bills had to be paid at least two-thirds of the sum should be paid out of the Grit corruption funds. (Cheers.)

For the Policyholders.

"For two days," said W. F. Maclean, addressing the House last night, "this committee has been largely occupied in discussing the political, personal and partisan side of this insurance report. While I do not wish for the present to discuss that, I do intend to ask the indulgence of the committee while I look at the evidence and the finding from the view of the policyholders who have a hundred million dollars of their hard-earned savings in the hands of these insurance companies."

The policyholder was an important factor in the country, and was going to judge this case from the point of view of his savings and how the members of Parliament were handling his money. There was in connection with the finding of the commission an arraignment of the Insurance Department of this country and also an arrangement of the Finance Department which has charge of administration of insurance laws. There was furthermore an imperative call to this Parliament for legislation in connection with the great subject of life insurance.

Mr. Fielding said in reply to Mr. Maclean that he had already announced there could be no insurance legislation until next session. The Finance Minister also defended the officials of the insurance commission as honest and capable men, to which Mr. Maclean answered that they certainly did not make a creditable showing before the commission.

CHRISTENING LOSES FRIENDS.

Prince Victor Napoleon Not So Popular in France.

Paris, April 12.—The Figaro yesterday morning publishes a letter written by Mgr. Montagnini to Cardinal Merry Del Val, the papal secretary of state, informing him that Prince Victor Napoleon (the hope of the French Royalists) had lost many adherents in France by attending the christening of the Crown Prince of Italy, but that he was forced to do so by the threats of the Italian royal family.

Mgr. Montagnini wrote also that he had learned that English and American Protestants were collecting large sums of money for the purpose of buying or renting churches in France as soon as the Catholics were turned out of them.

Why don't the members of the Board of Trade get round in time to start the meetings at a reasonable hour? Every meeting night, nearly, it is nearer 9 than 8 when business begins, and this makes it nearly 11—or even later—before the tired talkers—and listeners—hit the granolithic for home. It may be all right for those boisterous people who think, with Tom Moore, that

The word paranoia has been much discussed lately, and many have enquired as to its exact definition. Here is about the best we have seen, which is taken from the Boston Herald:

"The ordinary dictionaries do not define it, and authorities on psychiatry are not specific in their definitions thereof. They each use the term in a different sense. The most commonly accepted interpretation of it is a delusional mental state induced by chronic intoxications, notably with alcohol, morphine and cocaine poisoning. Its best known manifestations are the chronic illusional insanities made classic in regicides, insane religious leaders and litigous and erotic individuals."

There is undoubtedly considerable force in the remarks of Mr. W. B. Deacon, made at at the Board of Trade meeting last night. Cheap power is very desirable, but cheap freight rates are quite as much so. A manufacturer must be able to move his goods, after they are made, at reasonable rates, or he may find it will pay him better to quit making them.

No sadder story than that of the Chapleau railroad wreck has appeared in print for many years. Immigrants, women and children, strangers in a strange land, mangled in a wreck and afterwards burned alive. O, the pity of it! When will these awful tales of railway horrors come to an end?

Masonic "At Home"

ENJOYABLE GATHERING LAST NIGHT—PAST MASTERS' JEWELS PRESENTED TO NINETEEN MEMBERS.

The "At Home" given by the Belleville Lodge of Free Masons in the Masonic Temple last evening, was a very enjoyable affair. About 200 were present, among whom were seven D.D.G.M.'s of Prince Edward District. No. 13.

Rt. Wor. Bro. F. L. Webb, D.D. G.M., was present, and was, on being introduced by V. Wor. Bro. Thomas and Rt. Wor. Bro. Pringle, given a hearty welcome by the W. M., to which he replied in a very happy manner.

The W.M., L. Stewart, in his usual pleasant way, welcomed the ladies, and then proceeded with the programme of the evening.

The leading feature of the evening was the presentation of Past Masters' jewels to the nineteen Past Masters of the Lodge, for faithful services rendered to the Lodge through many years.

The P.M.'s whose services had never been recognized, and to whom jewels were presented were:

W. Bro. J. McKeown.
W. Bro. Geo. H. Pope.
W. Bro. D. McLean.
W. Bro. J. P. Thomas.
V. Wor. Bro. J. Macoun.
V. Wor. Bro. W. McKeown.
W. Bro. R. E. Clarke.
W. Bro. A. Wensley.
W. Bro. W. Alford.
W. Bro. J. E. Walmsley.
Rt. W. Bro. W. N. Ponton.
W. Bro. A. E. Lewis.
W. Bro. J. W. Johnson.
W. Bro. J. S. McKeown.
W. Bro. D. Barragar.
W. Bro. A. McGie.
W. Bro. E. Naylor.
W. Bro. J. S. Peck.
W. Bro. S. A. Gardner.

Rt. Wor. Bro. W. Webb made the presentations, and Wor. Bro. J. W. Johnson replied on behalf of the recipients.

Mrs. (Col.) Campbell then contributed a piano solo, which was much enjoyed.

Mrs. Wilmot, Mrs. Ransford and Messrs. S. R. Burrows and F. W. Sprague contributed songs, and all were forced to respond to encores. It is unnecessary to make any laudatory remarks in regard to the above singers. Anyone who has ever listened to them will know what an enjoyable treat it was.

After some little time had been spent in social intercourse, refreshments were served and the happy gathering broke up about 11.30 by singing the National Anthem.

Jury Disagree.

New York, April 12, 4 p.m. — (Special.)—Jury in Thaw case has discharged.

B. of Q. Clerical Union

The annual session of the Bay of Quinte Clerical Union, which began in this city on Wednesday, came to an end yesterday afternoon. The business of the afternoon centred in a paper on "Patronage," read by Rev. Canon Bogert. The paper was really in relation to the system of appointments of rectors to parishes. Bishop Mills, it seems, has introduced the practise of having the members of a vacant parish present two names to the Bishop, who can then use his discretion as to appointing either of them. Rev. Canon Bogert's paper contended, and the view was unanimously concurred in by the members of the Bay of Quinte Clerical Union, that the power and responsibility of appointment should rest entirely with the Bishop, who was given authority from above for that purpose. The members of the B. of Q. Clerical Union thought it might be well for the Bishop, if he so chose, to confer with any parish which was vacant, but was entirely unanimous in the opinion that no parish should have any voice in the selection of its minister. That power, they thought should rest with the Bishop.

The proceedings of the Union throughout have been of a most harmonious and interesting character, and no pains have been spared by the local clergy or laymen to provide for the comfort of their guests.

Most of the out of town delegates went home last night, though some waited over till to-day.

Annual Meeting of Officers of 49th.

It has been the custom for some years for the officers of the 49th Hastings Rifles to meet in conference and discuss matters relating to the regiment, with the object of systematizing the routine and making arrangements by which camp life becomes a most pleasurable as well as profitable outing. The meeting this year was held at Trenton, and was attended by Lt.-Col. J. R. Orr, Major H. H. Alger, Major T. H. McKee, Capt W. G. Ketcheson, Capt. C. A. Bleecker Capt. W. H. Ketcheson, Capt. A. E. Bywater, Lt. G. A. Keith, Lt. A. Nugent, Lt. J. Spurr, Lt. J. L. McLean, and Lt. W. Howson.

Communications were received from several other officers who were compelled to be absent, expressing their regret and laying before the conference matters of general interest that had come under their notice during the past year.

Great pleasure was felt by all when it became known as a certainty that Col. Orr would be in command of his Regiment at camp, as there had been some apprehension that he might be physically unable to attend to his duties.

The ordinary routine of appointing committees being completed the discussion of financial statement followed and pleasure was expressed at the excellent condition of affairs.

In the evening the officers were entertained at the home of Capt. A. E. Bywater, where a most sumptuous dinner was served, after which the usual toasts were proposed and honored. The Trenton brass band serenaded the house with stirring martial airs much to the pleasure of all assembled.

The regiment will be marched into camp at Kingston on June 17th, headed by two bands, and every arrangement is being made for the comfort and pleasure of the men.

Eye Strain
CAUSES
Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

Where the People Lose.

A small but typical instance of how the public are bled by political favorites of the Dominion Government was given before the Public Accounts Committee at Ottawa last week. In the course of the enquiry into accounts, Mr. Bennett obtained from one witness a remarkable story of dredging finance. The Auditor's report (V. 249) has the following item in connection with the Matchedash Bay dredging.

"Eastwood, C. S., Inspector of dredging, August, October, 65 days at $3.00; overtime 64 hr. at 30c; boat hire, $33.33; rope, $1.50; postage, 26c—$239.29.

Regarding this little item "Inspector" Eastwood himself testified. It appears that another inspector paid by the Government was on this ground and the district engineer thought he could do all the work, and this proved a correct opinion. But Mr. Eastwood's employer, a good Liberal, who supplied provisions to the dredges, asked that his bookkeeper should have the job. Mr. Gunn, who ran against Mr. Bennett in the last election and is now a judge, used his influence, and Hyman, against his engineer's advice, appointed Eastwood at $3.00 per day.

Eastwood confessed on the stand that he remained in his previous employ and hired the other inspector to do his share of the work at $1.25 per day, Eastwood pocketing the other $1.75. Eastwood occasionally took his wife's canoe and went out to the dredge, where he obtained orders for his employer for provisions, and not satisfied with his $1.75 a day rake-off he put in a charge for boat hire. Fearing that there would be trouble if he claimed pay for the use of the family canoe he charged boat hire paid to "J. L. Hubbard," whose name is on the voucher. Mr. Hubbard explained this voucher by stating that Hubbard was his wife's maiden name.

It will be seen that Mr. Eastwood is an apt scholar in political finance. Unfortunately he has less pull than those who have obtained much larger sums of money and therefore no investigation in his case was not forbidden by the majority.

Gentle and Effective.

A well known Manitoba editor writes: "As an inside worker I find Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets invaluable for the touches of biliousness natural to sedentary life, their action being gentle and effective, clearing the digestive tract and the head." Price, 25 cents. Sample free. For sale by all Druggists.

Why do not the farmers of Ontario grow more wheat? Why do not the people of Ontario buy blended flours, containing their own home-grown wheat?

Manitoba wheat flour makes a big, strong loaf, but the bread is coarse and is neither as inviting in appearance nor pleasing in taste, as that made of a blended flour. When it comes right down to quality, blended flour makes the best bread and pastry in the world. Yet many of our own people are using Manitoba flour not aware of the facts, helping the Manitoba farmer to get richer, and driving the Ontario farmer to raising less profitable crops.

Toronto seems to be about the only place in this province that really knows the worth of blended flour. And it is largely due to the efforts of one man—George Weston, the baker—that this is the case. When Manitoba wheat flour first appeared, it became very popular because it made a big loaf. But the bread was coarse. At that time Weston was running two ovens. He thought there were enough people in Toronto who would appreciate the quantity and quality, and he determined to bake a real old-time home-made loaf, using a blended flour. When he finished his first baking, he found that the loaf was the regulation weight but smaller than a loaf made of Manitoba flour. Weston carried his bread to various grocers, asked them to offer it to their customers, and if it was not sold that he would take it back. The next day every loaf was gone, and the grocers had orders for twice as much. In a week, he had to start new ovens, and it was not long before he was selling 50,000 loaves a week. This is what blended flour did for one baker. Of course, others, seeing the success of George Weston naturally adopted blended flour. To-day, 75 per cent. of the bread baked in Toronto is made of blended flour. There is no doubt but what blended flours—milled of Ontario wheat with some Manitoba—not only make the best bread and pastry, but yield more bread, etc., to the barrel.

By using blended flours, it would create a demand for Ontario wheat, induce farmers to grow more wheat, and keep all the money spent for wheat and flour right here in Ontario, thus adding to the value of Ontario farms.

A man makes allowances for his faults, even though his wife may be one of them.

WOULD YOU EAT CORN HUSKS.

to get at the corn? Of course you would not. Then why should you take the greasy oil of the cod's liver to get the valuable medicinal elements contained therein!

The oil or grease has no medicinal virtue, but it is the medicinal elements enveloped in the oil which represent all the tonic and curative properties of cod liver oil.

In Vinol you get all of the medicinal curative elements of cod liver oil actually taken from fresh cods' livers, but no oil. The oil is thrown away for the same reason you throw away the corn husks.

Our local druggist, J. S. McKeown says: "Knowing the wonderful medicinal, curative and body-building properties of Vinol, I wish every person in Belleville who is overworked, rundown, debilitated, every old person, every weak woman, every sufferer with chronic colds, bronchitis or incipient consumption would try Vinol on our offer to return money if it fails to benefit." Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The Board meets at 7 to-night.

A new game has been fitted up in the game room.

Last evening was a red letter occasion for the Ladies' Auxiliary. The number of strips sent in thus far has realized $132.20. They had hoped to raise $200 toward the $1000 for the new building furnishings. The occasion was made very enjoyable to the large audience by a spicy programme which was opened by a splendid reading by Miss Lucy Berry. Miss Gowsell delighted all with her singing. Miss Jones rendered a well executed piano solo. Miss Saunders contributed a beautiful evangelistic solo. Mrs. Hess, who by the way is a pupil of Agnes Knox Black, of Boston, favored the audience with rural character sketches of society ways in a village, for their amusement. After Mr. Dyer's well received solos, Rev. A. M. Hubly made some very timely observations. During the programme Mr. Hess introduced the winners of the investment prizes, viz., Harry Scantlebury and Roy Cronk, who gave very interesting accounts of how they accumulated their wealth. They were each presented with a splendid camera.

The Glee Club had a fine attendance last night despite many other attractions.

HAIR WON'T FALL OUT.

If You Kill The Dandruff Germ With the New Treatment.

John N. Fuller, a well-known citizen of Colfax, Wash., says; "I had dandruff so badly that it caked on my scalp. Herpicide completely cured me." George H. McWhirk, of Walla Walla, Wash., says: "Herpicide completely cured me of a bad case of dandruff of 30 years' standing." They took the only really sensible treatment, a remedy that destroys the dandruff germ — Newbro's Herpicide. Stop dandruff, hair won't fall out, but will grow naturally, luxuriantly. Allays itching instantly and makes hair glossy and soft as silk. One bottle will convince any doubter of its merits. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. Two sizes, 50c and $1.00. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

Peterboro may have a professional hockey team next winter.

Trenton has organized a lacrosse team. When will the Bellevilles organize?

The Toronto ball team starts to travel to-day, but if it is no faster than last year's bunch it will take a mighty long time to reach home.

This is the way the staid and sensible old Montreal Witness looks at it: "It takes something more than the mere playing against a professional in hockey or lacrosse to make a professional out of an amateur even though the C.A.A.U. may black-list him. So long as an athlete, be he runner, oarsman, hockey player or what not, accepts no money for his services he is an amateur."

A deep shout, "Yer rotten," comes echoing from the principal cities of the United States, and we know that big league baseball has started with the usual salute to the umpires.

We have received a copy of the 1907 Booklet of the New Brunswick Tourist Association, which shows that, in that province is found an ideal resort for the sportsman and tourist, there being unparalleled opportunities for fishing and hunting.

Baseball results yesterday: National league — Chicago 6, St. Louis 1; Cincinnati 4, Pittsburg 3; Philadelphia 9, New York 0. American league — Detroit 2, Cleveland 0; Washington 2, New York 3; Boston 8, Philadelphia 4; St. Louis 1, Chicago 0.

MAN'S STRENGTH OF PURPOSE.

He Shows it While He is Buying for Himself.

When a man goes into a store he wants to get just what he asks for. According to his success can he judge his strength of purpose and his keenness. It is the little things that mark the man of big achievements.

According to the records of complaints received, there were nearly 9,600 men in 1906 who allowed themselves to be deceived when they wanted a pair of real Slater shoes. They got imitations. The real Slater shoe has the sign of the slate stamped on the sole, and it can be had only in stores where the "Sign of the Slate" hangs in proud prominence.

THE RAILROADS UNPREPARED.

There are bitter complaints of the inability of the American railroads to handle the freight that is pressed upon them. Railroad men have many explanations. Some of them say the engine and car works are unable to fill the orders for rolling stock that have been given them. Others talk of the need of more trackage and better terminal facilities.

It is interesting to observe that the conditions complained of by American shippers exist in other countries. They are found in England. A correspondent of the London Times says: "So inadequate are the resources of some of the English railway companies that many collieries are losing time, and steel works are being shut down in the Midlands, notwithstanding heavy order books, because the railway companies are unable to move the output from the pits or to supply the furnaces with fuel." Matters are not quite so bad as that in the United States. The officers of the overworked English roads say the locomotive plants cannot provide the additional engines that are needed.

Only a short time ago there was serious traffic congestion on the Italian roads. These roads are mostly operated by the Government, which helps to explain their inability to handle freight satisfactorily, but the French lines, which are operated by private companies, were also unable to meet the demands of the shippers.

In view of all the facts it must be admitted that the men who manage the American railroads are not the only sinners. They seem to have been to a certain extent the victims of conditions which obtain in both Europe and the United States. There as well as here there has been a rapid expansion of manufacturing energy which has suddenly outrun the carrying capacity of the railroads. That there has been great expansion in this country is proved by the increased imports of materials for use in manufacturing and by the increase in the exports of finished goods.

In a measure the American railroad men are to blame for not foreseeing the growth of manufacturing, which makes freight, and not making arrangement to take care of that freight. They ought to have seen that the productive industry of the country was under a full head of steam. But the men who control the railroad systems of England, France and Italy were blind to what the manufacturers of these countries were doing, and were taken unawares like their American brethren. Perhaps there will be more foresight hereafter on both sides of the Atlantic.—Chicago Tribune, April 1, 1907.

SEASONABLE SOUPS.

Tested Recipes For Cheap and Easily Made Soups.

Brown Broth.—Put two tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying pan, add two tablespoonfuls of chopped onions and two of chopped carrots and cook until a golden brown. Put these in a kettle with a quart of boiling water and a bay leaf and simmer fifteen minutes. Press through a sieve. While the soup is simmering put about a tablespoonful of sugar into an iron saucepan and when it browns and burns add two tablespoonfuls of chopped onions, then two or three tablespoonfuls of water. Add this to the soup, with a teaspoonful of salt and a saltspoonful of pepper. Strain the soup, return it and let settle. Add half a pint of blocks of bread that have been stirred up with beaten eggs, bring to a boil and serve with grated cheese.

Tomato Bouillon.—Use one can of tomatoes, add a pint of water, a slice of onion, a bay leaf, a little celery seed and boil rapidly for ten minutes. Press through a colander as much of the flesh as possible. Add the well beaten whites of two eggs, bring quickly to the boiling point, boil five minutes and strain through cheesecloth. The fleshy portion of the tomato that remains in the cheesecloth may be put aside for flavoring sauces. Reheat the bouillon, add a cup of whipped cream and serve at once with strips of toasted bread.

East Indian Soup.—Put into a kettle a tablespoonful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of fine chopped onions, two tablespoonfuls of grated carrots and the same of grated turnips. Stir carefully for about two minutes, add a quart of water or stock, a dash of red pepper, a little black pepper, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, a sliced apple and simmer gently for fifteen minutes. Add a teaspoonful of curry and four or five tablespoonfuls of boiled rice, which should be boiled while you are making the soup.

Quick Turkish Soup.—Stir a teaspoonful of beef extract into one quart of boiling water; add a tablespoonful of grated onion and a saltspoonful of celery seed. When this reaches the boiling point, pour it slowly over the well beaten yolks of two eggs. Have ready drained four tablespoonfuls of boiled rice; add and serve at once.
